My friend from Massachusetts seems to put his most impressive argument upon some requisition or request or order of the President argument upon some requisition or request or order of the President of the United States, when this route was interrupted by Indian hostilities or depredations, to Mr. Holladay or somebody to go on with it for the public interest. Where is the evidence of that? The President of the United States usually acts, and he ought always to act when public interests are concerned, in some authentic way, in writing, so that we can know what the President of the United States (who by the Constitution is the mere administrator of the law and not an unlimited monarch or emperor who can bind the United States to what he pleases) has undertaken to do, whether within or without his powers. I remember on a certain occasion not long ago we were told that an important step relating to a person once connected with his powers. I remember on a certain occasion not long ago we were told that an important step relating to a person once connected with the military establishment of the United States ought to be taken upon evidence that the President of the United States had said so and so orally about the verdict of a court-martial, and that others and so orally about the verdict of a court-martial, and that others said that entirely the opposite course ought to be taken because the President of the United States had said to somebody else at or about the same time quite a different thing. I wish to be excused, for one, from undertaking to do justice and to carry on government on that kind of testimony. I shall be rather reluctant to have my opinions or my actions influenced by a single hair by any oral evidence of the declarations of a President of the United States, not in writing, not communicated to the heads of any of his Departments, but only appearing in the oral testimony of no matter how high, or honorable, or respectable a person. I might from this hesitation do injustice in this case; but if you were to take a hundred cases I am quite sure that it would be doing justice in ninety-nine if I declined to be influenced in the slightest degree by that kind of means of ascertaining what has been the public act of the Chief Magistrate of the United States.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President—
Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from New York?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield for that purpose?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, sir.
Mr. THURMAN. In line 9 of the first section of the substitute offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. Kernan] I move to strike out the word "his" and insert "the," and in line 14 to strike out the word "his" and insert "the." The reason for that is that as it now stands this is an acknowledgment by Congress that there was a contract existing between Mr. Holladay and the United States.

Mr. VERNAN I recent the medification

Mr. KERNAN. I accept the modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York consents that his amendment be modified as suggested by the Senator from Ohio. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I move to add the following proviso to section 1 of the substitute:

Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as an admission that stid Holladay, either as an original party or by subrogation or assignment, had any interest in or title to any such contract, or that he has any valid or just claim, legal or equitable, against the United States.

The object of this proviso is that the court shall decide whether

The object of this proviso is that the court shall decide whether he had any such contract or not, if it go to the court.

Mr. KERNAN. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York consents to the modification, and the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, it was not my purpose to say more than a few words on the matter before the Senate; nor do I intend to make a speech now. I shall only occupy the attention of the Senate for a very few minutes and on the point precisely involved. The question pending is on the motion of the Senator from New York to send this case to the Court of Claims for adjudication. I was going to remark that I would be willing to forbear saying a New York to send this case to the Court of Claims for adjudication. I was going to remark that I would be willing to forbear saying a word if we could have a vote at once on that proposition. Before we vote, however, in justification of the course I have pursued, I desire to refresh the Senate's recollection in regard to the last time this case was before this body.

It is now nearly three years since the Committee on Claims, a very respectable body of men, nine in number, reported a bill here to send Mr. Holladay to the Court of Claims for a decision on his alleged rights. The matter was fully discussed here, and I heard the following argument on this subject, which fell with weight and strength from the distinguished Senator from Ohio, [Mr. Thurman,] the able leader of this side of the Chamber. I believed he was correct then, I believe now he was correct then. I followed his lead at that time, and I see no reason to change my course in that respect. the debate of March 11, 1878. The Senator from Ohio then said this:

The Gebate of March 11, 1876. The Schator from Onio then said this:

The Government, then, has not abrogated its contract with Mr. Holladay, but the millitary officers of the Government have directed him to carry the mail upon a different route, and for good and sufficient reasons, patriotic no doubt on his part, and well advised on the part of the Government; though whether that ought to have been done by military order instead of by a change of the contract with the Post-Office Department, a mere civilian might think was worthy of some observation. But at all events the Government did that thing. The military power told him "change your route and we will furnish you with protection upon that changed route." He did change his route. It is alleged that he did receive the protection; it is alleged that he incurred more cost by it, and that he sustained losses. If this be the case, this is simply an appeal to the equity of Congress."

So I regarded it then: so I regard it now.

So I regarded it then; so I regard it now.

What has any court to do with such a question as that !-

Queried the able Senator from Ohio, and nobody answered him.

for Congress, looking at the whole subject and dealing in a spirit of equity, to determine whether or not this gentleman should be indemnified, who has patriotically, I will say, agreed to change that route, agreed to carry the mail where before he was not bound to carry it, who has incurred losses by so doing, who has not received the protection as it is said he ought to have received—whether the Government in honor and equity and good faith toward him ought not to reimburse his losses. It is a question for Congress, not a question for a court. So it seems to me; and a fortiori is it so if the Senator from Kansas is right, if there is no evidence in the wide world on this subject but these ex parts affidavits taken long ago. If the proposition is to recall those men who will not answer the call any more than "spirits from the vasty deep" would answer the Glendower's call—if that is the case, what is the use of sending this to the Court of Claims † Why not let the Committee on Claims decide what is right and report it to us and let us act!

That was language which fall with convincing prover on my ears.

That was language which fell with convincing power on my ears over two years ago, and every Senator now on this side of the Cham-[Mr. Pugh] and the Senator from Georgia on my right, [Mr. Brown.]
Mr. THURMAN. What page does the Senator read from?
Mr. VOORHEES. Page 1641 of the Congressional Record, Forty-fifth Congress, second session. I read this, I need not say, not only with respect but with reverence for the ability and leadership of the great Senator from Ohio, whose loss to this body none will deplore more sincerely than I shall, and no one will regard it as a national calamity more than I will—I desire to show that the Senato is not in a condition, without a square nullification, to say now that this case shall go to the Court of Claims at this time, and I repeat every Senator within the sound of my voice on this side except the two I have already designated was here and listened to the Senator from Ohio at that time; not one of them replied to him and every one voted upon his suggestion.

Again, on page 1643, the able and distinguished Senator from Ohio, continuing in the debate, said:

If the Senate will give me its attention for ten minutes—I do not think I shall occupy more—I flatter myself that I can show that this is no claim to go before a court.

That being true-

Continued he further down in the debate-this is simply an appeal to the justice of the Government. From what I have heard I believe there is much merit in this claim. I mean from what I have heard this afternoon, for that is all I know about it. I think from what I have heard this afternoon there is much merit in this claim, and that the Government does owe something to Mr. Holladay by way of indemnity for his losses. But I say it is an appeal to the equity of the Government, to its sense of justice, to its sense of honor, and that is a question for Congress and not for a court to decide.

Mr. CONKLING. Who said that ?
Mr. VOORHEES. The able and distinguished Senator from Ohio. I need not assure him and the Senate that I read it not to involve him in the slightest inconsistency—for I do not understand him to be an advocate now of the Court of Claims for the adjudication of this claim—but I read it to show that his powerful argument committed the Senate at that time to a line of conduct which it would stultify us all to retract at this time. But, further upon this point, the Senator from Ohio continued:

In answer to what was said by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Kirkwood,] that the Committee on Claims would have to act upon affidavits, that Senator ought to know that whenever that committee asks the Senato to give it power to send for persons and papers in any case of importance, that power is readily granted. I therefore concur with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Ingalls] in saying that the right way to deal with this subject is to take these affidavits, and if counter-proof is necessary, let the committee ask for power to send for persons and papers, or let depositions be taken under the general law of the land to be read before a committee of Congress; let that be done, and let the committee decide. Believing most firmly that this is no case for a court, I move that the bill be recommitted.

After which, Mr. Mitchell, then a Senator in this body from the State of Oregon, made a formal motion in accordance with the suggestion of the distinguished Senator from Ohio, and on that motion the action of the Senate was unanimous, that the claim be recommitted to the Committee on Claims with instructions to report what was due here for our action. The Senator from Ohio I thought was right then; I think that he was unanswerable at that time and for the reasons given by him. I followed his lead then, so did the entire Senate, and we said to Mr. Holladay and we said to the people of this country that we would settle this question ourselves. I presume if the Committee on Claims had, in their wisdom and sense of justice, reported here that there was not a dollar due to Mr. Holladay, nobody would have insisted on revising their finding by sending the case to the Court of Claims. It is because that committee happened to find that there was a considerable sum of money due to Mr. Holladay that there seems to be a reluctance to act according to what we ourselves thought.

This afternoon, with a heavy cold pressing on my chest, I do not intend to speak more than a few moments. I declare with the Senator from Ohio that this is not a case for a court; and I say to the Senator from New York, with all respect and kindness, that I do not see how he can well offer this amendment after allowing the action of the Senate to take place that did occur in 1878. If three years ago of the Senate to take place that did occur in 1878. If three years ago we had allowed this case to go to the Court of Claims, by this time Mr. Holladay would have had it adjudicated and had a decision whether anything was due; but we told him we would take it in hand and decide it ourselves. We hold it for two years, almost three years, and then I venture to say, because the finding is in his favor, we shrink from following the line we marked out. I shall not do it; I shall not be deterred from following my sense of justice, my overwhelming conviction of what ought to be done by any fear of voting for a claim. Nearly three years ago the Senate voted, under the lead of the able and distinguished Senator from Ohio, that this was not a case for the Court of Claims. We voted so unanimously, and instructed this committee of nine gentlemen of our own body to take the case and report to us what was right. They have done it. Gentlemen rise here and say they are not satisfied with the finding; that they are not satisfied with the manner of proof that was taken.

There is something, Mr President, due to a committee of this body.

There is something, Mr President, due to a committee of this body. Senators are not usually here in their callow youth; they are here men of age, they are here men of character. Senators do not arrive here without ripe mental discipline. The most of them are lawyers, and those who are not are trained men of business. Am I to be told here that the nine men on this committee, as distinguished as any men sitting here, have been overreached and scandalized and imposed upon by fraudulent and fictitious testimony? Is that the kind of a committee you have? We thought nearly three years ago that of a committee you have? We thought nearly three years ago that this committee was of a different composition; we thought it could be trusted; and we told it to take this case and bring forward a report and let us see what it was. They have done their duty, I have port and let us see what it was. They have done their duty, I have no doubt conscientiously and ably.

It is said that there are ex parte affidavits in this case. So there are; and there are twelve or fifteen witnesses who were examined orally face to face with the committee. It is not entirely resting upon ex parte testimony. If I understand what is meant by ex parte affidavits, it is affidavits taken away from the committee and filed before them. Many men were examined and cross-examined, as the report of the evidence shows, by the committee, composed of acute, conscientious men, learned in the law, and as able to cross-examine witnesses as any practitioner in the land. Is it right, then, to say that the conclusion arrived at by this careful committee is upon papers thrown inside the committee doors without examination? I apprehend not. apprehend not.

Further than that I have examined this testimony with care. Many of these men I know and know well. I could appeal to the Senators from Missouri as to who Mr. Carlyle, of Missouri, was—one of the most important witnesses in this case. I know Bela M. Hughes well. I would believe his word without oath as quick as I would any Senator's on this floor. There is not a higher type of man in this country. He makes out this case. Who is General James Craig, of Saint Jo., formerly a member of the House from Missouri? I know him well. Who is General Robert B. Mitchell? I know him well. Others that I could name have testified. But I do not intend, nor did I mark out for myself, a discussion of the facts in this case. I certainly think there is something due to a committee who, under the instructions of there is something due to a committee who, under the instructions of this body, have done their work and reported it here.

A word more upon another point, and I will not detain the Senate further. Much has been said here as to the question whether the Government was bound to give protection, and whether it had guaranteed to give protection. I was struck with the reply the Senator from Vermont made to some Senator on this side—I think the Senator from New Jersey—when inquiry was made as to what was the proof that the Government guaranteed protection. The Senator from Vermont, rising partially from his seat, said "the oath of the claimant; was that not enough?" as though that was all. Well, the claimant does swear it, and I do not know anything in the career of Mr.

ant does swear it, and I do not know anything in the career of Mr. Holladay that would justify me in saying I should not believe him under oath. I do not know of any Senator who knows anything in his career that would justify him in saying that. I am not saying that a claim ought to be allowed upon the claimant's own oath; but I have not known Mr. Holladay personally more than a year, though I have known of him ever since I was a boy, and I do not understand that he bears a reputation which would justify a person in supposing that his oath was not good on any point.

But passing that, there is another witness who stands unimpeached, Mr. Otis, who was long Mr. Holladay's superintendent; and he swears positively to the arrangement with the President. And I undertake to say to the Senate that if there was not one word of direct proof from any source, still it is proven that the Government guaranteed protection. Why? Because there are eight military officers here—I have their names; eight of them, commencing with Major-General Robert B. Mitchell, Brigadier-General James Craig, Colonel George K. Otis, and so on, down to captains and lieutenants—who swear that Robert B. Mitchell, Brigadier-General James Craig, Colonel George K. Otis, and so on, down to captains and lieutenants—who swear that they were on that line from early in 1862, when the first depredations were committed, until the close of the service in 1865, and, as General Craig swears, as General Mitchell swears, under the express and positive instructions of the Secretary of War to protect the great overland mail-route. Do you suppose the Government was doing what it had not agreed to do? Why, Mr. Holladay could not have kept a pair of mules, a wagon, or a ranche, from the early part of 1862, twenty-four hours at a time without the military. The Government thought it was important, to keep the overland mail-route open, to give it this protection; it agreed to do it, and the best proof of it is that it endeavored to do it all the time.

The Senator from Vermont, trying to escape from the effect of Colonel Chivington's order, forgot to read further than about the middle of it, and I call his attention now to the much more positive characof it, and I call his attention now to the much more positive character of that order than he gave it. Colonel Chivington says:

HEADQUARTERS DISTRICT OF COLORADO, Denver, December 2, 1864. Sir: I am directed to furnish your line complete protection against hostile Indians, which I can only do by its removal from the Platte to the Cut-off route. As it now runs, I am compelled to protect two lines instead of one.

That is as far as the Senator from Vermont went in extracting the meaning of this order. The next sentence, however, reads:

You will therefore remove your stock to the Cut-off route, which will enable me to use troops retained for an active campaign against these disturbers of public safety.

I am, sir, with respect, your obedient servant,

J. M. CHIVINGTON, Colonel, Commanding District.

If that is not a positive order to remove his stock to another route, I cannot understand the English language. I understood the Senator from Vermont-

Mr. EDMUNDS rose

Mr. EDMUNDS rose.

Mr. VOORHEES. If I misunderstood the Senator, of course I will yield for correction. I do not want to yield, however, because I do not want to take up much time. The Senator from Vermont has already occupied an hour and a half, and I do not expect to occupy one-fourth of that. I understood the Senator from Vermont to say that this was not a positive order, but something like an assertion to Mr. Holladay "I cannot protect you properly on the line where you are, but I can some place else." The concluding sentence "You will therefore remove your stock to the Cut-off route" is a peremptory order, and there is testimony in the printed book which I have in my hand showing that when that order was served on Mr. Holladay he fought and resisted and protested against the execution of it, but was fought and resisted and protested against the execution of it, but was compelled to submit.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is that in the printed evidence?

Mr. VOORHEES. I could find it, but I will not stop to find it

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to see it very much.
Mr. VOORHEES. I will show it to you.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not mean to doubt it; only I have not been able to get a copy of the report, all the copies being exhausted. should like to see it.

should like to see it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I say, therefore, Mr. President, that the guarantee of the Government cannot be more plainly proven than is the guarantee of protection by the oath of parties unimpeached to the fact, men who were there performing that duty. General Craig swears it positively and strongly. Does the Senator from Vermont want General Craig's testimony on that point? It can be found on page 53. I state broadly and squarely that there is nothing more explicitly stated in human testimony than these military officers state that they were under the instructions of the Government to protect the overland mail-route from 1862 on, and there are eight of them whose testimony is taken here.

Now, Mr. President, as to the character of the losses, I said I would not discuss them nor do I intend to do so. Every one of these military officers has sworn to the character of the losses; every one has sworn to ranches burned, horses stolen and chased away, coaches overturned and burned, and dead men and dead women along that route. I have examined this testimony from end to end. It presents a sad story of devastation, desolation, plunder, spoliation, and murder. The Government did the best it could. There is no doubt about that. It was unable to protect him fully; but that he was acting under the guarantee of protection there is no more doubt than that I am standing here.

I regret that this claim is so large as it is, because I regret that so much loss and plunder and destruction occurred, but that does not release me from my sense of obligation to do justice to an individual. The true theory of government, Mr. President, is that equal and exact justice to individuals constitutes the best government in the world; and if Senators are satisfied that this man was guaranteed protection which he did not get and suffered losses, he ought to be paid.

I desire to detain the Senate no further. I did not intend to talk this much; but the matter pressed upon me in so plain and forcible a way that I could not say less in justification of the vote I intend to

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate fifteen minutes, perhaps not ten. The Senator from Indiana does me entirely too much honor. It is true that I expressed the views I entertained on the bill which was then before the Senate in March, 1878, which was a bill referring Mr. Holladay's case to the Court of Claims, and I said then, knowing nothing whatsoever of the case except what I had heard from the debate in the Senate, never having read the testimony, never having read the report of the committee, knowing nothing whatever of the case except the statements of those who supported the bill and who were in favor of the claim, that upon their statements Mr. Holladay had no legal claim upon the United States that a court of law could take cognizance of, and that he had no equitable claim that a court of equity could take cognizance of; that if he had any equity at all it was not that kind of equity which is adjudicated upon in courts and recognized by courts, that well-defined equity which it has been said is as well defined as the law which governs the relief that is afforded by the chancellor; and therefore I said that, taking their own statements, to pass that bill and send it to the Court of Claims for them to adjudicate upon legal and equitable grounds, when Mr. Holladay, on their own statement, had no legal rights of which that court could take cognizance, had no equitable rights of which a chancellor could take cognizance, was to do nothing at all. I said that if he had any claim—and from what was urged I was inclined to believe that he had, but how far I did not know, to what amount I did not know—it was upon that broader equity which sometimes governs the action of Congress. Again and again, in view of the hardship of a case where a chancellor would have no jurisdiction at all, where a chancellor could find no equity upon which a court ported the bill and who were in favor of the claim, that upon their tion at all, where a chancellor could find no equity upon which a court of equity ever acted in the world, Congress sometimes in its discre-tion, and because the case is hard and the party is meritorious, does afford relief. Every session furnishes illustrations of this.

So it is here. Take for instance the position just announced by the Senator from Indiana. He puts Mr. Holladay's claim upon the grounds that the Government was under a guarantee to protect him. Why, Mr. President, I have seen no evidence of any such guarantee. Colonel Chivington's order only shows that he was directed by the Government to have troops on that line for the protection of the mail. For whose interest? For the interest of the Government. It was the interest of the Government that that mail should be carried. were in the midst of a war. Communication between the Government and the Pacific States was of very great importance. If the contract had said in so many words expressly that the contractor shall take all the risks of Indian depredations or destruction, nevershall take all the risks of Indian depredations or destruction, nevertheless the Government would have sent its troops there to protect that overland route in order that the mail might be carried to the Pacific coast because the interests of the Government required it. There is no guarantee, therefore; the Government has come under no such guarantee; and hence Mr. Holladay has no legal claim on the ground that the Government has not kept its guarantee; he has no equitable claim of any such character, none whatever; but yet it may be that under the peculiar circumstances of the case, if he has sustained losses in doing that which it was so much the interest of the Government should be done, it may be that administering that broader equity which is administered in this Hall sometimes in hard cases, we should afford him some relief. should afford him some relief.

That is the purport of all that I said before, and I have not a word to take back. On the contrary, I must say now that, although I moved some amendments which were accepted by the Senator from New York to his proposed substitute, amendments that I think are absolutely necessary in case that substitute should be adopted, I have not said that I shall vote for the substitute; nor do I believe that that substitute will answer the purpose, unless it is still further amended, for it is liable to the same objection as the previous bill, which proposed to send this case to the Court of Claims, was liable to, and posed to send this case to the Court of Chains, was hable to, and therefore, in my judgment, it should be further amended if the Court of Claims is to have jurisdiction of this case. Why so? Because if the substitute be adopted and the Court of Claims shall discharge its duty, as it is to be presumed it will, the very first question it must ask itself is, does this man present a legal claim against the Government? and the answer must be no. Does he present an equitable claim such as a court of equity can take cognizance of? and the answer must be no. What, then, does he present? Does he present simply that broad, general equity which rests wholly within the discretion of Congress, and is not an equity that can be adjudicated by a court at all, and therefore it must dismiss his bill if it does its duty, in my humble judgment. But I do not deny that we may make the Court of Claims a mere set of auditors; you may frame a bill which shall compel the Court of Claims to do what an auditor in chancery does, to do what your Committee on Claims does. You may do it, and if you frame your bill so as to send merely such a question to it, then that court can have jurisdiction, and can exercise it, and can act upon

Mr. President, it was not my purpose to say a word about this bill, and I should not have risen at all but for my friend reading my speech made two years ago; and though no man is allowed to be a judge in his own case, still after having heard it read in the emphatic manner it was by my eloquent friend from Indiana I am half persuaded to think it was a pretty good speech, and I am inclined to stick to it as being good sound doctrine. Nevertheless, I do not say that the substitute of the Senator from New York might not be so amended as to make it a proper bill and give the Court of Claims full amended as to make it a proper bill and give the Court of Claims full authority to decide the case. For my own part, however, I would be very glad if we could dispose of this thing. Having listened to a great deal of the argument that has been made, and having read I believe nearly every speech that has been made and that has been published, yet I cannot possibly bring my mind to the conclusion at which the Committee on Claims has arrived as to the amount of compensation. If the United States have taken any of Holladay's property that they ought to pay him for it is a proposition that needs no argument, for nobody will deny it; but that they ought to pay him for breaking up all his passenger business, for the losses of mules and horses engaged in carrying passengers and these high prices for them, and for the stations destroyed, and especially when the transfer to the other route transferred him to a route not as dangerous as that on which he was bound by the contract to carry the mail—if he had any contract at all—that these things entitle him to the prodigious sum of $526,000 I cannot bring my mind to believe. Before I can vote any such compensation to him there will have to be a wonderful state of evidence. amended as to make it a proper bill and give the Court of Claims full derful state of evidence

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President—
Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to respond to an inquiry he made of me while I was on my feet?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. VOORHEES. If the Senator from Vermont will turn to page 58 of the evidence he will find the testimony of George K. Otis, from which I will read:

Q. Have you any knowledge of the order from Colonel Chivington to remove the stage-line from the Platte route to the Cut-off route?

A. I have. I was with Mr. Holladay at the time the order was given. At the time the order was given, quite a spirited conversation was had between Colonel Chivingten and Mr. Holladay, Mr. Holladay protesting against the removal of his line; that he was entitled to protection on that line; that the expense of the removal would be enormous at that season. It was in the fall or early in the winter. Colonel Chivington, however, insisted and compelled Mr. Holladay to make the removal, threatening that if the removal was not made he would not undertake to protect the route; and as the route could not be run without protection, Mr. Holladay was compelled to make the removal.

Does not that make out the case as I stated it?
Mr. EDMUNDS. I should rather think not, with all respect to my honorable friend.

Mr. VOORHEES. My statement was that Mr. Holladay resisted the order and protested against it, and if that does not prove my statement I do not understand the English language.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I again say, Mr. President, that I should rather think not. If I correctly understand my learned and distinguished friend, his point was that Mr. Holladay was coerced like some of the people were in old times in the habeas corpus cases, coerced into takpeople were in old times in the habeas corpus cases, coerced into taking his line from one place to another. We have got the order of Colonel Chivington which he has read. We have also got the oral testimony of a person named Otis on the subject of what took place when the order was made, in which he does state that Mr. Holladay protested against the removal of his line and protested that he was entitled to protection on that line, not under the contract as is alleged, but "entitled," that is, generally, in his character as a citizen of the United States, and so he was in a certain sense. That is, he was entitled to all that the United States could do for him, and he would have been entitled, as I said before, to precisely the same thing had he been carrying on a contract for that transportation between my friend from Maine, whom I happen to see before me and use for the purpose of the illustration, and himself. What then?

Colonel Chivington, however, insisted and compelled Mr. Holladay to make the threatening that if the removal was not made he would not undertake to protect

Now if you take it all together, as a fair-minded man does, what does that amount to? It amounts even in the language of this witness, in connection with this written order, simply to the fact that Colonel Chivington being directed by his Government to protect the transportation of these mails as far as possible told Mr. Holladay, in charge of that transportation, "I cannot defend you on this route, and if you insist upon staying here I shall have to give it up, because there is another route that you can run over as well that I have got to protect also, and I cannot protect two; now you can stay at your own risk or you can go where I can give you protection." That is all it amounts to and it is exactly what the order is.

I am directed to furnish your line complete protection against hostile Indians, which I can only do by its removal from the Platte to the Cut-off route. As it now runs, I am compelled to protect two lines instead of one. You will therefore remove your stock to the Cut-off route, which will enable me to use troops retained for an active campaign against these disturbers of public safety.

I confess that I am astonished that any Senator should undertake

I confess that I am astonished that any Senator should undertake to defend this claim, or any part of it, on the ground that Mr. Holladay was the victim of military coercion. I am quite unable to see how it is possible to bear such a construction as that.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I wish to say to the Senator from Vermont that it is conceded that the route could not be run without military protection. Colonel Chivington, who was in command of that military department, said to Mr. Holladay, "Unless you remove your route I will not give you protection." That is the substance. Now, I submit that that is in very positive terms requiring him to remove his route. "You cannot run at all unless you have protection; unless you do remove it I will not give you protection."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly. "I cannot give you protection because I have two routes to protect."

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Now, is it quite fair for the Senator to say that it was entirely optional with Mr. Holladay to remain on this route or go on that route?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is entirely fair to say that it was optional. He says, "I have tried to go on this route; I am entitled to protection by the United States." The officer of the United States in charge of the protection of all these routes says, "I cannot proin charge of the protection of all these routes say, "I cannot protect you on that route, because I have not got forces enough; now, therefore, remove your business to this other line." Suppose Mr. Holladay had said, "I will not do it," what then? Does anybody suppose that the military was going to attack him and carry him off by force? No; he could stay and run his risk of the Indians. Very likely he could not have done it, but if he chose to take the alternative of trying, he did so at his own risk.

But here is a curious thing, Mr. President, a very curious thing. This order—and this alleged affidavit I suppose must refer to the same date—is dated the 2d of December, 1864. Now when you turn back to some of this other testimony, as that of Mr. Eaton, on the subject of what is supposed apparently by the committee and the promoters of this claim to be the same removal, we find that the tremendous damage, loss, &c., that is estimated at $2,000 apiece for twenty-six stations, &c., was a matter that occurred, if you believe the witnesses, in the year 1862, two years before.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. There was a removal in 1862, and that is the removal to which Mr. Eaton referred in his testimony. There was another removal in 1864, which was made under the order of Colonel Chivington. The committee did not confound one removal with the other at all.

with the other at all.

with the other at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, the testimony has been read—
Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—
Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe I am making this speech just now. The testimony which has been pressed upon us, I believe, of estimates of value, &c., has been read. As I said, I could not get one of these pamphlets of information, but I have borrowed one which is marked as if it had been commented on by somebody; and certainly if the committee report it it must be supposed to have something to do with this case, and here it is, that in 1862 the route was abandoned and was removed "to what is known now as the Bridger's Pass and Buttes Creek route," and in another place I believe it is described as "the Cherokee trail," and that the damage and expense of the abandonment of twenty-six stations, "which this affiant supposes were worth $2,000 each, and also a large amount of forage and other articles of $2,000 each, and also a large amount of forage and other articles of value, necessary in running a stage line, the amount of which this affiant can form no true estimate," &c. Then it goes on:

In addition to the losses sustained, specifically stated heretofore in this affidavit, this affint would state that the compensation received from the Post Office Department of itself was not sufficient to sustain the cost of such a line of transportation, &c.

What does the committee give us these estimates and this informa-What does the committee give us these estimates and this information for, unless they apply to something that we are called upon to decide? Now, then, they take the witnesses of 1862 apparently—and I hope the gentlemen of the committee will not suppose that I am criticising them—who testify to a removal at that time and great loss and damage accompanying it. Then in order to find a motive and a basis for a claim on account of that removal, they go forward for two years and upward to December, 1864, and then find a military order for a removal, the damage in respect to which occurred two years before. That of course would hardly stand. There must be something else about it, and so the Senator from Wisconsin—I will give him the fair benefit of his explanation—says there were two removals. else about it, and so the Senator from Wisconsin—I will give him the fair benefit of his explanation—says there were two removals. Well, if there were two removals, are we called upon to pay for both or only one, and if only one which one? I suppose from this report that we are called upon to lump the whole thing, the injury for 1862 and 1864. Am I right about it?

Mr. CAMERON of Wisconsin. The committee recommend the pay-

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The committee recommend the payment of both, but they are not lumped; they are distinct.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a mere question of arithmetic to lump them together; but we are called upon to pay for two.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. We are.
Mr. EDMUNDS. The order of Chivington therefore has nothing whatever to do with the proceedings of 1862, because this all took

Mr. EDMUNDS. We all agree to that.
Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The committee never claimed that. Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope my friend from Wisconsin does not suppose I am desirous of having any controversy with the committee. I am only trying to get such little information as may justify me in voting one way or the other about this bill, and what I say is therefore more to lead to explanations than to make a contest with anybody.

When we come to 1862 I find for my own information—and I do not ask anybody to act upon information that I get—an entry in the records of the Post-Office Department which is very much like this:

July 7, 1862-

Referring to this same route business-

Permit change of route so as to leave present road and keep along the South Platte and Cherokee Trail via Bridger's Pass, and intersect present route at Fort Bridger, shortening the distance one hundred miles.

An entry very like that, and as far as I now remember it is literally that, appears in the records of the Post-Office Department, referring, as they tell me, to this arrangement and affair, under date of 7th July, 1862, which appears to be a permission on the part of the Post-master-General to whoever was responsible for carrying on that operation to change the Sweet Water route to the Bridger's Pass route, and to make it whet convertely in referred to it has difficult of March 1981. and to make it what apparently is referred to in this affidavit of Mr. Eaton respecting the damages of 1862, because he was referring to the danger from Indians and so on.

But after having a number of the employés of said line killed and wounded by said Indians, and having over one hundred and eighty head of nules stolen and run off by said Indians, the property of said line—

And I suppose the United States is bound to guard against thieves as well as force-was compelled to abandon over five hundred miles of said road, and remove the line to what is known now as the Bridger's Pass and Buttes Creek route.

That is the statement of this witness, and as I think I said before, in the statement of some other witness, it appears here that the Cherokee Trail comes in as part of it. Now, if there is an identity between the route this witness speaks of as the one to which they were obliged to go and the one referred to in this entry in the records of the Post-Office Department, (and which undoubtedly correspondence and other memoranda there, if we could only get at them, would explain and identify and clear memorands there is the control of the control of the post-Office Department, (and which undoubtedly correspondence and other memoranda there, if we could only get at them, would explain and identify and clear memorande them.) ence and other memoranda there, if we could only get at them, would explain and identify and clear up,) what do we get? If this entry at the time in the records of the Post-Office Department of the 7th July, 1862, is true, it appears by presumption that the application was for permission and is the language of the entry a permit was granted to the contractors to leave the contract route and keep along the South Platte, and Cherokee Trail and Bridger's Pass to Fort Bridger which appears to be as I say—perhaps I am mistaken—the same route that this witness speaks of as in respect to which the removal had been so extremely detrimental to these people and which moval had been so extremely detrimental to these people, and which the committee think ought to be paid for, while the ground on which the application was granted or the effect of it, whatever construction you put on it was to make the route one hundred miles shorter than the other which the contract required.

the other which the contract required.

All that may be capable of some explanation, for, as I said before, I am not making a contest with anybody, but I am trying to say what I feel, that this case is in no condition now for the Senate to determine it finally one way or the other.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I did mean to say a word about this case; but my friend from Illinois [Mr. Davis] is so much fatigued at the prospect of my saying anything that I will yield to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKELL] to make a motion to adjourn, which he says he wants to make.

says he wants to make.

Mr. COCKRELL. Preliminary to that I ask that this resolution be passed simply calling for information; it will not delay the proceed-

Resolved. That the Postmaster-General be directed and required to furnish to the Senate as quickly as possible copies of all contracts, orders, changes, correspondence, proceedings, and actions concerning the carrying of mails across the continent between the 1st days of January, 1857 and 1867, on what was commonly called the "overland route," including copies of all entries on the books of the Department touching the service, the changes, payments, increase of payments, &c., and the full amounts paid to any and all persons on account of such contracts, services, changes, increases, extra compensations, &c.

Mr. CONKLING. As that is strictly within the motion which I yielded to the Senator from Missouri to make, I have a right to ask him a question about it. I yielded to the Senator to make a motion to adjourn; and this being evidently a part of that motion, [laughter,] I wish to inquire whether this resolution is to be made the foundation of further delay in the Holladay case.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all; under no circumstances.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all; under no circumstances.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all; I simply desire this information.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I will tell the Senator why I ask the question. It was a curious measure to me of senatorial ingenuity. I suppesed that what a democratic platform four or five years ago called "the resources of statesmanship" had been exhausted in devices and inventions to postpone this case. I have thought that Fabius vices and inventions to postpone this case. I have thought that Fabius !

might have learnt something, although he was the author of a great policy of delay, could he have witnessed, as I have done in the two Houses, all the expedients and contrivances and suggestions, ranging from mere personal convenience up to constitutional principles too large to be measured, which have been employed to postpone to some other time doing an honest thing, whatever that might be, in the case of a man who has been kept dangling for years, shuffled off first upon one theory and then upon another in respect of what I believe to be an honest claim. And I wanted to know whether my friend from Missouri, fresh from new fields of conquest, as I am glad to know he is, fertile as I know he is, had been able now, at this late hour of this late day, to get up a new contraption, if I may use that word without offense, by which still further to a more convenient season somewhere in the vast forever, Benjamin Holladay was to be postponed. But if he really wants this information, or even if he thinks he does, and if he has said that he will not make it the occasion of postponing or altering what would otherwise be the action of the Senate on this bill, then I will not interpose to objection which every member of the Senate has a right to interpose to the consideration of this resolution. from mere personal convenience up to constitutional principles too lution.

Mr. COCKRELL. The resolution was not offered for delay. The Senator from New York has never heard this bill discussed in the Senate or House in democratic Congresses, and democratic platforms have never touched upon it directly or indirectly.

Mr. CONKLING. Has this been omitted from the democratic platform?

Mr. COCKRELL. He may have heard it discussed when the House and Senate were republican, and may have learned that the republican party then refused to pass it either through the Senate or House; can party then refused to pass it either through the Senate or House; but not since the Senate or House has been democratic.

Mr. CONKLING. Will my honorable friend allow me to make a contribution to history there?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am always glad to hear contributions by the Senator from New York.

Mr. CONKLING. I am not surprised to hear that Holladay's case has not been referred to in democratic platforms, because it has been the persistent practice of that party to omit almost anything that had merit in it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I presume the republican platforms included all that had merit.

that had merit.

Mr. CONKLING. Oh, no.

Mr. COKRELL. Why was not this put in that platform?

Mr. CONKLING. We could not include all the merits of the republican party. All we could do was to sample.

Mr. COCKRELL. This resolution is not presented for delay. I delayed this claim but once, and that was during the last days of the last session. I did it, and I advised the friends of the bill that I was doing it, and I did not intend it should pass then, because it could not be fairly considered. It can be fairly considered now. I desire to throw no obstruction in the way of the passage of this bill; but I do desire the information this resolution calls for, and I have been trying to get it ever since the bill was before the Senate a year ago.

Mr. CONKLING. Take your order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the resolution?

Mr. ANTHONY. I make a verbal criticism on the resolution. I think it had better be in the usual form "that the Postmaster-General be directed." It reads "directed and required," which would seem to imply that there might be some objection on his part which required a special mandate from us.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to the modification suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be so modified.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and two minutes

p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 11, 1881.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. SAMUEL DOMER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ALLEGED ABUSE OF FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, there was a resolution offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Money] some time ago calling upon the Postmaster-General for a report—

The SPEAKER. The resolution to which the gentleman from Kentucky refers was offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Calkins,] but reported to the House by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, [Mr. Money.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. The resolution which was reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads calls for information from the Postmaster-General as to alleged abuses in the franking from the Postmaster-General as to alleged abuses in the franking privilege in the transmission of matter through the mails over the frank of members of the Senate and House of Representatives, and as I understand that there is a very voluminous reply now on the desk of the Speaker from the Postmaster-General in reference to the subject, I ask the adoption of the following resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and that the communication of the Postmaster-General be sent to this select committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas charges have been made that the laws of the United States have been

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas charges have been made that the laws of the United States have been violated by the sending through the mails under the frank of members of the House of Representatives and of the Senate of matter not authorized to be sent without the payment of postage:

Resolved, That a select committee of five be appointed by the Speaker of this House to examine into said charges and all other abuses that may be brought to their attention connected with the transmission of letters, documents, or other matter through the mails of the United States; that such committee shall have power to sit during the sessions of the House, to send for persons, papers, and records, to administer oaths, and to report to this House by bill or otherwise its findings and conclusions at any time. The expense of said investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN', Leinvalue decided.

Mr. BLACKBURN.' I simply desire, Mr. Speaker, to move the adoption of that resolution, coupled with the request that I shall not be assigned to duty on that special committee.

Mr. BROWNE. In the absence of my colleague, [Mr. Calkins,] to whom this subject-matter more properly belongs, I insisted when the communication of the Postmaster-General was being presented to the House that it should be read or that it should be printed in the RECORD. Since that time I have been advised that the report reflects upon the conduct of certain members of the House and members of the Senate. The investigation has been ex parte. Affidavits, as I am advised, are included in the report. No opportunity was given for the cross-examination of the witnesses, and it strikes me that it would be unjust that this matter should be made of record until the fullest opportunity has been given to the accused for the inspection of the papers and the cross-examination of the witnesses.

I am therefore, so far as I am personally concerned, entirely willing that this whole subject should be referred to a special committee, ing that this whole subject should be referred to a special committee, that there may be the fullest and amplest investigation before it shall be made of public record. I am willing, therefore, that it may go to a special committee, and that the report be printed for the use of the committee, with the hope that the investigation will be at once begun, and that the committee's report will be made at an early day.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move to amend the resolution so that the subject shall go to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I think that is the proper committee it should go to.

Mr. BROWNE. There are objections I need not state to its going to the Post-Office Committee. The investigation may possibly implicate some gentlemen who belong to that committee.

Mr. HUMPHREY. That does not make any difference.

Mr. BROWNE. I think it does make some difference.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Not at all. It gives them the entire advantage, and I am willing they should have all the advantage, of every doubt.

doubt.

Mr. COX. I desire to say one word. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Browne] has stated that no names have been published in connection with this charge of evasion of the post-office laws by members of Congress. I have seen in the newspapers the name of Senator Wallace and my own as being guilty of having cheated the post-office revenue. Publications were made before the election to that effect. I made inquiry, traced the matter out with the aid of the postmaster at New York, and received a thorough exoneration, so far as his investigation could go, as to myself. I have authorized no one to sign any such documents connected with the campaign. This committee will so ascertain.

After the publication in the New York Times of the exonerating letter of Mr. Postmaster James, it seems to come with an ill grace from this Post-Office Department, this clerk to the President, who must have this Post-Office Department, this clerk to the President, who must have been advised to send in here to this House the names of members as guilty of something against the Post-Office Department and its laws and revenues. I want to say in advance of any investigation that there are perhaps two sides to this investigation; and if other members of Congress, or if Senators, are no more involved in it than I am, then there must be some device, trick, or scheme to make some capital against members of one party. I hope the resolution will pass.

The question being taken on the resolution, it was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

There being no objection, the letter of the Postmaster-General was referred to the select committee.

Mr. WARNER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I desire to ask the Chair what became of the amendment I offered, and which I insisted upon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from Wisconsin insist; but the Chair never takes advantage of a gentleman, and will open the question again, notwithstanding the reconsideration.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I am not particular about it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair submitted the motion in as loud a voice as he could employ.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The reason why I wished to insist on my amendment was because I thought we could get a report sooner from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads than from a special committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair heard, even at this distance, the con-The SPEARER. The Chair heard, even at this distance, the conversation between the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Browne] and the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. HUMPHREY.] in which the gentleman from Indiana said there was an impropriety in the Post-Office Committee considering the subject; and the Chair supposed the gentleman from Wisconsin had acceded to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana. He certainly did not press his amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I do not insist on the amendment.

SECTIONS 2504 AND 2970 OF REVISED STATUTES

Mr. McCOOK. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] to withdraw the call for the regular order, that I may introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. WARNER. I withdraw the call for the regular order for that

Mr. McCOOK, by unanimous consent, introduced (by request) a bill (H. R. No. 6845) to amend sections 2504 and 2970 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MARY S. W. HARRIS.

Mr. BALLOU, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6846) granting a pension to Mary S. W. Harris; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

UNCLAIMED DIVIDENDS OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. PRICE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6847) to provide for the distribution of unclaimed dividends among the creditors of national banks; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask unanimous consent to offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

Mr. WARNER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask the gentleman to hear the resolution read. It is to assign time for the consideration of business of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. WARNER. I must insist on the regular order.

Mr. WARNER. I must insist on the regular order.
The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. FINLEY. I move to dispense with the call of committees for to-day.

The SPEAKER. That will require a two-thirds vote.

The motion of Mr. FINLEY was agreed to upon a division-ayes 102, noes not counted; two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills,

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. No. 105) for the relief of John Gault, jr., late a major of the Twenty-eighth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry;

A bill (S. No. 323) for the relief of the Winnebago Indians in Wisconsin, and to aid them to obtain subsistence by agricultural pursuits, and to promote their civilization;

A bill (S. No. 549) for the relief of Samuel I. Gustin;

A bill (S. No. 814) for the relief of the legal representative of Henry M. Shreve, deceased; and

A bill (S. No. 1353) for the relief of N. & G. Taylor Company.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole,
Mr. Townshend, of Illinois, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the bill (H. R. No. 6730) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes. The Clerk will report the pending paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all laws and parts of laws creating or authorizing the commission of tencitizens provided for in the act of April 10, 1869, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is upon the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] to strike out the paragraph just read and to insert in lieu thereof what the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the expenses of the commission of citizens serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, $10,000.

Mr. POEHLER. I rise to a point of order on that amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. POEHLER. It increases expenditures beyond the amount proposed by the bill. I do not think it necessary to make any argument on that point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. The fact that the amendment increases the amount which the bill provides for does not render it liable to any point of

Mr. BLOUNT. That there may be no misunderstanding on the part of the Chair, I desire to state that I suppose the point of order is that the amendment changes existing law and increases expenditure. The fact is that the appropriation proposed by the amendment is in exact accordance with the law authorizing this commission. The clause in the bill, which is not yet law, is intended to repeal the law authorizing this commission. The object of my friend from New York, [Mr. Hiscock,] as I understand it, is to strike out that provision of the bill and to insert in lieu thereof a provision making an appropriation to execute existing law. I state that in fairness to the Chair, before he makes his ruling upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. POEH-LER] point to any law which this amendment if adopted will change?

Mr. POEHLER. I supposed the law was changed last year.

Mr. BLOUNT. It was not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is not well taken, for the reason that the proposed amendment will not change any existing law, but is to execute a law already in existence.

Mr. POEHLER. Then I hope the amendment will not prevail, for

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. POEHLER] will suspend until the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] who is entitled to the floor, has submitted such remarks as he may who is entitled to the hoor, has submitted such remarks as he may desire upon the pending amendment.

Mr. POEHLER. I beg pardon; I did not know the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] desired to be heard.

Mr. HISCOCK. The provisions of law which the pending bill as reported to this House by the Committee on Appropriations proposes. to repeal are very important provisions. It proposes the abolition of this commission of ten which was created by an act of Congress. Their powers are of a supervisory nature, and will be found in sec-tions 2041 and 2042 of the Revised Statutes, which are as follows:

tions 2041 and 2042 of the Revised Statutes, which are as follows:

SEC, 2041. The board of commissioners mentioned in section 2039 shall supervise all expenditures of money appropriated for the benefit of Indians within the limits of the United States; and shall inspect all goods purchased for Indians, in connection with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose duty it shall be to consult the commission in making purchases of such goods.

SEC. 2042. Any member of the board of Indian commissioners is empowered to investigate all contracts, expenditures, and accounts in connection with the Indian service, and shall have access to all books and papers relating thereto in any Government office; but the examination of vouchers and accounts by the executive committee of said board shall not be a prerequisite of payment.

It will be observed that this board is simply supervisory; simply a watch, or, if you please so to term it, a police over the goods that are to be furnished and over the accounts of the Indian Bureau. I am not aware that any complaint has ever been made against these commissioners. This proposition to repeal the law does not come from a committee which has investigated the necessity of the continuance of this commission. I know of no allegation being made before any committee or anywhere else against the efficiency of these commissioners, or against the good work which they have performed.

This board has survived the annual raids which have been made upon every branch of the Government in the interest of economy, the upon every branch of the Government in the interest of economy, the cutting down of salaries and the wiping out of clerkships, until now, not in the interest of any such raids as that, without coming from a committee reporting any reasons for its non-continuance, it is proposed to repeal the law which created this commission, and thus to abolish these commissioners. I for one see no good reason for that.

As will be remembered by every member of this House, this commission has performed at least one important service, that is the development of the affairs which existed under the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Hayt. Whatever there was to be divulged there, whatever was found out there, whatever light was thrown upon the manner in which the affairs of that bureau were conducted by him, is due entirely to this commission. is due entirely to this commission.

As I have already said, no reason is given, as I understand it, by the chairman of the sub-committee having this bill in charge why this board should be wiped out of existence. On the contrary, the Secretary of the Interior is decided in his expression of opinion that it shall be continued. I will supplement my remarks upon this question by asking to have read a letter which I have received from the Secretary of the Interior.

The Clerk read as follows:

Department of the Interior,

Washington, D. C., January 11, 1881.

Dear Sir: In answer to your inquiry I beg leave to say that the Board of Indian Commissioners has proved of great usefulness in the management of Indian Affairs. They have been rendering very great service in superintending, together with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the annual lettings of contracts for supplying the Indians with provisions and annuities, in the examination of annuity goods as to their quality, in the examination of accounts, and in making inspections of agencies and inquiries into the different branches of the Indian service. In all these things I have found the board very useful, and believe that the sum that has been appropriated for many years to defray its expenses has been money expended to the great advantage of the service. I should be glad to have the board kept in existence and the appropriation for defraying its expenses renewed.

Very truly, yours,

Mr. POEHLER. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding all that has been said by the gentleman who has just spoken, [Mr. Hiscock,] I can see no more use for this commission in the Interior Department than for a like commission in every other Department in this Government. If the Interior Department is not competent, without the aid of a commission of this kind, to let contracts, to examine goods, and to see whether supplies furnished for the Indians are proper in quality and cheap enough in price, then we had better turn that Department over to this commission. I do not see why we need the supervision of this commission at the different agencies, for we have already five regular inspectors.

Mr. POEHLER. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding all that has been regular inspectors.

It is possible that the Secretary of the Interior may not object to continuing this commission; probably he may advise it, as he would perhaps dislike to say that he did not wish the services of these gentlemen. But I have looked over this matter very carefully, and I have seen no benefits to the service arising from this commission, whose members know no more about the needs of the Department

I think the expenditure is useless.

It has been said that disclosures heretofore made in regard to the administration of a former Commissioner of Indian Affairs were due administration of a former Commissioner of Indian Affairs were due principally to this commission. Now, I have been informed—whether correctly or not I am unable to say—that the man who was clerk to this commission is now in the same business for which that Commissioner of Indian Affairs was discharged.

Mr. WELLS. Mr. Chairman, I move pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. It will be remembered that the law creating this commission was passed some ten or eleven years ago. Since that time Congress has provided, as stated by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. POEHLER,] five inspectors, who in part, if not entirely, take the place of this commission. They not only examine the accounts, but they visit from time to time the agencies of the different Indian tribes. Last year we inserted in our Indian appropriation bill this clause: tion bill this clause:

No part of the money appropriated by this act shall be paid or in any way used for the payment of the salaries or expenses of the Indian commission provided for by section 2029 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

As we had thus provided last year by law that no money appropriated for the Indian service should be used for this commission, the Committee on Appropriations instructed me to report this bill with a provision repealing the law creating the commission. Besides, Mr. Chairman, upon an examination of this appropriation bill at a point a few clauses beyond the paragraph we are now considering, it will be found that we provide for inspectors of goods purchased in New York under bids, and that these inspectors, under the direction of the Indian Department, have control and management of this matter. Hence I can see very little use of this commission at the present time aside from securing to its clerk a salary of $3,000; to its assistant clerk a salary of $1,200; besides an expenditure of $1,500 a year for

To be sure the members of this commission receive no salary; but we are appropriating this money to pay their expenses—expenses for what? For the purpose of visiting different agencies? No, sir; because we have inspectors for that purpose. We are paying the expenses of this commission for visiting Washington and looking over accounts which are already examined and audited by a paid officer of this Government. In my association with the officers of the Indian Bureau I have found they appropriate that the party of the second the secon this Government. In my association with the officers of the Indian Bureau I have found them very correct, just, and honorable men. I have confidence in that department. I have seen and examined in person some of their accounts, and I do not feel that we need to have a watch-dog over them any more than over any other department of this Government. I feel that the appropriation for this purpose is a useless expenditure of money, and is embarrassing to a bureau which is now running satisfactorily.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I was very glad when this bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations that, after the war which has been made upon this most extraordinary appropriation, the committee had at last consented in their wisdom to omit the annual appropriation of $10,000 for the payment of the peace commissioners as they are called. I presume the Committee of the Whole understands that this commission was created under the act of 1869, as I have had occasion to say heretofore, for a specific purpose, namely, to co-operate with the General of the Army and other persons designated for the purpose of meeting what was then supposed to be the imminent danger of an Indian outbreak. I have heretofore taken the nent danger of an Indian outbreak. I have heretofore taken the position, as I do now, that as soon as the objects of the act of 1869 were accomplished this commission was functus officio and no longer had any legal existence. But, strange to say, the Committee on Appropriations, running in the groove which had been established, continued these appropriations from year to year, for during a series of years from 1869 to the present time $10,000 has been appropriated annually—not for the payment of commissioners for they reason. years from 1869 to the present time $10,000 has been appropriated annually—not for the payment of commissioners, for they, we were told, were philanthropic gentlemen who had great love for the Indians, and were animated by no desire for compensation, gentlemen who would have rejected scornfully any offer of pay. I hope that the gentleman from New York who has offered this amendment does not speak by authority for any member of that commission, for when in former Congresses it has been my fortune to oppose this appropriation and to characterize it as it justly deserved I have always been told that this was a commission of philanthropic gentlemen who not only were giving their services to the Indians and to the country without compensation, but would scorn to take compensation; that the $10,000 annually appropriated since 1869 (and I call the attention of the gentleman from New York who offered the amendment to this of the gentleman from New York who offered the amendment to this fact) was simply to defray their expenses; that these gentlemen did not want any compensation, but were doing this work purely from philanthropical motives. The Committee on Appropriations, I say, for eleven years has appropriated $10,000 a year to defray their expenses, not to compensate them at all; and yet the gentleman from New York offers his amendment, you will see, for the expenses of a commission of citizens serving without compensation. Ah! serving without appropriation—when and where? Have they not had $10,000 every year to pay their traveling expenses? They professed, and under the very terms of the act of 1869 they were, to serve without compensation. It was never alleged that they were to be compensated in any way whatever.

Hon. Frank Hiscock, House of Representatives.

I say, sir, we have driven the Appropriations Committee—immovable and unrepentant in their sins and in their crimes—we have driven

I say, sir, we have driven the Appropriations Committee—immovable and unrepentant in their sins and in their crimes—we have driven that Appropriations Committee to omit from the Indian appropriation bill this year this appropriation of $10,000 to compensate this peace commission for traveling expenses.

But now the gentleman from New York comes up and asks on an amendment in his own handwriting, and in his own words, when the law by its terms declares these gentlemen were to serve without compensation—the gentleman from New York asks that $10,000 shall be paid to them. I commend the Appropriations Committee, and it is not often my good fortune to have the opportunity of commending that committee; but I do commend the policy and the economy and the justice and the good sense of the Appropriations Committee in omitting this provision from the present Indian appropriation bill. They are hard to convince, they are stubborn in their notions, but we have driven them at last to this point; and I hope they will maintain the bill and that my friend from Missouri who has it in charge will rise and support, in opposition to the gentleman from New York, will rise and support, in opposition to the gentleman from New York, the just measure of the committee and say that these gentlemen who have always professed they were serving without compensation shall not now come in and ask that they shall be compensated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope the gentleman will withdraw this amendment.

I desire to take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Mississippi.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.
Mr. HOOKER. I thank the gentleman from Texas for his courtesy.

I regret, Mr. Chairman, not having the act of 1869 here, but it will be remembered as quoted in the debates during the last Congress that be remembered as quoted in the debates during the last Congress that that commission was created for a specific purpose. It was to be composed of ten citizens who were to serve under the terms of the act itself without compensation. For ten or eleven long years $10,000 have been reported each year by the Committee on Appropriations for their expenses. This year when I looked over the Indian bill I was gratified to find, driven I suppose to conviction, the Committee on Appropriations have omitted the appropriation.

Mr. SCALES. I have the law here, and will read it if my friend desires it.

desires it

Mr. HOOKER. I will be obliged to my friend if he will read it to the House.

Mr. SCALES. The provision in the fourth section is as follows:

And for the purpose of enabling the President to execute the powers conferred by this act he is hereby authorized, at his discretion, to organize a board of commissioners, to consist of not more than ten persons, to be selected by him from men eminent for their intelligence and philanthropy, to serve without pecuniary compensation, who may, under his direction, exercise joint control with the Secretary of the Interior over the disbursement of the appropriations made by this act or any part thereof that the President may designate; and to pay the necessary expenses of transportation, subsistence, and clerk hire of said commissioners while actually engaged in said service there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. HOOKER. It will be observed by the terms of the act which has been read by my friend from North Carolina these commissioners were to serve without compensation, and that they were to serve unwere to serve without compensation, and that they were to serve under the terms of that act for the specific purpose for which the law was passed. And in making my argument against the appropriation of the committee last year, in which they appropriated, running in the same groove with their predecessors, $10,000 for the expenses of this commission, I endeavored to convince the committee then as I do now that was an unwise expenditure of the public money.

And, Mr. Chairman, allow me to say that with regard to Indian affairs, as with regard to the ordinary affairs of the Government, we have too much government—we have too much government—we have too much government—we have affairs, as with regard to the ordinary affairs of the Government, we have too much government—we have too many officers, too many men who are paid for performing services. We have the bill of this committee, and when you read it through you will find it quadruples the compensation of these employés. It makes an appropriation of six hundred and odd thousand dollars in two clauses of the bill without a particle of specification how it shall be applied. I demonstrated to the committee yesterday that under the incidental expenditure for Indian effairs you expended $178,000 without any specific provision. Indian affairs you expended $178,000 without any specific provision of how the funds should be disbursed.

And will you allow me to say further, Mr. Chairman, (and I hope the committee will hear what I have to say,) that there is no Department of the Government, neither the Army nor the Navy nor any other Department, which has such extraordinary powers conferred upon it as the Interior Department has in regard to this Indian Bureau † It has been this lavish appropriation of money, these indefinite and uncertain sums voted to it, which have given rise to the fact that one Commissioner of Indian Affairs has been hurled from his position by the Secretary of the Interior because he was speculating in the funds which were confided to him for Indian propers. which were confided to him for Indian purposes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I suppose it is within the recollection of us all—for it was notorious—that for many years there were constant scandals concerning the purchases made for the Indians. It was a matter of general comment throughout the country and in the newspapers. It was alleged that rotten blankets were furnished to them, diseased pork was bought, and everything supplied to them in the way of clothing and provisions was below the standard required. I have for several years past heard but very little of that kind of complaint. There has been a general improvement in the administration of the whole of the Indian affairs, especially in this department. I credit some of this to the general excellence of the officials connected with the department, but I am bound to give a very considerable measure of credit for the improvement in this matter of supplies to the creation of this board. ter of supplies to the creation of this board.

I am willing to trust the judgment of the gentlemen engaged in administering the Indian affairs, who say that this board has been and is of great use and service.

I do not quite comprehend the allusions of the gentleman from Mississippi to the compensation of the commission. By the original statute creating the Indian commission they were to serve without pay. They have done so. It is not even pretended that they have ever been paid or sought to be paid for the service, and nobody now desires to pay them.

They are gentlemen of high character and standing. They are of different pursuits in life, familiar with the different specialties connected with this department. They pay close attention to the various purchases for the Indians; and it is, as I have said, beyond question that the supplies for the Indians under this supervision are far better that the supplies for the Indians under this supervision are far better than at any previous time.

If I were to designate a system for myself I should say that I know of no reason why all the provisions for the Indians might not be purchased under the control and management of the officers who purchase so well fer the Army. And the same may be said of the clothing. The standard is uniformly good. The clothing and provisions for the Army are excellently well chosen. There is no complaint as to their quality. The rations are good, and both rations and clothing are cheap, purchased at the lowest rates that they can be had in the market. Why, therefore, there cannot be added to the duties of these officers who purchase the clothing and provisions for the Army the duties of purchasing for the Indians I have never quite understood. But as the law has not been changed in that respect, I wish to main-But as the law has not been changed in that respect, I wish to maintain the law that is now in force providing for this commission.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman from Connecticut permit me

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman from Connecticut permit the to ask him a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to ask the gentleman if he will favor an amendment which I intend to offer to transfer the whole matter to the War Department?

Mr. HAWLEY. I cannot say until I have read it. I am in general in favor of turning more of the work over to the Army. I believe, as I have said, that these purchases can be made equally as well, perhaps better, by the purchasing officers of the Army. But as this has not been done, as the law now stands I firmly believe, from personal inquiry and from the knowledge which I have of some of these gentlement, that the constant of the standard of the second tlemen, that they are of great service to the country in the management of this affair. They do a great service. They give a large part of their time and services to the Government without compensation. They undoubtedly save the Government large sums of money by making economical purchases, and the Secretary desires to continue the

Of course they cannot work without expending some money. They cannot travel and supervise these supplies without incurring some expense upon railroads and at hotels. That is all the Government is called upon to pay. It ought to be paid, for they do a great public service, and I believe it is desirable to have the commission continued.

I hope it will be done.

I hope it will be done.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Chairman, I trust that this amendment will not prevail. The House has been already informed that this act was passed in 1869. This board was then appointed for the purposes specified in that act. Afterward it grew up and became attached to each appropriation bill as a fungus growth. It should not have been there, and its history shows the importance of the committee putting no way levislation and appropriation bill until it has been well connew legislation on an appropriation bill until it has been well considered and gives unquestioned promise of good results.

In 1869, at the time that this act was passed, there was a cry, and a just cry, throughout the country of fraud in the administration of the Indian affairs. This was an effort and an abortive effort made for the purpose of correcting that state of things. The effect of it was, in-stead of benefiting the administration of Indian affairs, to damage it in my view most materially by dividing up the responsibility which should have rested alone upon the head of the Department.

They called to the assistance of the Secretary of the Interior a board of commissioners, consisting of ten men, whose duty it was to aid him in making contracts and disbursing money. These men were without responsibility. They received no salary. They had no specific duties to perform. They were selected from fifty millions of people and invited here as an act of courtesy and compliment to overlook this bureau. They wanted no salary, but accepted an appropriation of $25,000 as expenses. This money was spent by them in coming to Washington, and in traversing the whole Indian country in Pullman pelaces are sufficient to the property of the service of the ser palace cars, with as many employes around them as were suitable to the dignity of their position. This was essential to their work, and this part of it was not usually neglected.

And yet, sir, after ten years of service, and the expenditure of near two hundred thousand dollars, the gentleman from New York who proposes this amendment is able from the whole history of the past to cite but one single instance in which he says they have benefited the service. And what was that? It was the discovery, he says, which these Indian commissioners made as to the improprieties in the conduct of the late Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Let me say to conduct of the late Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Let me say to that gentleman what I said here a year ago on the same subject, that while we did have the assistance of these gentlemen—and it would have been strange if they had failed to give it to us—when the matter was talked of in Washington as well as at the agency, information was conveyed to me as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. It was sent to the head of the Department, and I believe would have been prosecuted and fully investigated if there had been no such commission. I will not detract from their credit, but do say that they are not entitled to exclusive credit. Then, sir, the only thing that the gentleman from New York has urged in justification of so great an expenditure falls to the ground.

But that is not all, Mr. Chairman. Let us see what is the state of things we have. My opinion is, and I think every intelligent man will concur with me, that we have here an illustration of the old will concur with me, that we have here an illustration of the old adage, a homely but a true one, that too many cooks spoil the broth. You have your Secretary of the Interior; you have your Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whose whole time is devoted to that service; you have five inspectors who are paid, and whose whole time is also you have not inspectors who are paid, and whose whole time is also to be devoted to the Indian; you have in addition seventy-eight agents, and you have superadded to these two special agents appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. And all of these are paid by the Government to look after the Indians and see to it that there are no frauds and corruptions in this service.

The object of this board is to prevent fraud. And they not only created it, but they said, "We cannot rely upon the agents we appoint, and therefore we will delegate the appointment of agents to the religious denominations." And it is a fact to-day, a fact in violation of the spirit of the Constitution, that the agents of the Indian Bureau are appointed, not by the President directly, but by religious denominations who control the agencies and exclude all others. They have their own employee from the denominations with the control to the agencies and exclude all others. have their own employes from the denominations, and the result of the whole thing is to build up sects, if anything, among the Indians, and the Government is the paymaster for this work, which should be done by the churches.

Now, I say the experience of the past has shown that this organiza-

Now, I say the experience of the past has shown that this organiza-tion is useless, that the money spent upon it is money spent without justification and without any adequate return to the Government. There is one thing, however, I do not understand. These commis-sioners are generally gentlemen of high intelligence and virtue; and it is strange to me, it is passing strange, that gentlemen of so much wealth and so much business of their own should seek so persist-ently and continuously this position. At the last session, sir, we ently and continuously this position. At the last session, sir, we lopped it off.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman from North Carolina allow me to inquire of him if he means to say that these gentlemen have persistently sought for this position? I certainly desire to say for myself there is not a member of that commission that I know personally. Not one of them ever spoke to me, and I do not believe there is a member of this House to whom any member of that commission has ever spoken on this subject.

Mr. SCALES. I hope this does not come out of my time.

Mr. SCALES. I hope this does not come out of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I would not do any of these gentlemen injustice; I do not mean to do that. I mean, however, to draw inferences from the facts before this House connected with the history of this transaction. When the last appropriation bill was before this House we struck out every dollar of appropriation for this purpose. We struck out the clause itself. The bill went to the Senate, and the Senate put it back. On a committee of conference the clause was put in put it back. On a committee of conference the clause was put in but without any appropriation. How is it, then, these gentlemen are in office to-day receiving the same appropriation? This House expressed its disapprobation. The House and Senate cut out the appropriation after a full and fair conference through its committees and the bill became the law. The next thing after this defeat was to put it on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. As an humble member of the Committee on Appropriations, which my distinguished colleague from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] so warmly commended for its notions of economy, I think it due to that committee I should say one word in response to what has fallen from my colleague.

I know not the purpose, except as I can guess it from the current events of that day, why this commission was raised. I suppose our friends on the other side of the House, who then had control of Congress, created the commission for a wise purpose, as it was admitted on the floor of this House, and it was a well-known fact, that there was a great deal of scandal in regard to the management of our Indian affairs, especially in the purchase of the goods that were supplied to the Indians, both as regards the quality and the quantity. I presume the object was to create a supervising board that should see no injustice was done to these Indians. And it seems to have had the great of according what was then completed of the great found. effect of correcting what was then complained of, the gross frauds in the supplies to the Indians.

As to the gentlemen who composed this board, I know not a single one of them. I apprehend they are gentlemen of the highest character. I have never known and have never heard that they desire to hold this position. They hold their places without compensation, and it would hardly be expected that these gentlemen who are volunteering their services in so good a cause as this should have been willing, in traveling from point to point and making these purchases, to pay their own expenses and to pay the expenses of the employés necessary in this work. But, Mr. Chairman, I believe the time has come when perhaps we can dispense with them. The complaints to which I have referred are now not so frequent as they were in the past.

My friend from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] made the statement upon this floor that from year to year the Committee on Appropriations have incorporated into this bill the sum of $10,000 for the purpose of paying this commission. Now, if my friend will turn back to the Indian appropriation bill of last year, he will find that although we did report in favor of paying the expenses of the commission, yet we proposed to reduce the amount to $7,000. Upon his motion that sum was stricken out, and no provision whatever was made in the bill for defraying the expenses of this commission. The bill as it passed this House and went to the Seneta did not contain any provision for this House and went to the Senate did not contain any provision for that purpose.

When the Senate came to consider the bill it amended it by inserting a clause making an appropriation for that purpose. The question became a matter for the committees of conference, and in the conference between the two Houses, although the Senate conferees for some time insisted upon retaining the amount necessary to pay the expenses of this commission, they finally gave way and the was passed without that provision.

bill was passed without that provision.

Afterward, when the sundry civil appropriation bill came to be passed, it went to the Senate without any provision in it for paying the expenses of this commission. The Senate amended it by putting in $10,000 for that purpose. The House disagreed to the amendment and the bill went to a committee of conference. The conferees on the part of the House finally agreed to retain the $10,000 for the payment of the expenses of these commissioners. That is the way in which the appropriation got into our legislation of the last session. The gentleman will see by that statement that the Committee on Appropriations is not so entirely responsible as he has declared.

The gentleman himself submitted the motion at the last session of Congress to strike out the clause making this appropriation. The Committee on Appropriations now adopts the idea, following the lead of the House at the last session. Yet the gentleman is very un-lead of the House at the last session. Yet the gentleman is very unhappy at what we have done, and makes a long speech to prove that we ought to have done exactly what he wants done. That is the whole history of the matter. The provision is now left out of the bill, and we propose to repeal the law authorizing the appointment of this commission.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to oppose the amendment.
Mr. CHITTENDEN. I desire to advocate the amendment.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I give way to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN.]

Mr. CHITTENDEN. It is impossible for me in five minutes to give to the committee all the information that I desire to give them; I could not do it in half an hour.

In the last year of President Buchanan's administration I made a late attempt to break down what had been a gross scandal and resolute attempt to break down what had been a gross scandal and monopoly in New York in furnishing the annual supply of Indian goods connected with my branch of trade. I sent my junior partner to Washington and told him to bid for the contract at the risk of a loss of $25,000, for the purpose of getting inside of the rottenness of the old system, whereby one firm had succeeded in furnishing for nearly twenty-five years supplies for the northwestern and other tribes of

The Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Jacob Thompson, of Mississippi, was compelled to award me the contract because I underbid in bulk the old firm. What was the result? In the first place, I paid $5,000 to lawyers to see to it that I got the contract I was fairly entitled to. This was a waste of money, for Mr. Thompson manifested on my first interview with him a fixed and honorable purpose to do right.

What was the next result? After Secretary Thompson awarded the contract to me, the Indian Commissioner (now dead) told the old New York firm that he "would fix Mr. CHITTENDEN before he got through this business;" and he did fix me. By delaying the schedules he made me pay for one thing four freights from England on one hundred and twenty bales of blankets, and I spent $30,000, directly and indirectly, in carrying out that contract, in my fight with the Indian Commissioner. I might go into details and speak from recollection of papers that are now in the Interior Department, if they have not been destroyed, which give a history of the whole

In the end, I determined to appeal to a republican President on his election, and to have the thing sifted to the bottom. But the war his election, and to have the thing sifted to the bottom. But the war came on, and I felt that my personal interest was a matter of no moment at that time, and I made no attempt to expose the wrong.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HUMPHREY. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I thank the gentleman. Now, twenty years after, the case comes up again—

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him for a question?

for a question?
Mr. CHITTENDEN. Certainly.
Mr. HOOKER. I did not distinctly understand what the gentle-

Mr. HOOKER. I did not distinctly understand what the gentleman said in reference to Secretary Thompson.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I said that Mr. Thompson was Secretary of the Interior and compelled to award me the contract against all the lobby, because I was the lowest bidder.

Mr. HOOKER. What contract?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. To supply goods for certain Indians in 1861.

Mr. HOOKER. That was a valuable contract?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. The total amount of the contract was about the knowledged and ten thousand dellars, and the goods to fill the con-one hundred and ten thousand dollars, and the goods to fill the con-one hundred and ten thousand dollars, and the goods to fill the contract cost me §140,000, one way and another.

Mr. HOOKER. You did not make anything by that operation.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. No, sir, no money; but I made some experience of Indian contracts under the old system of business, which is a warning to gentlemen who propose to abolish the commission now existing. In respect to the blankets before alluded to, I discovered that the Indians had been systematically cheated, and that goods worth less than half the contract price had, year after year, been substituted for the goods paid for by Government.

worth less than half the contract price had, year after year, been substituted for the goods paid for by Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is an extremely interesting and difficult question to deal with. After the long series of outrages committed upon the Indians in the purchase of their supplies, a commission of angels could hardly succeed in immediately righting the wrongs connected with this matter. But I say from my knowledge of the work of the commission and the men composing it, that if there are any men in this country who are honestly devoted to their public duties, if there are any who can be trusted for the honest performance of those duties, the men who have for the last few years superintended as members of that commission the furnishing of Indian supplies are such men. While they may not have succeeded in securing entire economy in every respect, and doing full justice to the Indians, it is capable of demonstration that they have in every direction made good progress. To the democracy of this House, who have had sway here for six years, and who have claimed that all rottenness and all wrong doing belonged to the republican party, I say do not abolish this comdoing belonged to the republican party, I say do not abolish this com-mission. Of all the mistakes of legislation that the democratic party have made in six years, this would, in my judgment, be one of the most notable.

Mr. Chairman, I only came into the House after my colleague [Mr. Hiscock] had offered his amendment, and only accidently learned the question before the committee. Yesterday, unfortunately, I paid no attention to the progress of this bill, being very much employed otherwise. But I should, from my experience, as soon expect to see this committee vote to abolish the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives as to abolish this commission, under which we have. Representatives as to abolish this commission, under which we have, most manifestly, corrected many evils.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, last year I voted to withhold the appropriation for this commission, and I see no reason for voting differently to-day. Before the creation of this commission the Secretary of the Interior was responsible for the proper administration voting differently to-day. Before the creation of this commission the Secretary of the Interior was responsible for the proper administration of this bureau; he had the power to make contracts without any supervision of this kind. But this commission, so far as purchases are concerned under the act creating it, exercises joint authority with the Secretary of the Interior. Gentlemen say that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and this commission would have to co-operate before a wrong thing could be accomplished. So it might be said they will have to co-operate before a right thing can be done.

Now, this is not the only department of the Government that makes purchases, that opens bids. The goods purchased for the Indians constitute but a very small portion of the supplies furnished to the Government. If a commission of this kind is a good thing in the Interior Department, it strikes me it would be a good thing in every other Department. Here you have a commission responsible to nobody. The members of the commission it is said are very clever men. I cannot dispute that statement; I have no desire to dispute it. I do not know these men. I am speaking of the system. If you have had good administration under this system, it is because you have happened to obtain good men, and not because the system itself is not likely to prove a vicious one, as everybody must see, in the future. I apprehend that the Secretary of the Interior, so long as he is charged with the enforcement of the law, ought to have complete power to choose his agents, and should be held responsible. It ought to be out of his power and out of the power of any other officer charged with the performance of public duty to divide responsibility. The moment you divide the responsibility for official action, that moment you lay a trap which sooner or later will promote fraud. If the Secretary desires the assistance or advice of philanthropic individuals willing to act without compensation, let him have the power to choose them from time to time, but let somebody be solely respon-

Again, Mr. Chairman, I am suspicious of adopting permanently a policy giving the power and control of expenditures to men who repolicy giving the power and control of expenditures to men who receive no compensation, and who are supposed to act upon pure philanthropic grounds. My observation teaches me, both in private and public affairs, that the service performed without adequate compensation is not a good or safe service. I grant that many men do philanthropic acts. But, after all, it is not safe to invest men or organizations who act without pay with the power of making contracts and incurring expenditures in connection with the Government. Men doing duty of this kind ought to be responsible to somebody. Men doing duty of this kind ought to be responsible to somebody. When you vest power of this sort in the hands of men who are expected to act from pure philanthropy and without compensation, it is generally not a great while before some designing individual assumes the robes of philanthropy that under their cover he may commit fraud. If this commission has done good heretofore I am glad of it; but the policy is wrong; and I want now to abolish this commission before, under the ordinary operation of the laws governing matters of this kind, it brings abuses into the service. Or, if you cannot trust the Secretary of the Interior, then take the power from him altogether in the premises, and vest it in a commission, providing it with the proper machinery for successful operation, fixing its responsibility, and giving its members adequate compensation for their services.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, a great deal of the abuse to which this commission has been subjected is, I think, founded on a misunderstanding of facts. I regret that on this occasion I am differing with the majority of the Committee on Appropriations, but I think I am doing so upon sufficient reason. What are the duties of this commission? So far as the expenditure of money is concerned, the commission has not absolute control. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs required to consult with the commission; nothing more. Section

2042 of the Revised Statutes expressly provides:

But the examination of vouchers and accounts by the executive committee of said board shall not be a prerequisite of payment.

The members of the commission are simply allowed to examine the The members of the commission are simply allowed to examine the accounts to see that they are correct; to examine goods purchased or to be purchased so as to prevent any fraud upon the Government. They are allowed to visit the different agencies for the purpose of observing the conduct of the Government officials. This is all. What harm has come to the Government from this thing? Gentlemen say that they have done no good, that the commission has been useless. How is this opinion obtained? Where is the information which this is leased?

upon which this is based?

upon which this is based?

Mr. SCALES. I will refer the gentleman to their reports.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman has had his time. I say we have it upon the high authority of the Secretary of the Interior—

Mr. SCALES. The gentleman will let me answer him.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to interruption. I say we have it on the high authority of the Secretary of the Interior, that in the examination of accounts, in the expenditure of public money, in visitations of agencies, this commission has rendered most essential service.

Mr. SCALES. The gentleman has asked me a question and refuses to yield to let me answer him.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to interruption.

Mr. SCALES. Then do not ask me any question if you refuse to yield to an answer.

wield to an answer.

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not ask the gentleman any question.

Mr. SCALES. But the gentleman did.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I withdraw it.

Mr. SCALES. Do not ask questions if you do not wish to have them answered. I propose to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not ask him any.

Mr. SCALES. The record will show whether he did or not. He asked me upon what information the statement we made was based. Mr. BLOUNT. I have the floor, and if so I will proceed with my marks

Mr. SCALES. I understood the gentleman to ask me a question, and I desired to answer it, but he does not want it answered. He should not ask questions unless he wants an answer. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman seems to feel that he is the only one in this House who understands this subject.

Mr. SCALES. I always except the gentleman from Georgia; al-Mr. BLOUNT. That is something new in the way of liberality on the part of the gentleman.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the matter of purchase of goods in New York, this commission has rendered essential service to the Government. Many of them are merchants and experts in the purchase of Indian goods and supplies. They have rendered material service to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who consults with them in reference to these matters.

And, sir, what is the allegation? My friend from Illinois says that they may have co-operated in doing the right thing. That is so, and this Department has no other check upon it in behalf of the Government but the scrutiny of this peace commission.

In the matter of co-operation, it is an easy thing to co-operate to do right, but in any co-operation to do wrong you have this body of men in the way. With this commission examining the accounts any co-operation to do wrong cannot easily be accomplished.

But, sir, there is no co-operation in it. That is a misunderstanding. The commission has rendered good services in the purchase of Indian goods and supplies; so the Secretary of the Interior has reported to us. In visiting Indian agencies and in the examination of Indian accounts they have done much good; and what has been the result? Before this commission was created you had abuses in the Indian Department charges of cooperation between agents and offiported to us. In visiting Indian agencies and in the examination of Indian accounts they have done much good; and what has been the result? Before this commission was created you had abuses in the Indian Department, charges of co-operation between agents and officers of the Goverament; you had false pay-rolls; you had false vouchers for supplies. After this commission was created, composed of men of high character and great intelligence, with their eyes upon the Indian agents, the Government finds itself to-day without any such abuses. I take it that this commission has had a great deal to do in the accomplishment of such a beneficial result.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, it is very seldom I differ from my friend from Georgia, who is also a member of the Committee on Appropriations. Generally we both have been considered as strict economists—perhaps carrying the thing a little too far sometimes—but I am compelled to-day to take issue with him.

I think, sir, it will be apparent to this House that we ought to dispense with this board when I read the figures which go to make up the expenses of the commission for the year 1879. If I can get the attention of the committee I will read them; but before doing so I will state that the appropriation commenced in 1869 with $15,000.

Mr. BAKER. Twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Yes, I believe it was $25,000. But since 1873 it has been only $15,000. Last year we reported a bill appropriating but $7,000, but that was stricken out, as I said in my remarks a few minutes ago.

I will read now the way in which your money has been expended by this commission: Salaries of employés: Secretary Stickney, $3,000; messenger, $490; porter, part of the time, $780; making $9,560. Rent for Stickney, $482; $10,040. Traveling expenses and per diem, $4,811; making an aggregate of $14,851; leaving only of the appropriation $149 unexpended. Now, sir, it does seem to me that this secretary at $3,000 and assistant secretary sti

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Yes; and to that extent a member of the board has been paid. The assistant secretary has $2,000; a clerk, $2,400; copyist, $900; porter, $780, &c. Now, it looks to me as if there was a good deal of paraphernalia about this whole concern which ought to be dispensed with.

Mr. HOOKER. Will my colleague allow me to make a suggestion?
Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Yes, sir.
Mr. HOOKER. The amount of money paid from 1869 to 1881 for the use of this commission amounts to about one hundred and twenty thousand dollars

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I do not know the amount my-

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. But, Mr. Chairman, [here the hammer fell.] I wish, Mr. Chairman, simply to make a brief statement and to call attention to the law, or a provision embodied in the statute of last year in reference to this matter. In the act which passed both Houses at the last Congress the following words are incorporated:

And no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be paid or in any way used for the payment of the salaries or expenses of the Indian commission provided for by section 2039 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

It will be seen from this language that no part of the money was to go for this expenditure. I have, of course, Mr. Chairman, no reflection to make upon these gentlemen.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to favor the amendment and the retention of this Indian commission.

I am not unaware that the work of the commission is not entirely without cost to the Government, but I believe, and I have personal knowledge of the fact, that if the work of that commission in the past ten years, instead of costing the Government $100,000, had cost us $1,000,000, it would have been money wisely expended. The work of the commission is not limited to the mere inspection of contracts or of purchases, although in that department of their duty they have performed faithful and valuable services, and the abuses that existed at the time the commission was appointed have nearly all heep done away with or are no longer complained of. But there is existed at the time the commission was appointed have nearly all been done away with, or are no longer complained of. But there is another branch of their services which the Secretary of the Interior only alludes to in his letter that, in my judgment, is more important than the purchase of supplies. It is a well-known fact that in the last ten or fifteen years the policy of the Government in reference to the Indians has taken a material stride of advancement. It has been determined to allot the Indians their lands upon reservations, protect them from their warlike neighbors, place them upon the reservations as soon as possible, and teach them the ways of peace—teach them the white man's method of living and earning a livelihood, whereby the Indian may eventually take his place among the citizens of this

Now, there must be left in the administration of Indian affairs a large discretionary power in the disbursement of moneys that shall be employed for the education of the Indians. Agricultural tools must be provided, individual allotments of lands must be improved, and the future care, guardianship, and instruction of the Indians left to the head of that department. In all this work this commission has been costing the Government nothing for their personal services, although they have rendered in the administration of Indian affairs material aid. It is by their advice that the Secretary of the Interior for four years past has pushed his plan for severalty selection, the only plan, permit me to say here, that, in my judgment, will result in the entire protection of the life and of the property of the Indians. In all this preliminary work of investigation into the needs of the Indian, into his wants and necessities in all the civilizing processes, both in point of education, in the schooling and education of his chil-Indian, into his wants and necessities in all the civilizing processes, both in point of education, in the schooling and education of his children, as well as in his education upon his allotment in agricultural pursuits—I say in all this work these ten men have rendered valuable assistance by their advice and suggestions to the Government. Now, Mr. Chairman, if this board cost a large sum of money, and was in that way a burden upon the Government, I presume that I would vote for the abolishment of it, if something could be devised which would perform the work as economically as they are doing it, upon the principle laid down by old Ben. Franklin that possibly the Government was paying too much money for its whistle.

But it costs the Government nothing, absolutely nothing whatever, for the services of these men. Ten gentlemen, men of character and education; men of high and broad-hearted philanthropy of this country; pure men, without personal or pecuniary motives to actuate country; pure men, without personal or pecuniary motives to actuate them, have from time to time visited the Indian reservations, examined them, looked into the contracts made for supplies and purchases examined the quality of supplies furnished under the contracts, and made suggestions to the Indian Department, the result of which is that to-day the Indian service is on the broad highway, and far forward on the road of advancement, to a greater degree than it has ever before been in the history of this Government.

Mr. POEHLER. Mr. Chairman, there has been so much said upon this question, more than I supposed would have been said or could have been said upon it, that as I was the first one to raise the ques-

The gentleman from New York appeals to this side of the House as if it was a political question. I had no idea that it was or could possibly be considered a political question. I do not know one of these gentlemen on the commission. I do not know whether they are democrats or republicans. I have no doubt they are, and I believe them to be, very nice, well-meaning gentlemen. Agreat deal has been said, too, of their efficiency and how much good they have done to the Indian and to the Government. They probably have. But my experience, and all that I have had in that line, convinces me of a different idea.

I had occasion when I first came here to Washington to make some inquiries about the letting of some cattle contract. The advertisements that invited the proposals for bids stated that no bids would be received for Texas cattle. When I went to the office and looked to see to whom the contract was awarded, I found that it was awarded to see to whom the contract was awarded, I found that it was awarded for a number of cattle to be bought in Texas or for Texas cattle. I said, "How does that come? That is contrary to your advertisement." "Well," says the chief clerk, "it is for northern Texas cattle." Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know much difference between northern and southern Texas cattle. I inquired on whose recommendation the contracts were let and he informed me on the recommendation of these commissioners. So I came to the conclusion recommendation of these commissioners. So I came to the conclusion that in that direction they were not well posted. What good they may have done in other directions I will give them all the credit for. But this is nothing more than the Department should do itself, and I

But this is nothing more than the Department should do itself, and I do not believe that this commission is any longer necessary.

Mr. SCALES. When I was last on the floor I was stating for the information of the House that last year we struck out this appropriation entirely. The House repealed the law. The Senate would only agree to strike out the appropriation, but continued the commission. That was the condition of the last Indian bill as passed. Afterward the Senate put it on the sundry civil appropriation bill. It was a surprise to this House and to the country. I never knew until to-day, though I was present and watched the appropriation bills, that the Government was paying a dollar toward this commission.

How was that done? The Senate and the House had agreed in a committee of conference that the appropriation should be stricken out. It was stricken out; and the bill in that form passed the House and the Senate, was approved by the President, and became the law of the land. And yet, after that, in some way, the appropriation was placed in the sundry civil bill, and passed with it; and I doubt whether twenty men in this House ever heard of it before. How did it come there? I am justified in saying through the efforts of these commissioners themselves, or those acting under them, who were deeply interested in their continuance.

Gentlemen say they are men of influence and character. I admit terested in their continuance.

Gentlemen say they are men of influence and character. I admit it all, and in my opinion these commissioners have been continued for years more on account of their personal influence and high standing than from any good that has been done to the service.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] who is now so zealous for this amendment, last year was equally zealous against it. Has he assigned any good reason for a change? Has he given us any new light? He voted to strike it down. The record is before me, and I know that it was in a great degree owing to his influence in the House that we were enabled to defeat it, but to-day his great influence is on the other side. I do not mean to say he has been improperly influenced. I do not mean to make any such insinuation. I do not believe enced. I do not mean to make any such institution. I do not believe it; but it shows that the gentleman's convictions are short-lived or were hastily formed, and since he has changed he ought at least to give the House a reason, that they may have the benefit of his later information.

I think the time has come when we should have the whole Indian Department made as simple as possible. You have the Secretary of the Interior. Let him superintend the whole. Let him have the asthe Interior. Let him superintend the whole. Let him have the assistance of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and let him have his inspectors and agents if he will, and hold them to a strict and undivided responsibility. I hope the House will not go back on its action of last session. It was taken after due deliberation and discussion, and no sufficient reason has been given to change it.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES]

has stated what occurred in reference to this commission. I will state the history of the matter as I understand it, especially as I had very much to do with it. As is well known, in the Indian appropriation bill of last year there is this provision:

No part of the money appropriated by this act shall be paid or in any way used for the payment of the salaries or expenses of the Indian commissioners provided for by section 2039 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

That was agreed to in the committee of conference on the differences between the two bodies, and it was put in the bill; not repealing the legislation authorizing the commission, but simply omitting the salaries.

Afterward, when the sundry civil bill went from this House to the Senate, they put on a provision appropriating money to pay this commission. The House non-concurred in the amendment. A committee of conference was had. We were near the end of the session, with a difference of many hundreds of thousands of dollars between the two Houses—between seven and eight hundred thousand dollars. There were many matters about which we divided and on which concessions had to be made. The conferees on the part of the House did not feel that they had the absolute right to dictate to the conferees on the part of the Senate. The House conceded many things and the Senate conceded many things, and as a matter of concession the House conceded the provision for the small sum of $10,000 for the Indian commission.

When the committee of conference made its report to this House, June 15, the attention of the House was especially called to Senate amendment No. 106, appropriating $10,000 for the expenses of the Indian commission. The attention of the House was specially called to it, so that the House had the means of knowing exactly what had been agreed upon. The report of the committee was made in exact conformity with the new rules, stating in terms and specifically to this House that that particular appropriation had been agreed to in a spirit of compromise on the part of the House conferees.

Now my friend says that I was one of his warmest supporters in the matter of this commission. About that I do not remember; it is not a matter of very great concern to me. Matters in relation to the Indian warment against the interest and then I have no

Indians were not specially in my charge. I acted then, I have no doubt, as I supposed was right, for that is my general rule here; and I so act to-day. I feel it to be of more importance to do what I think is right than to be consistent. I believe that this commission ought to be continued, and if I have been recorded one hundred and ninetynine times the other way, I shall stand by my convictions now.

Mr. SCALES. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. BLOUNT. I have not the time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have not the time.
Mr. SCALES. Only a moment.
Mr. BLOUNT. My friend ought to know that after having referred to me he should allow me to proceed for five minutes without an interruption. Now, in this matter of visitation of agencies, a single instance which occurred during the last year will illustrate the value of this commission. At that time you had all your machinery, the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and your special agents. Yet under the action of this commission, and of a single member of the commission, a resolution was adopted and an investigation was had. I do not care who knew anything about it, investigation was had. I do not care who knew anything about it, or what anybody had thought or said about it, whether newspapers or anybody else. But under the action of this commission an investigation took place, which to my mind showed a corrupt connivance on the part of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs with a corrupt Indian action and that investigation and the corrupt Indian action and Indian action and Indian Affairs with a corrupt Indian Affairs with a corrupt Indian Affairs Indian Indian Affairs Indian Indian India dian agent, and that investigation resulted in the removal from office of that Commissioner of Indian Affairs. That investigation prevented a great wrong and saved to the Government an amount which no man can estimate.

Mr. HISCOCK. It has been asserted in the course of this discussion that there was some peculiar circumstances at the time the law creating this commission was originally passed which we do not understand, and that, those circumstances no longer existing, the law should be repealed.

Now, I agree with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] upon this question, that this commission was created for no particular occasion; it was created because it was the intention of the Government to change its policy as far as it could toward these Indians; as far as it could to introduce among them civilizing methods; as far as it could to teach them the practices and habits of the white man. There is no one upon this floor who will charge or who has insinnated that great progress has not been made in that direction. The Indians, greatly under the advice and supervision of this commission, have greatly under the advice and supervision of this commission, have made great progress made great progress.

There is no doubt that many Indian wars have been occasioned by precisely the same condition of things which has been so well illustrated by the gentleman from New York, my colleague, [Mr. Chittenbull.] One of the objects of this commission was to prevent the abuses to which he has referred. This commission has now been in existence for twelve years. My friend from Illinois, my colleague on the committee, [Mr. Cannon,] says this commission has done its work well during those twelve years. But he would now wipe it out of existence because perchance in the future it may fail to do its duty. I believe that ten philanthropic men, religious men if you please, may be found in the United States who will do their duty under this law. They have already saved to the Government millions of dollars in preventing fraudulent contracts that might otherwise have been forced upon the Government. With that record in their favor, why should we now depose them and take from them the power with which they are now invested?

The Secretary of the Interior recommends their continuance, in despite of the matter which has been referred to by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER.] I know nothing of the circumstances connected with the matter to which he has referred. I can imagine that there may have been upon that board some eminent stances connected with the matter to which he has referred. I can imagine that there may have been upon that board some eminent man, thoroughly versed in this matter, a poor man who perhaps could not give all his time to this business, and the commission gave to him a compensation as secretary of the commission. Technically that may have been a violation of the law.

But is there any charge made here that the commission did not act in good faith, and that the services they rendered were not valuable to the Government? Every officer of the Government who has spoken upon this question has spoken in favor of the continuance of this commission. The testimony of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is before you, in which he says that the commission has done good work and its members are valuable auxiliaries of the Government. I have had read here a letter from the Secretary of the Intement. I have had read here a letter from the Secretary of the Interior urging the continuance of this commission.

Now, shall we, upon these vague, indefinite charges in which gentlemen have indulged, strike down this commission, without any reason, without any figures or facts being given in favor of so doing? For one, I protest against it.

Mr. WELLS. I trust we will now have a vote.

The question was upon striking out the following paragraph: That all laws and parts of laws creating out the following paragraph: citizens provided for in the act of April 10, 1869, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

And inserting in lieu thereof the following:

For the expenses of the commission of citizens serving without compensation, appointed by the President under the provisions of the fourth section of the act of April 10, 1869, $10,000.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were-ayes 70, noes 61

Mr. WELLS. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. Wells and Mr. Hiscock were ap-

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 87, noes 78.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. WELLS. I give notice that in the House I will call for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Payment of interest on certain abstracted and non-paying State steeks, belonging to the various Indian tribes, and held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, namely.

Mr. WELLS. I move a verbal amendment, to strike out in line 5 the ord "fiscal," and to substitute in line 6 the word "one" for "two."

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 5. That when not required for the purpose for which appropriated, the funds herein provided for the pay of specified employés at any agency may be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the pay of other employés at such agency, but no deficiency shall be thereby created, and, when necessary, specified employés may be detailed for other service when not required for the duty for which they were engaged; and that the several appropriations herein made for millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and other persons, and for various articles provided for by treaty stipulation for the several Indian tribes, may be diverted to other uses for the benefit of the said tribes respectively, within the discretion of the President, and with the consent of said tribes, expressed in the usual manner; and that he cause report to be made to Congress, at its next session thereafter, of his action under this provision.

Mr. HOOKER, (before the reading of the section was concluded.) Mr. Chairman, I rose to address the Chair before the Clerk began the reading of this section. I want to offer an amendment, and I would like to consult the Committee on Appropriations or the gentleman in charge of the bill as to whether the amendment ought to come in at this point or another.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the purpose of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. HOOKER. My purpose is to ask a parliamentary question of the Chair, and to submit to the Committee on Appropriations to determine whether the amendment I have in view ought to come in here or not. If the amendment be deferred till the reading of the bill is concluded, I do not know whether the objection will be made

Mr. WELLS. Will the gentleman state his amendment?
Mr. HOOKER. I will send it to the desk to be read.
Mr. BLOUNT. If it provides for the transfer of the Indian Bureau,

I suggest that by agreement—
Mr. HOOKER. Let the Clerk read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, That from and after-

Mr. WELLS. I make the point of order that the Clerk had only read this section in part; and I insist that the reading of the section must be finished before any amendment can be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. It was stated by the gentleman from Mississippi when he rose to offer the amendment that he addressed the Chair before the Clerk began reading this section.

Mr. HOOKER. If the gentleman from Missouri, who has charge

Mr. WELLS. Let the gentleman offer the amendment after we get through with this section.

Mr. HOOKER. You will not make a point of order?
Mr. WELLS. I have not seen the provision.
Mr. HOOKER, I want to offer this amendment at such point as will suit the Committee on Appropriations.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must decide to which section he will offer the amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. I propose, Mr. Chairman, to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair as to the part of the bill to which this amendment may be properly offered, and I wish to submit the question sub rosa to the Committee on Appropriations to ascertain whether it will meet their approval or not. [Laughter.] Do I understand that the Committee on Appropriations, or the gentleman having this bill in charge, will not make any objection to my offering this amendment after the reading of the hill is compulated? reading of the bill is concluded !

Mr. WELLS. I do not agree to any such understanding.
Mr. HOOKER. Very well. I notify the gentleman, as well as the committee and the chairman, that I shall offer the amendment at the end of the sixth section.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of section 5.

The Clerk also read as follows:

SEC. 6. That all bids for supplies of wheat, corn, flour, feed, oats, beef, bacon, pork, and other provisions for the Indians, and all bids for transportation of such supplies, shall be first opened and the contracts awarded thereon at some suitable place in the Mississippi Valley or in the Missouri River Valley.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order upon this section that it changes existing law and does not decrease expenditures. It is new legislation. I will read what is the provision of law at the present time:

legislation. I will read what is the provision of law at the present time:

Sec. 2083. All merchandise required by any Indian treaty for the Indians, payable after making of such treaty, shall be purchased under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, upon proposals to be received, to be based on notices previously to be given; and all merchandise required at the making of any Indian treaty shall be purchased under the order of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs by such person as he shall appoint. All other purchases on account of the Indians, and all payments to them of money or goods, shall be made by such person as the President shall designate for that purpose.

Sec. 2084. No goods shall be purchased by the Office of Indian Affairs, or its agents, for any tribe, except upon the written requisition of the superintendent in charge of the tribe, and only upon public bids in the mode prescribed by the preceding section.

It is hardly necessary in this connection for me to read Rule XXI, with which we are all so familiar. It will be conceded that at the present time there is no legislation limiting the Secretary of the Interior as to the points at which he is to open bids and the manner in which he is to make advertisement. This is new legislation upon that subject; and new legislation, as a matter of course, changes existing laws.

I will say further, in reference to this point, that this same question arose when the Indian appropriation bill was before the House at its last session. This point was then elaborately discussed by different members and the chairman of the Committee of the Whole then held that a point of order substantially the same as the one I now make was well taken, and ruled out the proposition.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, this same point of order, I will admit, has been made substantially as stated by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK,] but the point of order when originally made and the point as made to-day cannot, in my judgment, be sustained by the rule under any fair principle of interpretation. Rule XXI provides not that new legislation is necessarily out of order. The words "new legislation, but it does provide:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order.

That necessarily presupposes that there is a statute to be changed. It necessarily presupposes that in so far as the proposed provision may act it works a repeal of a certain portion of an existing statute. The only ground upon which the gentleman from New York can sustain the point of order is by the assertion that there being no law on the subject in existence, the new provision changes the condition of things. Well, I admit that the Secretary of the Interior will, if this provision be adopted, find himself directed by a different statute from provision be adopted, find himself directed by a different statute from the one now controlling him; but not a single line or letter of any statute as it now stands will be repealed or affected.

While this point of order has often been made, and I think upon one occasion sustaized, I insist that it is far-fetched and cannot be sustained under a wise and just interpretation of the rule. I insist that a provision proposed as an amendment or as part of a bill cannot be ruled out unless it changes an existing statute so as to make it read differently.

Why, sir, I can find in every appropriation bill new legislation which passes without question—legislation designed to fill a gap not previously filled by law. This is the continual and never-varying purpose of the ordinary provisions in every appropriation bill from beginning to end—to supply a gap in the existing law. There being no law on the subject for the spending of $10 for a certain purpose after the 1st day of July next, it is proposed in the bill to make a new law providing for such an expenditure. You are doing that in every line of your appropriation bills constantly. When any question is raised as to an amendment or as to any portion of an appropriation bill, you apply the rule that there being no statute in existence tion is raised as to an amendment or as to any portion of an appropriation bill, you apply the rule that there being no statute in existence no law is changed. Why, sir, take the very first provision in this bill appropriating $1,000 for the payment of a certain agent at the Warm Springs agency. Why is that put there? Because after July next, when this Congress shall be out of session, there will be no warrant for any officer of the Government paying to that agent a single dollar unless we now provide such a law. Is not that new legislation? Is that any retrenchment of expenditures? Is that in any way inhibited by Rule XXI? Every provision of your appropriation bill is of this character.

And now, then, further than that, Mr. Chairman, admitting the force of the argument made by the centlemen who have raised the point

And now, then, further than that, Mr. Chairman, admitting the force of the argument made by the gentlemen who have raised the point of order, I submit that this comes within the purview of the rule and is permitted by it under that other provision which allows the amendment to be considered in order being germane to the bill and tending to retrench expenditure. It has been said by numerous chairmen that must appear on the face of the amendment, that there must be a reasonable warrant appearing on the face of the subjectmatter under consideration that would lead the average intelligent member to know and believe that retrenchment of expenditure would matter under consideration that would lead the average intelligent member to know and believe that retrenchment of expenditure would follow the provision. And I have it here. It provides that all bids for supplies of wheat, corn, flour, feed, oats, beef, bacon, pork, and other provisions for the Indians, and all bids for the transportation of such supplies, shall be first opened and the contracts awarded thereon at some suitable place in the Mississippi Valley or in the Missouri River Valley. Under the present habit of the Interior Department those bids are opened in New York City. Right out and away from the very center of the beef and pork and grain producing region of the country, the present administration insists on opening region of the country, the present administration insists on opening its bids and making its awards of contracts in the city of New York.

It is a matter of official record, Mr. Chairman, that at the post of Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, an Army ration comprising all the food that a soldier uses can be furnished for a less number of cents than at any other point in the whole of the United States. I urge, then, that this amendment does retrench expenditure, that it is a matter of official record that in that valley there can be laid down these contracts provided for in this clause cheaper than in any other part of the United States. I insist it is clear on the face of this provision that if bids are opened there in the midst of that grain-producing section of the country, and contracts are awarded, those contracts will be let at a lower price than in the city of New York.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Does he think if the provision be not adopted it would prevent Mississippi Valley bidders from competing for the contracts in the city of New York, They can be competitors for these contracts in the city of New York just as well as if the bids were to be opened and the contracts. Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, an Army ration comprising all

York 7 They can be competitors for these contracts in the city of New York just as well as if the bids were to be opened and the contracts let as indicated in this clause.

Mr. HASKELL. I understand that very well. It is also competent under the Post-Office Department for any man to enter a bid for a contract on any little post-route anywhere in the United States.

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. HASKELL. I am also aware that the babit of opening bids in the city of Washington and at no other point brings to this city professional bidders, who invariably secure the contracts; that the far-off bidder does not always receive notice, and that the men here on the ground, thoroughly posted in the machinery, do secure them, and, therefore, that practice does militate against the smaller bidders elsewhere. I wish to say to the gentleman from California that the and, therefore, that practice does militate against the smaller bidders elsewhere. I wish to say to the gentleman from California that the same is true concerning these bids for Indian supplies, that a few professional contractors with the United States Government have been in the habit for years to come to New York City, not engaged in the business either of the production or the sale of grain, or feed, or bacon, but professional contractors, put in their bids and secure the contracts. From every page on the Indian Commissioner's report I can produce item after item of cost of articles specified in this provision for which from 40 to 50 per cent. too much money has been paid. It is for he purpose of opening up this whole matter to a wider range of competition and to allow smaller bidders to come in that this provision has been submitted to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The discussion must be confined to the point of order, and must not extend to the merits of the proposition.

order, and must not extend to the merits of the proposition.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman from Kansas has been discussing the merits of the amendment. I do not propose to do that on the point of order. I think, Mr. Chairman, that section 6 is clearly subject to the point of order as suggested by the gentleman from New York. It certainly changes section 2083 of the Revised Statutes by providing a different place for the opening of bids for Indian supplies. Now, if the Chair should decide this to be in order, then it will also be in order for my colleague from California and myself to offer an amendment that all the bids for Indian supplies for the Pacific coast shall be opened in San Francisco. And we could thus extend this matter to any length. to any length.

I do not see any reason, Mr. Chairman, why this provision should be incorporated into this bill, and without arguing the merits of the proposition I simply desire to submit to the Chair that it does clearly change existing law and should not be permitted in this bill.

Mr. PRICE. I want to say a word in regard to this point of order.

The first thing I wish to say is this: that any ruling of any chairman on this question heretofore ought not to have much bearing now; because the rules we are operating under are not the rules which were in force when previous decisions were rendered.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. It was under this same rule precisely as it is now rulings heretofore have been

Mr. PRICE. A year ago?
Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir.
Mr. PRICE. Then I will come to the other point, as that is but a very small part of what I rose to say. I call the attention of the Chair and of the gentleman from New York to this fact and I quote

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject-matter of the bill—

That this is germane is not disputed-shall retrench expenditures, &c.

Now, if there is anybody in this House who does not believe that Now, if there is anybody in this House who does not believe that this retrenches expenditures, then it will be proper for them to say that the point of order is well taken. But when my friend from California talks about opening these proposals and bids upon the Pacific coast he will have to take charge of the other horn of the dilemma and provide that the Indians shall be moved out or transferred to the Pacific coast, or else his argument will have no weight more than can be derived from the present condition of things. They will have to get their supplies even then from the Mississippi Valley, as they do now.

But another point. The rule goes on to say :

Provided. That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of e committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, &c.

Now, sir, this committee reports this legislation in the bill. The other point the gentleman from New York makes the point of order upon comes here from the committee. The point of order that was decided before upon this question, about a year ago, was not based upon matter which came from the committee. The very point that upon matter which came from the committee. The very point that you make to-day on this bill, the very thing you wish to rule out, comes from the committee, and that is not a point which arose before when the decision was made; so that in ruling upon this point of order to-day upon this question as now presented, you rule upon a point that is based upon entirely different circumstances from that to which reference is here made. The amendment comes here from the which reference is here made. The amendment comes here from the committee, and the rule specially provides in terms that, coming from the committee, it shall be in order. This refers, of course, to the committee having charge of the bill; but I will read the language of the rule, which is explicit. It declares:

That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter.

That is, this committee, this Appropriations Committee, having charge of this matter of money appropriated for the Indians and all questions arising therein, and that committee reports this very item questions arising therein, and that committee reports this very item in the bill. What other committee could report it? Under the rules, this is the only committee which has jurisdiction of the subject-matter. I think, therefore, the point of order is clearly not well taken. I contend that this section of the bill, if it be an amendment to the law as the gentleman from New York claims, comes from the committee under Rule XXI, which provides in terms as I have read, that coming from a committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and is therefore in order. and is therefore in order.

Mr. PAGE. After points of order have been reserved upon a bill reported from a committee to the House, will the gentleman from Iowa contend that the committee reporting it, simply from the fact of having reported the bill and having it under control, can report amendments thereto which are in conflict with existing law?

Mr. PRICE. I have merely read the rule. The gentleman can draw his own conclusions. The rule expressly declares that it shall be in order, provided that it comes from the committee having charge of the subject-matter; also, that it shall be in order further to amend the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. Amend it how?

Mr. PRICE. It may be amended in divers ways. If it reduces expenditures, then the point of order is not well taken. I do not believe anybody will claim but that it does retrench expenditures. The gentleman from Kansas has sufficiently illustrated that point.

Mr. HISCOCK. One word more upon the question of this point of order, and more especially in reply to the suggestion which has been made by the gentleman from Kansas. To me, I am sure, it is a very novel idea that when you add to a statute a provision which restricts novel idea that when you add to a statute a provision which restricts the power of a Department—limits its power, narrows it—and points out for it certain steps which it shall take, that that does not change existing law, and is not subject to this point of order. This is a question which may arise many times in the proceedings in this House or in Committee of the Whole. I say that this point of order in principle has been decided at least a dozen times by chairmen of the various Committees of the Whole of this House, and it has been held on every occasion that when you extended the operation of a statute—moment to allow the Chair a question?
The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York yield a moment to allow the Chair a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to inquire whether it has ever been decided that where an amendment or provision simply enacting new legislation which does not change existing law and does not reach the question of retrenchment or increase of expenditures either, has such been held to be obnoxious to the rule?

Mr. HISCOCK. There a distinct recollection.

Mr. HISCOCK. I have a distinct recollection—

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state his question more clearly. Where a provision makes new legislation, but does not change existing law, has there been a holding that it is obnoxious to the point of ing law, has there been a holding that it is obnoxious to the point of order under the rule?

Mr. HISCOCK. My recollection is clear upon that point that it has been distinctly passed upon, and by no less a distinguished gentleman than Mr. Carlisle, of Kentucky, holding that whenever you pass an affirmative provision it of necessity changes existing law. That follows as a matter of course. It adds to the law as existing. But in this case, as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, if a statute which points out to the Secretary of the Interior the course he is to pursue, which for him is an affirmative guide, and this statute places further restriction upon it, it adds to the statute which they propose to amend. But, as I have said, I think the doctrine has been held to the limits which I have stated, that where there is an affirmative statute, and where the whole matter is left within the discreative statute, and where the whole matter is left within the discretion of the officer, the making of a new provision is a change of exist-

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a question?

question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. HASKELL. If that argument is to hold good literally and fairly—I admit that there has been a decision of that sort made by one chairman of the Committee of the Whole—but if that is to be held to rigidly, that in the absence of any legislation a new affirmative proposition changes existing law, I want to ask the gentleman from New York if there is a single item of appropriation in the bill under consideration that is not new legislation, and in the same way obnoving to the rule?

obnoxious to the rule?

Mr. HISCOCK. The rule itself provides for appropriations to carry into effect existing laws.

Mr. HASKELL. I admit that; but as carrying out the idea I was

Mr. HASKELL. I admit that; but as carrying out the idea I was enunciating.

Mr. HISCOCK. And, Mr. Chairman, the object of the enactment of this rule was to limit the Appropriations Committee to providing the means of carrying out the statutes as spread upon the books. But any legislation is new legislation, and this Appropriations Committee had before it but one work; that work was to provide the money with which the Government could give effect to statutes which were already on our statute-book. If new laws were to be enacted they were to emanate from the proper committees.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this question gentlemen have wandered away, as I believe, from the point of order and to some extent have discussed this question upon the merits. Such has not been my intention, and I shall not therefore continue this discussion on the point of order any further than it seems to be necessary to meet the suggestions which have been made.

I remember that when this question was up a letter came here from the Secretary of the Interior, and he said that in the interest of economy it was necessary that a large number of the bids should be opened in the city of New York, because in the main the supplies furnished to the Indians had to be purchased in the city of New York, and he said hidden wishes a reliable to the large that the city of New York, and he said bidders might as well send their bids there as elsewhere; and he said if you made it incumbent upon him to open the bids elsewhere than in New York, you made it necessary for him to organize a new clerical force to be sent to a different point for that purpose, and the result of legislation of this kind would be to provide two clerical forces, one to be sent to the city of New York and another to be sent to Saint Louis, if you please, another to be sent to Chicago if that place were selected; and if the amendment which my friend from California [Mr. Pack] suggested should be adouted another from California [Mr. Page] suggested should be adopted, another corps of clerks must be sent to San Francisco for the purpose of opening these bids. The Secretary also stated that in his judgment it was a matter of no consequence to the bidders where the bids were opened, but it was of consequence to the Government they should be opened at some point, and that point should be the one where the greater number of supplies were received, and for that reason he had selected New York.

Now, I have referred to this because it bears upon the suggestion which has been made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.] A letter which is in the hands of one of my colleagues of the committee can be read for the information of the House on that question. It is there stated there would of necessity be an increase of expenditure if this provision is adopted; and it bears out the suggestion made by the Secretary on this question that the present system is no hardship on the bidder, for it is a fact which can be established that the bidders in the main for this kind of merchandise are from the West—Saint Louis, Chicago, &c.

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. HOOKER rose.

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. HOOKER rose.

Mr. HOOKER. I give way to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest the gentleman from Mississippi should unite with me in beating the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. HOOKER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I go with the committee whenever I think it is right.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to say that section 6, which is now under consideration by the committee, is not the committee's proposition at all. The sickness of the gentleman who has in charge the funding bill had much to do with this bill heing hastened in the House. all. The sickness of the genteman who has in charge the landing bill had much to do with this bill being hastened in the House; and I violate no secret of the committee when I say that when this provision was reached it was unanimously agreed by the committee we would allow the bill to go into the House simply that it might be printed, availing ourselves of the interval between the time the bill to the House and its consideration in order that we might get went into the House and its consideration, in order that we might get information on this subject. I do not care to contradict the record. I am willing that the record should stand. But it is just to each individual member of the committee that this statement should be made. This state of things grew out of the necessities by which they were then surrounded. Therefore this substantially is not a proposition of the committee. It was allowed to come in because it was the unanimous judgment of the committee that a point of order would dispose of it, and therefore the committee would lose nothing.

Mr. HOOKER. In other words, that the point of order would be decided against the committee?

Mr. BLOUNT. I cannot answer my friend from Mississippi just

Mr. HOOKER. Then I will make another speech.
Mr. BLOUNT. The proposition in section 6 is as follows:

That all bids for supplies of wheat, corn, flour, feed, cats, beef, bacon, pork, and other provisions for the Indians, and all bids for transportation of such supplies, shall be first opened and the contracts awarded thereon at some suitable place in the Mississippi Valley or in the Missouri River Valley.

It distinctly requires that at one of two points in the Mississippi Valley or in the Missouri River Valley the bids shall be opened for the various articles of merchandise designed for the Indian service.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a single question? I want to know what is the boundary of the Mississippi Valley in the estimation of the Committee on Appropriations. I want to know whether it takes in Ohio?

Mr. BLOUNT. Ohio takes in everything else.

Mr. WELLS. It takes in the whole country outside of New York.

Mr. KEIFER. I asked my question in perfect good faith, for I was afraid the Committee on Appropriations had not defined that matter.

Mr. BLOUNT. As I have already said, the proposition confines the opening of these bids to one of two points, one in the Mississippi Valley and one in the Missouri Valley. The question now raised by my friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is that this provision proposes a change of existing law.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can entertain but one point of order

Mr. HOOKER. I want to confine the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to the point of order, and not to the merits of the question; because when the question comes to be considered on its merits I will have something to offer.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend from Mississippi [Mr. Hooker] talks with so much license in debate that I did not think he would attempt with so much license in debate that I did not think he would attempt to prevent my speaking upon this matter.

Mr. HOOKER. I always speak in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman upon the point of order, first, whether this provision will change existing law; and, second, whether if it so changes existing law it comes within the provisions of the rule of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I should have come to that already but for the interruptions of my friend from Mississippi. I was stating first the proposition in the bill, explaining that it confines the Secretary of the Interior to one of two particular points in connection with the opening of the bids. My friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has raised the question that that changes existing law. Now what law does it change? does it change?

My friend from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] assumes that there is no law upon the subject, and therefore there is no existing law to be changed. If he were correct in that assumption, then it might be that the point of order made by my friend from New York [Mr. Hiscock] would fail. But the proposition urged by the gentleman from New York is correctly urged, that in all matters in relation to Indian supplies section 2083 of the Revised Statutes provides that it shall be done in accordance with regulations established by the Secretary of the Interior. That section gives to those regulations all the force of law. By virtue of that section his regulations are the law of the case, as regards the opening of bids, and to those regulations all must bow as

Mr. HASKELL rose.
Mr. BLOUNT. Not now. That section 2083, giving the Secretary of the Interior power to make these regulations, will be so changed by this provision of the bill now under consideration that he may not make regulations as to where these bids shall be opened, or if he does make them they must designate one of two places. It seems to me, therefore, most clear that this provision does change existing law.

Now, as to the question of expenditures, there is nothing in the proposition itself to show that there will be a reduction. If the Chair desires to go outside of this provision to ascertain in regard to that matter, then I trust we shall have an opportunity to present the facts as to whether it does or does not increase expenditures. After the intimation from the Chair, I certainly shall not go beyond the strict limits of this question of order.

Mr. HASKELL. Will the gentleman now allow me to ask him a

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to read one line in the section to which he has referred which provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall open anywhere the bits. for contracts, or one line which says that this matter of opening the bids shall be at his discretion, or a line that contains one word about where the bids shall be opened. If the gentleman will read closely he will find general provisions regulating the action of the Secretary of the Interior, but not a line as to the place of opening of the bids or making the awards; not a line.

Mr. BLOUNT. In answer to the gentleman I will read the section:

All merchandise required by any Indian treaty for the Indians, payable after making of such treaty, shall be purchased under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, upon proposals to be received, to be based on notices previously to be

Mr. HASKELL. We do not propose to change the law in regard to proposals.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend will allow me to answer his question before he interrupts me.

And all merchandise required at the making of any Indian treaty shall be purchased under the order of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs by such person as he shall appoint.

And then general power is given to the Secretary of the Interior to make regulations in regard to Indian affairs as well as in regard to other matters. That power has never been questioned. Under this section the Secretary of the Interior has the right to make these regulations, and he has uniformly made them—made them by virtue this law and nothing else.

Mr. FINLEY. Before the gentleman sits down will be permit me to ask him a question f
Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.
Mr. FINLEY. I wish to ask the gentleman if he holds that because the law gives to the Secretary of the Interior the right to make regulations have been been separated by the secretary of the Interior the right to make regulations. lations, when he has made such regulations do they become such a law that we cannot repeal them or make different regulations on an appropriation bill?

Mr. BLOUNT. The question is now upon the point of order. We can change any existing law, following the mode prescribed in the rules of this House. This is a different thing.

Mr. ROBINSON. Upon this question of order the Chair seems to inger upon one point, and this may be valuable perhaps as a precedent.

Mr. SIMON TON. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. I wanted to say but a few words.

Mr. SIMONTON. I will detain you but a moment.

Mr. SIMONTON. Mr. ROBINSON.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will yield for a question.
Mr. ROBINSON. I will yield for a question.
Mr. ROBINSON. I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] this question: whether under existing law these bids may not now be opened in New York; and if the provision under consideration shall be incorporated into this bill and become law, can the Secretary of the Interior then have these bids opened in New York:

York; and if not, what is the reason?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, as I was about to say, it seems to me that the decision made on this point at this time may be taken as a precedent. Yet we are not without precedents, if I recollect the cases as they have come before the House. It is said that no such case as this has arisen; but it seems to me that many times such cases have arisen. Suppose that in the Indian appropriation bill it were proposed to authorize the appointment of an assistant commissioner proposed to authorize the appointment of an assistant commissioner of Indian Affairs. That is a new provision; it does not in terms change existing law, but it creates a new office. Over and over again such an amendment has been excluded because in principle and in spirit it would change existing law. As I understand, the purpose of this rule, odious as it may be, (I am not discussing that,) is to prevent legislation upon appropriation bills, unless that legislation shall extends a yanditures. retrench expenditures.

Now, the provision in question is in the line of the illustration I have used, is new legislation, and therefore a change of existing law; because, as my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Simonton] implies in his interrogatory, the Secretary of the Interior may now require bids to be opened in the city of New York, or Boston, or Mobile; but if this provision be enacted his discretion in this matter is taken away. Therefore the law as to him is changed; he must confine his action in this respect to a certain portion of the territory of the United States, the Mississippi Valley.

My friend from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] argues that this amendment retrenches expenditures. How does it retrench expenditures? There is nothing now to prevent contractors coming from the Mississippi Valley to submit their bids in Washington and have them opened in the city of New York. Suppose that you receive the bids in the Mississippi Valley; does that necessarily transfer all the contractors to the Mississippi Valley; does it prevent any man living away from the Mississippi Valley from making a bid? If not, then your provision does not necessarily retrench expenditures. In fact I can see that when you go outside of a great metropolis you may be perhaps going in the you go outside of a great metropolis you may be perhaps going in the you go outside of a great metropolis you may be perhaps going in the direction of waste.

The provision of the rule is not that the amendment shall tend to reduce expenditures, but that it shall on its face retrench expenditures. There is no safety if the Chair rules otherwise.

Mr. HOOKER. I have listened to the argument of my classical friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] with a great deal of pleasure; and I have heard what the gentleman from Mississippi has had to say in reply. These gentlemen, I venture to suggest, are quarreling about trifles; yet I know that in controversies of this kind trifles are sometimes the flowers with which the combatants wreathe their brows.

The CHAIRMAN. So much time has already been consumed upon this discussion that the Chair is unwilling to hear any comments on the merits of the amendment.

the merits of the amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. I restrict myself to the limitation which the Chair lays down, for I recognize the propriety of his ruling. Upon point of order I want to read the concluding section of this bill:

That all bids for supplies of wheat, corn, flour, feed, oats, beef, bacon, pork, and other provisions for the Indians, and all bids for transportation of such supplies, shall be first opened and the contracts awarded thereon at some suitable place in the Mississippi Valley or in the Missouri River Valley.

The point of order, as I understand, is that this provision changes existing law. What is the existing law? I undertake to say that there is no law upon the subject. The truth is that these bids ought to be opened in all the markets overt to our country. These supplies ought to be purchased in whatever market may be the cheapest. I concede the commercial greatness of the city of New York; but the supplies to be furnished under this bill are not luxurious articles belonging to the highly civilized life of a great metronolis. Then belonging to the highly civilized life of a great metropolis. They are simple in their character and are a part of the products of our great western valleys. And when you come to the question of supplies you must remember that the great river which flows through those valleys drains twenty-four States and six Territories, embracing seven-tenths of the population of the United States. While you may have in the great metropolis of New York a money center arbitrary in its power, vast in its influence, yet, whatever may be your commerce, magnificent as it is, your ships, which once carried on a great carrying trade, (though now, under the policy which has prevailed in this Government, we have sunk to a fifth-rate power,) would be in this Government, we have sunk to a fifth-rate power,) would be eaten by the barnacles of the sea and your magnificent docks, lining the Atlantic coast from New York to Galveston, would be without a ship but for the great agricultural interests of the Mississippi Valley, for it is there that you must look for the bread and meat that constitute the support of humanity. Commerce, it is sometimes said, is king; but, sir, commerce would be a monarch without a single subject to pay obedience to him unless agriculture brought to the seaboard the fruits of the earth sown and reaped in due season, giving commerce some subject with which to deal. commerce some subject with which to deal.

Therefore, when you are making these contracts for supplies, why should you not give the great grain-growing region of the world a chance at least to bid for them against New York with all her commerce?

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. PRICE. I have no argument to make on this point of order, but I want to answer my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Robinson] by asking him another question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair trusts that the gentleman from Iowa will not engage in a controversy with the gentleman from Massachusetts upon anything except strictly the point of order.

Mr. PRICE. I will confine myself to the point of order. The gen Mr. PRICE. I will confine myself to the point of order. The gentleman from Massachusetts controverts the proposition that this provision will reduce expenditures. I contend that it will do so; and the only argument I am going to make is to ask the gentleman this question: If he wanted to buy a supply of corn, oats, beef, or pork, would be rather buy such supplies in the Mississippi Valley or in the city of New York, if they were to be used in the Mississippi Valley?

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me answer that question by saying to the gentleman that although I might make the contract to purchase in the city of New York, yet I might have the contract.

Mr. PRICE. Yes; where it is grown.

Mr. ROBINSON. Therefore I can contract in the city of New York for some product of the gentleman's own State, to be delivered in that State. I could as well contract for it in the State of California.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not propose to consume the time of the committee at any great length on this point of order. As I understand it, the point made on this sixth section of the bill, and as it is crystallized in the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts, is that under existing law the Secretary has a discretion in directing where the bids may be opened, that the law places it in his sound discretion. The point now made, as it is well stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts, is that by directing the bids to be opened in the Missis-Massachusetts, is that by directing the bids to be opened in the Mississippi Valley puts it beyond the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. I understand that to be the gentleman's point, that we put it beyond the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior by directing the bids to be opened at a certain place, and that, consequently, it would thereby be obnoxious to the rule, which says, "nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment changing existing law be in order except such as, being germane," &c.

The Chair will observe that the language used is "change existing law." The gentleman claims by his reasoning that the change of a law." The gentleman claims by his reasoning that the change of a rule or regulation of the Department or taking away from the Secretary of the Interior discretion is a change of existing law. I do not believe that is a fair construction of this rule, for the rule says

"change of existing law."

Now, what is existing law? It is a statute upon your statute-books passed by both Houses and approved by the President of the United States. A rule of the Department may be changed by the Department itself, but a change of existing law requires the concurrence of the two Houses of Congress and the approval of the President. We simply provide in this sixth section that the Secretary of the Interior shall cause these bids to be opened at certain places. was well stated by the gentleman from Kansas, it changes no word or line of any law upon our statute-books. Nowhere do we read on our statute-books in reference to bids for contracts where the Secretary of the Interior shall cause them to be opened. In New York, Louisiana, Mississippi, Kansas, or anywhere in the United States, under existing law, he may cause the bids to be opened.

Now, does an amendment to an appropriation bill directing he shall open them at certain places change existing law, or does it simply take away from him a discretion? and is the taking away of a discretion from the Secretary a change of existing law within the purview of this rule? I think not, sir. The committee simply adds to the law, but does not change it.

law, but does not change it.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Any further discussion of the point of order is entirely fruitless, as the Chair has reached a conclusion which he desires to announce to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HISCOCK. Before this is done, I desire in connection with my remarks to print some letters to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair bears no objection.

The letters are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS, Washington, April 16, 1880.

OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,

Washington, April 16, 1830.

Sir: In reply to your verbal inquiry, I have to state that at the last annual letting of supplies for the Indian service twenty-two bids for flour were received. Contracts were awarded to P. H. Parshall, representing Lord & Williams, Arizona; L. Mayer, Colorado; N. W. Wolls, Nebraska; F. J. Kiesel, Idaho; T. C. Power, Chicago and Montana.

For beef, there were thirty-three bids. Contracts were awarded to R. D. Hunter, Saint Louis; L. Zeckendorf, Arizona; T. D. Burns, New Mexico; Blossom & Clay, Indian Territory; J. N. High, Ohio and Idaho; F. J. Kiesel, Idaho; P. H. Kelly, Saint Paul; E. S. Newman, Saint Louis; Z. Staab, Santa Fé; W. A. Parshall, New York, for Arizona; M. C. Murdock, Missouri; L. Spiegelberg, New Mexico; W. P. Noble, Wyoming; T. C. Power, Chicago and Montana; N. P. Ciark, Saint Paul.

For corn, barley, and beans there were twenty-four bidders. Contracts were awarded to P. H. Kelly, Saint Paul; D. Wing, Chicago; Z. Staab, New Mexico; L. Spiegelberg, New Mexico; Levi Wilson, Kansas; A. C. Davis, Iowa; L. Huning, New Mexico; J. Austrian, Saint Paul; L. Zeckendorf, New York and Arizona; W. A. Parshall, for Arizona parties; R. C. Haywood, Kansas; W. G. Rates, Iowa, For bacon there were twelve bidders, of which A. Fowler, of New York and Kansas, and W. R. Merriam, of Saint Paul, were the successful bidders.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. E. TROWBRIDGE,

Hon. James H. Blount,

R. E. TROWBRIDGE,

Hon. JAMES H. BLOUNT,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, April 16, 1880.

Sin: In compliance with your request of this date for a statement of facts relative to the letting of contracts for goods, supplies, &c., for the Indian service, and of the practicability of letting those for subsistence stores at some point in the West, I have the honor to make the following reply:

It is the custom each year, as soon after the appropriation for this bureau for the ensuing fiscal year has become a law, to prepare advertisements for publication in the most prominent newspapers of the country, inviting proposals for furnishing the articles needed for the use of the Indian Department, as required by section 3709 of the Revised Statutes. All sections of the country are duly advised in this way of the time, place, and requirements of the Department, advertisements being published in Arizona, New Mexico, Montana, Colorado, Idaho, Wyoming, Kansas, Indian Territory, Dakota, Iowa, Minnesota, and the principal cities of the East and West.

cers of the Department charged with the duty of attending to such business and a corps of clerks to perform the necessary clerical work, as well as delay the letting of contracts for many articles which under any circumstances have to be bought in the East.

The experiment of awarding contracts in the West was tried by this office in 1876, when proposals were opened at Saint Louis for subsistence supplies and transportation for the fiscal year 1877. The records of the office show that no more advantageous terms were secured by the Department in this case over previous or subsequent years, while much time was lost and great additional expense incurred. I am therefore of the opinion that such a course should not be adopted, and trust that the motion offered in the House yesterday looking to that end may not prevail.

Very respectfully,

R. E. TROWBRIDGE.

R. E. TROWBRIDGE.

The CHAIRMAN. The question as to whether this was introduced in the bill on the part of the majority of the Committee on Appropriations or not is not material to the point at issue. The rule forbids the insertion of an obnoxious provision, whether it comes from the committee or only a single member of the House.

There are three conditions in the clause of the rule under consideration which should be noticed: one, that the amendment or provision should be germane; second, that it should retrench expenditures, and, third, change existing law. This section unquestionably is germane to the subject-matter of the bill. The Chair is of the opinion, however, that it does not retrench expenditures or affect them either however, that it does not retrench expenditures or affect them either way. The bids may be received and opened as cheaply in New York as in Saint Louis or any other city in the Union. It therefore becomes very material to determine whether it changes existing law. The statute which has been presented by the gentleman from New York leaves it entirely within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to designate where the proposals, &c., shall be opened. There is no limitation upon his discretion in this regard. If, however, this section should be adopted, the power and discretion of the Secretary of the Interior would be limited to points in the Mississippi and Missouri Valleys. The Chair is therefore of opinion that the enactment of this provision would change the existing law. If, however, the section did not change existing law in any particular, but simply made new legislation, no matter whether it retrenched expenditure or not, being germane to the bill, the Chair would hold it to be in order. The language of the rule is explicit, that the provision must change existing law. The Chair, however, is of the opinion it does change existing law, for the reason mentioned, that it places additional limitations upon the present legal authority of the Secretary of the Interior, and therefore holds the point of order to be well taken, and rules the section out.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill. however, that it does not retrench expenditures or affect them either

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 6 by striking out the words "shall be first opened and the contracts awarded" and insert in lieu thereof the words "shall be simultaneously opened in all the newspapers in the eastern country and all newspapers in the Mississippi Valley."

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the same point of order upon that amendment, and the additional one that there is no sixth section to be amended.

Mr. HOOKER. Why not?
Mr. HISCOCK. Because it has been ruled out.
Mr. HOOKER. Upon the point of order, then, I desire to say a

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that, the section having been stricken out, this amendment, or proposed amendment, cannot, in the nature of things, be in order to that section. Does the gentleman desire to offer this as an additional section or as an amend-

Mr. HOOKER. As an amendment to the sixth section.

Mr. HOOKER. As an amendment to the sixth section.
Mr. HISCOCK. But that section has already been ruled out.
Mr. HOOKER. Then I move it as an additional section.
Mr. HISCOCK. Then, if the gentleman suggests that it be offered and as an additional section, I make the same point of order upon it.
The CHAIRMAN. In so far as the right to offer an additional section to the bill is concerned, the Chair holds that it is in order to do so at this time. But as to whether the subject-matter of this amendment itself is in order, the Chair will not determine until it has again been read.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let it be read again, then, for a ruling.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the amendment is obnoxious to the point of order made by the gentleman from New York.

The section having been stricken out, there is nothing left of it to amend.

Mr. HOOKER. Then I offer an additional section to the bill, which I hope the gentleman from New York will not make a point of order upon.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1881, the management of Indian affairs be, and the same is hereby, transferred to the War Department.

Mr. WELLS. I make a point of order upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WELLS. The point of order that I make is, that it is a proposition to transfer the control of the Indian service to the Army, and to that extent that it is not germane to an appropriation bill. This is simply a bill which proposes to make appropriations for the subsistence of the Indians, and for other purposes in connection therewith; while that section, as suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi, attempts to transfer the whole matter to the control of the Army, another branch of the Government.

Mr. HOOKER. In response to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri, I desire to say that my friend from Missouri [Mr. Frost] will present the question at my request, and I may have occasion to ask the attention of the committee to some supplementary remarks upon the same point after he has concluded.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Chairman, this question which is now presented happens to be no new one. It has been, I believe, repeatedly passed upon by chairmen of the various Committees of the Whole in this House when the question has been brought up here. The most recent adjudication thereon which has been brought to my attention was on June 6, 1876, when the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Springer,] I believe, occupied the chair.

After consulting the various precedents on this question, he recited a lengthy opinion, which covers about two columns of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, closing with the following language:

That the section under consideration is new legislation, changing existing law, is admitted; but the rule, as amended at this session, expressly provides that such new legislation may be in order in a general appropriation bill, provided it be germane to the subject-matter of the bill and shall retrench expenditures. The section under consideration, in the opinion of the Chair, meets both these requirements, and is therefore in order.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the rule as it obtained then is, I believe, precisely similar to the rule under which we are acting at present. The question comes up under two points: first, as to the germaneness of the proposition, and, secondly, as to the question whether it does or does not retrench expenditures.

As to the question of germaneness, it seems to me to be one that no one can dispute. The subject-matter is undoubtedly the same. As one can dispute. The subject-matter is undoubtedly the same. As to the question of retrenching expenditures, if we look solely at that one proposition in the adoption of this amendment, we will find that it will result in the dismissal of the present force of Indian agents, with a curtailment of all of the salaries and perquisites which are now allowed to these officers, which alone will work a large reduction of expenditures, because it will not be necessary to offer any additional salaries to the officers of the United States who may be substituted in their places. Resting, therefore, the question upon the precedents already established and upon the reasons adduced therefor, which are too lengthy to quote in full, I trust the Chair will rule that the amendment is both germane as relating to the subject-matter and as tending to reduce expenditures, and therefore in order under both points. both points.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, the point of order raised by the gen-

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, the point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri upon my left has been overruled at preceding sessions of this Congress; and when that point of order is decided by the Chair, I simply ask now to be recognized to make another point of order which I know will lie against this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question presented by the point of order is not a new one. It has been passed upon twice: in June, 1876, by the then chairman of the Committee of the Whole, [Mr. Springer,] and again on April 18, 1880, by the then chairman, [Mr. WHITHORNE.] In both instances the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration and similar amendments were offered. For this reason the Chair does not deem it necessary to make a statement of the points involved. does not deem it necessary to make a statement of the points involved, but will follow the precedents established by the rulings referred to and hold that the point of order is not well taken. The Chair will cause the opinion of Mr. Springer to be printed in the Record with his ruling

The CHARMAN. At the sitting of the committee for the consideration of this bill on Saturday last a point of order was raised by the honorable gentleman from Iowa [Mr. McCrary] on section 2 of the original bill, which section transfers the management and control of Indian affairs from the Interior to the War Department. The point of order was stated by the gentleman raising it to be this: that the section proposes new legislation, and that it does not appear on the face of the record that it will retrench expenditures. The decision of the Chair upon this question of order was reserved until the committee should again resume the consideration of the bill. The Chair will now submit his decision.

Since the amendment to Rule 120 of this House, which was adopted January 17 of this session, there has been considerable discussion as to its interpretation, and several rulings have been made upon it. In view of the exhaustive arguments which have been made upon the rule as amended, and the important ruling thereon by the honorable Speaker of the House on the 28th of April, the Chair could hardly err in the decision of the point of order now raised. The rule has been so often quoted that it is scarcely necessary to again read it, as it is doubtless familiar to every member. But as this question is in many respects similar to that decided by the Speaker on the 28th of April, the Chair has given the subject most serious consideration, and therefore asks the indulgence of the committee in again reading the rule:

the Speaker on the 28th of April, the Chair has given the subject most serious consideration, and therefore asks the indulgence of the committee in again reading the rule:

"No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures."

This rule has for its object the exclusion from appropriation bills of subjects of general legislation. No provision reported in such bill or amendment thereto which changes existing law is in order, except it be germane to the subject-matter of the bill and retrenches expenditures.

Whether a particular provision be germane to the subject-matter or not is a question which will generally admit of little doubt, and in this case it seems to be admitted that the section under consideration does not contravene the rule; for this bill relates exclusively to Indian affairs, and the section under consideration, taken in connection with the other provisions thereof, completely disposed of the whole subject. The section is in harmony with the other provisions of the bill, and, considered as a whole, a system of Indian control and management is provided, taken in connection with existing laws and treaties, which is complete in itself, effective in its operation, and not dependent upon other or further legislation. The section is therefore undoabtedly germane to the subject matter of the bill.

But how shall the Chair determine whether a particular provision of a bill or a proposed amendment thereto does retrench expenditures? Two rules for the determination of this question have been suggested: First. That the Chair may hear arguments, consider estimates, compare official reports, and from all the

Does this section, then, upon which the question of order has been raised, by its own force and the other provisions of this bill, retrench expenditures? The section is as follows, and it has evidently been drawn with great care by the committee.

"SEC. 2. That the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby abolished, and the salary heretofore paid to such officers respectively shall cease of superintendents of Indian affairs, clerks to the same, of agents and special agents, interpreters, inspectors, and all other employes of the Indian Bureau are hereby abolished; and the salary heretofore paid to such officers respectively shall cease; and the duties now intrusted to and performed by said officers of every kind and description shall be performed by officers, soldiers, and employes of the Army under the direction of the Secretary of War; and they shall receive no additional pay by reason of the performance of the duties aforenamed thus transferred to them other than the pay they may receive as officers and employes of the Army; and the Secretary of War shall assign them their duties in connection with the supervision, control, and management of Indian affairs under such regulations as the Presidentmay prescribe: Provided, That the execution of all laws and parts of laws applicable to the management and control of Indian affairs and of matters arising out of Indian relations is hereby transferred to and shall exercise the same authority in the control of all Indian affairs heretofore had by the Secretary of the Interior; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

If this section were in the words of section 4 of the legislative, executive, and indicial appropriation bill, which section the Speaker ruled out of that bill, the Chair world have but one course to pursue, and his decision would be simply a realimation of that of the Speaker. But there is a material difference in the sections. The objectionable section of the legislative, executive, the necessity of any further legislation whatever. It is true that some regulations are to be prescribed by the President and others by the Secretary of War; but the prescribing of such regulations is not legislation, but mere matter of detail, the regulation of which is conferred in similar cases upon all the heads of Departments. But the section goes further and ab solutely abolishes a large number of offices and discontinues the salaries thereof; and it provides that the officers, soldiers, and employés of the Army shall perform the duties of the persons heretofore filling such offices without additional compensation.

Here, then, is manifestly and, by the very terms of the provision itself, in the light of existing law, a large reduction of expenditures. The Chair will take official cognizance of the fact that the law as it exists appropriates for the current year, for the salaries and expenses of the officers and agents, whose offices and positions are abolished by this section, over two hundred thousand dollars; and that this bill appropriates in the aggregate about fourteen million dollars less than was appropriated for the same purposes for the current year. Considering the vast number of offices abolished by the section under consideration, it is evident that this transfer of the management of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department contributes largely to the general reduction of expenditures by the bill. At least the Chair may safely infer from this fact that the other provisions of the bill have not increased expenditures in consequence of the large reduction thereof by the second section of the bill.

But it has been argued with much plausibility that the Chair cannot foresee what increased appropriations may be necessary in the future in order to support and pay the Army, on account of the increased duties imposed upon its officers, soldiers, and employés by this section. And that, in consequence of war or other unforseen emergency, or of the alleged impossibility of the present mili

Mr. WELLS. I move that the committee do now rise. Mr. HASKELL. Before that motion is submitted I desire to be recognized, as I have already asked the Chair to be recognized, to submit this point, that under section 4 of the twenty-first rule it is not in order to consider as an amendment to a pending bill subject-matter which embraces the substance of bills already pending before the committees or the House. The proposition submitted here to be incorporated in this bill is precisely the subject-matter and the substance of at least two bills which are now pending before the committees of this House.

Mr. FINLEY. One word. I desire to make the point on the gen-tleman, that when a point of order is made on a bill and the Chair has decided it, that involves all points of order. Several MEMBERS. "No." "No."

Mr. FINLEY. Oh, yes. It is then res adjudicata.
Mr. HASKELL. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that I asked recognition to make a point of order before the other point of order was decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the titles of the bills sent up by the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL.]
The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 2484) to transfer the office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department.
A bill (H. R. No. 3439) to transfer the office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to inquire when the decision was made on the strength of which the Chair holds this amendment is not in

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Frost] has the decision before him and will answer the question.

Mr. FROST. The decision appears in the Congressional Record of June 6, 1876.

Mr. HISCOCK. It was a decision made in 1876 under an entirely different rule. But, as I understand, this proposition was made as an amendment offered to the same bill of last session, and the chairman, under the rule as it stands to-day, ruled the other way and ruled the

mr. HASKELL. I desire to state, if I am permitted—
Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman will allow me a moment I wish to add just this: the question was reserved by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole for consideration during the evening. The committee rose during the pendency of the question and the decision was announced the next morning.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to state that the point of order that the amendment was not germane was overruled; that the point of order that it did not retrench expenditures was overruled; and the amendment was ruled in order. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] was in the chair. I made those two points myself, first, that the amendment was not germane; second, that it did not retrench expenditures; and the Chair overruled both. But on one of the bills now in the hands of the chairman of the committee he ruled under section 4 of Rule XXI that the amendment did embrace the substance of a bill before the House; and he therefore ruled it out of order. That is the exact history of it. I know it for I raised the point of order against the amendment myself.

Mr. FROST. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to have the contents of those two bills read that the committee may know whether the amendment is obnoxious to the rule or not.

Mr. ACKLEN. The question raised by the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. Haskell,] if I understand his point of order correctly, has reference to the provision in clause 4 of rule XXI, which reads:

No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or in-corporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House.

In my opinion, the question raised at this time turns upon the point whether the words "pending before the House" are to be construed as referring to bills before committees of this House. And I do not think that under that construction the point of order taken by the gentleman will be sustained.

Mr. FROST. I desire to have the bills read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bills.

Mr. FROST. What I desire to know is the present condition of those bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that it is useless for the The CHARMAN. The Char suggests that it is useless for the Clerk to read the bills unless the House desires to have them read for information. The Chair has examined them with a view to ruling on the point of order which has been made.

Mr. FROST. I desire to have read the statement embracing the titles, the dates of introduction, &c.

The Clerk read as follows:

Forty-sixth Congress, second session: H. R. No. 2484. In the House of Representatives, December 3, 1879, read twice, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Finley, by unanimous consent, introduced the following bill: A bill to transfer the office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department.

Forty-sixth Congress, second session: H. R. No. 3439, (report No. 1333) In the House of Representatives, January 12, 1880, read twice, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed; Mr. Wellbogn, by unanimous consent, introduced the following bill: A bill to transfer the office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. As to the point made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Hiscock,] the Chair would say that the rules which now govern the House have not been altered as regards the particular clause of section 3 of Rule XXI upon which the Chair has based his ruling. The new rule in that respect is identical with the rule which was in existence at the time the decision was rendered by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole [Mr. Springer] in June, 1876. The only difference between the third section of that rule now and then is the addition of a provise which does not affect the clause of then is the addition of a proviso which does not affect the clause of that section which governs the question just ruled upon. Now, upon the point made by the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL,] the Chair will read the fourth section of Rule XXI, which is as follows:

No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House.

The rule is so plain and easily understood that no ground is left for controversy. If the amendment offered is substantially the same as a pending bill, it is clearly obnoxious to the point of order. The Chair has made an examination of the amendment offered by the gentlehas made an examination of the amendment offered by the gentle-man from Mississippi, which has just been handed him, and in fact finds it to be a bill heretofore introduced and now pending. The amendment which I have examined is an exact printed copy of the bill that was introduced by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FINLEY,] and which has ever since been pending before the House, or rather before its Committee on Indian Affairs. That bill is introduced now as an amendment to this appropriation bill. Now, under the fourth section of Eule XXI. section of Rule XXI-

Mr. HOOKER. Will the Chair allow me to say a single word?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.
Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say to the Chair and to the committee that I have not even seen the bill which proposes to make a transfer of the Indian Office from the Interior to the War Department. But I submit that if the amendment is not in tolidem verbis the same as a bill pending in the House then it is not obnoxious to the rule the Chair has cited, for the reason that the time, the opportunity, the occasion is entirely different. You might as well say that if twenty years hence I proposed to legislate by way of amendment some former rule of the House or some former law of the country would interdict it. I hope the Chair will not commit itself to the strange, singular, unjust, and improper position that because there is a bill pending before the House on the same subject-matter, pending at a different time and under different circumstances, therefore the hands of the legislators of the country are tied and they cannot act upon this amendment. Allow me to say, with great deference to the opinion of the Chair, that if that is the case then there is no occasion when you can amend a single law. Even those gentlemen around me, who are smiling at the statement I have made, would themselves often feel cramped if they felt there was not a possibility of reforming the laws, because there has been some legislation in opposition to that attempt.

I say that if I did propose to change existing law in any measure I would be obnoxious to the ruling of the Chair. I have not proposed that. The terms of my amendment are in fature; they do not relate to the past. Therefore—will the Chair listen to me while I say so? The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is listening to the gentleman.

Mr. HOOKER. My amendment being in reference to future operations cannot be controlled by any past legislation in reference to former times or former circumstances. If I had offered an amendment to change existing law in regard to the past I might be obnoxious to the objection which has been raised. But my amendment proposes that on and after a certain day in 1881 the conduct of Indian affairs shall be transferred from the Interior to the War Department. That is a proposition, allow me to say, (and I hope the Chair will hear me and at once concede that I am right about it, because there is no question about it, there is no gentleman on either side of the House who will say otherwise,) my proposition is to transfer the Indian Bureau, and is not coupled with any other action of any other

Mr. FROST. Allow me, Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think it possible for any gentleman to present arguments which will lead him to change the conclusion he has reached.

Mr. FROST. I propose to raise an entirely new point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will dispose of this first. In answer to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] the Chair will say that he understands the amendment offered to be a copy of the identity. tical bill now pending before the House. It is not only substantially the same as that bill, but is identically the same. It is not necessary for the Chair to compare the two bills further for the reason that the one offered as an amendment is in hee verba the one pending before the House

Mr. FINLEY. Allow me to suggest that the Chair is certainly in error.

"Regular order!" Many MEMBERS.

Mr. FINLEY. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is willing to be corrected if in error.

The Chair asked the Clerk for the amendment, and this bill was handed to him as such.

Mr. FINLEY. It is altogether a different bill from mine as to the time when the transfer shall be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is still of the opinion that the amendment is not in order. The bills, for I find there are two bills on the ame subject, are in substance the same as the amendment offered by same subject, are in substance the same as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Hooker] as an additional section to the bill. If there is any difference between the substance of this amendment and of the bills now pending before the House, the Chair would be glad to have it pointed out; he cannot see any substantial difference. The substance and object of the amendment offered and the two pending bills to which the attention of the Chair is called are manifestly the same. They clearly have but one object, and that is the transfer of the control of the Indian Department from the Interior Department to the War Department.

the Interior Department to the War Department.

Mr. FROST. If the Chair will permit me I will ask this question:
Is the transfer to take place under the bill formerly introduced at the same time as under the amendment of the gentleman from Mis-

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. The transfer is the matter of substance.

Mr. HASKELL. The subject-matter of the amendment is in substance that of the pending bill, simply and solely because the amendment proposes to remove the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department, and the bill proposes to do the same thing. The substance of the one is in the other in that fact alone, without reference to time or details of execution.

Mr. FROST. I insist that the question of time necessarily pertains to the substance of a bill. Let us suppose (but we need not suppose it, for it is the fact) that there has been introduced into this House some ten or fifteen different amendments in relation to the issue of

Mr. VALENTINE. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Frost] has the floor on a point of order.

Mr. VALENTINE. I understood that that point of order had been decided.

Mr. FROST. I say that we have now pending in this House in the form of amendments to the funding bill sundry propositions which are identical in substance, if the definition of "substance" given by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] be the correct one. Those propositions, however, vary essentially in regard to time. Now, is a 10-30 bond the same in substance as a 10-20 bond? Is a law to go into effect to-morrow the same in substance as one to go into effect one year or ten years hence? Time is of substance, and necessarily pertains to the substance; the time when and the place where necessarily pertain to the subject-matter.

The CHAIRMAN. In order to save discussion the Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Frost] that the bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Wellborn,] which is one of the two bills to which the attention of the Chair is called as now pending before the House, fixes the same date for the transfer as the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. FROST. I understood the Chair to say the contrary.

The CHAIRMAN. One bill, that of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FINLEY,] fixes a different date; the bill introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Wellborn] fixes the same date as that of the amend-

Mr. FROST. If that be so, then the ruling of the Chair is correct. I have another amendment, which I think will obviate all questions of order. I propose as an additional section to the bill that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the appropriations made by this bill shall be expended by the General of the Army instead of by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. KEIFER. I raise the same point of order on that amendment. Mr. HASKELL. A dozen points of order lie against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any gentleman wish to be heard on the point of order

Mr. HASKELL. I will simply raise the point of order that the proposed amendment is obnoxious to all the rules of the House, and let it rest there.

Mr. FROST. I do not desire to argue this question, but I maintain that this is not in substance the same amendment, for it proposes no transfer of the department, but simply substitutes one officer of the Government for another. That it changes existing law I am free to confess, but at the same time it retrenches expenditures and is germane to the bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. How do you know that it retrenches expenditures?
Mr. FROST. For the same reason that the proposition just ruled out on a point of order would retrench expenditures.
Mr. HUMPHREY. There is too much "germanity" about it; that Mr. HUMPHREY. There is too much "germanity" about it; that is the trouble. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken, for the reason that the amendment does not retrench expenditures, and it does very clearly change existing law. The mere substitution of one officer for another officer, the change from the Secretary of the Interior to the General of the Army, does not reduce expenditures. This amendment, unlike the one offered by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. HOOKER,] does not dispense with any of the officers of the Indian service, and therefore does not retrench expenditures. Other reasons can be assigned for ruling out the amendment, but the one mentioned is sufficient.

the amendment, but the one mentioned is sufficient.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I move to amend by adding the following as a new section:

All advertisements for contracts involving the expenditure of any money herein appropriated shall be made at least sixty days before any such contract shall be awarded.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the same point of order upon this amendment.

ment.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order, because the direct tendency of the amendment is to retrench expenditures by securing reasonable competition for the furnishing of supplies, which is now absolutely prevented by the policy that the Government pursues, giving not four weeks' notice by advertisement, and even that notice encumbered by conditions which render it almost impracticable for bids to be put in by parties in the section of country where the supplies are produced.

Mr. HISCOCK. I withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to decide the question with-

Mr. HOOKER. If I knew what the decision of the Chair would be, perhaps I would not say a word. [Laughter.] The Chair is aware of the fact that this question has arisen before; and I do not know that I can make it clearer than it is made in prior adjudica-me, I presume. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the decision which has been made on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already considered the decision to which the gentleman refers, and is very clearly of opinion that the amendment is not in order. The mere change of dates in the proposition does not alter the status of the question.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire simply to have read an adjudication of a former chairman of the Committee of the Whole on this question so that it may be printed in the Record. I do not know whether the present chairman is familiar with that decision; I presume he is; but, however that may be, I would like to have it read in connection with the motion I have made. This is the only decision that has been read upon this average.

No. 6730) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same with sundry amendments.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered. The first amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole was read, as follows:

At the end of line 641 add the following:
"And the money hereby appropriated, and all money heretofore appropriated to said Indians, being the Sacs and Foxes at the Iowa agency, and which has not been drawn by them, shall be paid to them when they shall sign a pay-roll by the head of each family, the correctness of which pay-roll shall be certified by the agent in charge of said Indians."

Mr. HOOKER. I move to lay this amendment on the table.
The SPEAKER. That would carry the bill with it.
Mr. HOOKER. I do not care about that. I move to lay the amendment on the table. What the consequences will be the Chair can

The motion of Mr. HOOKER was not agreed to. The amendment was then concurred in.

NATIONAL CONGRESS OF ELECTRICIANS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to lay before the House a communication from the President.

The Clerk read as follows: To the House of Representatives:

To the House of Representatives:

I submit herewith, for the information of the House of Representatives, copies of correspondence with the Department of State, relating to an invitation extended by the French Republic to this Government to send one or more delegates to represent it at an international congress of electricians, to be held at Paris on the 15th day of September, 1881. It appears from the same correspondence that an international exhibition of electricity is to be held at the Palace of the Champs Elysées, in Paris, from August 15, 1881, to the 15th of November following; and it is therefore suggested by the French authorities that it might be well to invest the delegates selected to take part in the international congress with the additional character of commissioners to the international exhibition of electricity.

In view of the important scientific, industrial, and commercial interests designed to be promoted by the proposed international congress of electricians and exhibition of electricity, I submit the subject to your favorable consideration, and recommend that a suitable appropriation be made to enable this Government to accept the foregoing invitation by appointing one or more delegates to attend the congress in question. R. B. HAVES.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 21st ultimo, copies of all papers in his office relative to the settlement of the accounts of Dexter E. YORKTOWN CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution of the House of Representatives for reference.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 337) authorizing and requesting the President to extend to the Government and people of France an invitation to join the Government and people of the United States in the observance of the centennial anniversary of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown, Virginia, was read twice by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is there any appropriation in the joint resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is not, the Chair is informed by the Secretary.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the committee will report it back with an appropriation. It seems to be very inhospitable to invite people to appropriation. It seems to be very innospitable to invite people to our house and give them nothing to eat.

Mr. DAWES. Should not the joint resolution go to the special committee appointed in reference to the Yorktown celebration?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair supposed not. He will, however, accept any suggestion from Senators.

Mr. DAWES. I have no choice myself, but it originated with that

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is an invitation to a foreign government.

Mr. DAWES. I am aware of that, but there is a special joint committee of the two Houses to take that matter in charge. That committee produced the joint resolution, and it was reported in the other branch, I believe, by that committee. I know it originated with

Mr. WHYTE. That is correct. It ought to go to the Joint Select Committee on the Yorktown Centennial Celebration. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair accepts that suggestion, and it will be so referred.

GENEVA AWARD.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave at this time, which is as convenient as any time, to put a question to the honorable Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Mr. HOAR. I ask leave at this time, which is as convenient as any time, to put a question to the honorable Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] if he will permit me to do so, in the presence of the Senate. At the last session the bill providing for the distribution of certain moneys received from the Geneva award was indefinitely postponed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table by a very small majority. It was understood that many Senators who voted against that bill were prepared to support a bill affording relief to a portion of the persons who were provided for there, and a bill providing such relief to a limited extent has been introduced by the honorable Senator from Vermont at the present session. I desire to ask him to state for the public information so far as he deems proper, if he deems it proper to make any statement at all, whether that bill of his will be likely to be reported in season for action at the present session of Congress? I will state for his information that it is not a mere question of idle curiosity, of course, but it is a matter which interests a very large number of persons, not merely as to the substance of the bill but the time at which it would be reported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly the Senator from Massachusetts need not make any excuse for putting such a question on the idea that anybody would suppose it was actuated by idle curiosity; but I am not the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and therefore have not any very powerful influence in the arrangement of its proceedings. The chairman is not present, but I think I am justified in saying for the committee that it is devoting its attention at present and has been very recently to the consideration of that subject. I have no authority to speak for the committee, and therefore I cannot say at what time it is likely that the subject will be reported upon, but I will express my individual belief that the committee will endeavor at what time it is likely that the subject will be reported upon, but I will express my individual belief that the committee will endeavor with diligence to bring the matter to the attention of the Senate so that the Senate can determine what ought to be done about it; but that is only my belief. That is all I can say, sir.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. MORGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Edmunds,] on March 9, 1880, proposing amendments to Rules 13 and 24 of the Senate, to report it back, with amendments, and recommend its adoption, as amended.

The resolution, as amended, was read, as follows:

"2. A motion to proceed to the consideration of any other bill on the Calendar; but this motion shall not be considered to unless two-thirds of the Senators present vote in favor thereof.

"3. A motion to pass over the pending subject, which, if carried, shall have the effect to leave such subject in its existing place on the Calendar for action at the next call of the Calendar, after the pending call shall have been gone through with.

M'DONALD'S COMPILATION.

Mr. MORGAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Rules to report the following resolution, which I shall ask the Senate to adopt:

Resolved. That the Committee on Rules be instructed to examine a compilation of the decisions of the Senate on questions of order prepared by the former Chief Clerk, W. J. McDonald, and report upon the propriety of having the same printed for the use of the Senate.

The resolution was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

RESTORATION OF NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. FARLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 1210) for the relief of certain officers of the Navy, to report it favorably. The bill once passed the Senate, and a motion to reconsider was entered by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. Logan.] The bill was reconsidered, and recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The committee, after an examination of the bill, adopt the report which was made last spring, and I present it to the Senate and ask that the report be read, together with the bill as amended.

The bill was read by its title.

Mr. FARLEY. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to suspend the consideration of other business and to take up the bill at

Mr. FARLEY. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to suspend the consideration of other business and to take up the bill at this time and pass it. We have passed it once before.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think it ought to be taken up out of its place, at least without seeing it in print as reported.

Mr. FARLEY. The Senator from Vermont will permit me a moment. The bill was very thoroughly examined heretofore, and it has been passed twice by the Committee on Naval Affairs. It is an important bill to those who are interested in it, and certainly no great important bill to those who are interested in it, and certainly no great injury would result from the consideration of it at this time.

Mr. EDMUNDS: The Senate can consider it to-morrow after we see it in print as reported. It is unfair, it seems to me, to a great many other bills concerning private and public interests that have been reported and have been long ready for action to do this sort of thing. I do not mean to be ungracious in asking that the bill go over, for I dare say it is all right, although I know nothing about it; but in the interest of something like fair play to all those people whose cases are now on the Calendar, I think we ought to go on regularly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar. Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not insist on his objection. It is in the interest of fair play that the bill should be considered now. It passed the Senate at the last session, and has been hung up many months on a motion to reconsider. It was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs, who have discovered no additional evidence and no reason to change their opinion, and they have reported it back again. I think it will take but a moment no additional evidence and no reason to change their opinion, and they have reported it back again. I think it will take but a moment to pass the bill, as it has already passed the Senate once. I hope the Senator from Vermont will withdraw his objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to make an inquiry with respect to the bill which has just been before the Senate. What is the custom of the Senate when a bill has been recommitted and is reported again favorably? Does it take its place at the foot of the Calendar? Will this bill lose its place on the Calendar?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It takes a place on the Calendar as of the date of the report.

date of the report.

Mr. McPHERSON. That is what I wished to know, if the bill would not lose its place on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Crittenden upon the retired list with the rank and pay of a brigadier-general; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SAUNDERS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 6719) making appropriations for the sup-port of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropria-tions, and ordered to be printed.

REUBEN S. JONES.

Mr. HARRIS. Some time since the bill (S. No. 455) for the relief of Reuben S. Jones was adversely reported from the Committee on Claims, and at my suggestion placed upon the Calendar. The report was made in the absence of certain important papers. I now wish to present certain vouchers from the Treasury Department for reference to the Committee on Claims, and I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Claims with these papers; the motion was agreed to was agreed to.

JAMES D. GRANT.

Mr. MAXEY. As I have to leave the city to-night, I ask the favor of the Senate to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2968) for the relief of James D. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPARTMENTAL REORGANIZATION.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, submitted the following resolutions; which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved. That the Committee on Finance be requested to inquire whether the interests of the public service would not be promoted by such a change or modification of the organization of the Treasury Department as would secure a division of duties and responsibilities whereby the collection, receipt, and safe-keeping of all Government revenues and the accounts therefor should be in entirely different hands from the disbursements of the Government and the accounts therefor.

Resolved, That said committee be further requested to consider the expediency and propriety of transferring from the Treasury Department to the War or Navy Department the Steamboat Inspection Service, the Life-Saving Service, the Light-House Board, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Marine Hospital Service; and also the expediency and propriety of putting under the charge of the Department of State matters connected with the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States.

Resolved, That said committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to call up the joint resolution that I introduced day before yesterday in regard to the extension of the franking

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 140) in regard to the extension of the franking privilege.

*Resolved, &c., That the franking privilege is hereby extended to all official business sent through the mails by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress; in all other respects to be under the restrictions and limitations of existing law.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask that the joint resolution be considered now. I do not see why there should be any objection to it. I do not desire to detain the Senate by any remarks upon it, unless other Senators wish to debate it.

to detain the Senate by any remarks upon it, unless other Senators wish to debate it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution at this time? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection to the joint resolution being taken up, but it occurs to me the Senator had better let it go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LOGAN. Why?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It occurs to me that it is a question that that committee ought to consider. There may be further privileges which ought to be given. I do not know whether the joint resolution embraces all the privileges that ought to be granted or not. I am with the Senator in what he now asks, but it is highly probable that the joint resolution ought to be considered by the committee and a report made on it. I understand that the committee has already, in a different shape, considered the question of extending the franking privilege. I hope he will let the joint resolution go to that committee, unless there is some objection that I know not of.

Mr. LOGAN. A matter of this kind certainly every Senator in the Chamber is just as familiar with as the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. This is a mere resolution authorizing Senators and Representatives and Delegates to frank official letters sent to their constituents by them. That is what it embraces. How can the committee give any more information on it than there is in the resolution? There is no Senator here who does not understand whether he thinks that he ought to pay the postage on official communications to his constituents or not. If he thinks he ought of congress he will he thinks that he ought to pay the postage on official communications to his constituents or not. If he thinks he ought, of course he will vote against the resolution; and if he does not, he will vote for it.

vote against the resolution; and if he does not, he will vote for it. That is all there is of it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator will recollect that I made no objection as far as the resolution went, but the question is whether there are not other things that ought to be embraced in it, and it is hardly worth while to pass two or more resolutions to cover one subject. It occurs to me that the committee ought to look into it and let us have the benefit of their examination. That appears to me to be the better course.

Mr. LOGAN. It have no objection to referring to any committee.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to referring to any committee of the Senate a matter as to which there may be any controversy. I do not know how other Senators are situated, I cannot speak for I do not know how other Senators are situated, I cannot speak for them; but I know that so far as I am concerned there are numerous communications forwarded to me by the Department to be sent through the mails to my constituents, and not only my own constituents, but persons in other States, in reference to soldiers' claims and pensions and things of that kind. Of course I pay the postage on them, because that is the law, but at the same time I think it ought to be the law that any Senator or Member should send matter of that kind without paying the postage. I have never heard a Sen ator or Representative say otherwise. If there are other matters that ought to be attached to the joint resolution, let the Senator from West Virginia move them as an amendment. I do not know what his suggestions may be, but I should like very much to hear them by way of amendment, if he has any to make.

I do not think it is necessary always to refer to a committee every little matter that comes up with which every Senator is perfectly conversant. It may stay there and remain without being reported back. I should like to see a vote on the joint resolution in the Senate just as it is, or as the Senate may amend it if there is any amendment desired. For that reason I wish it to be acted upon by the Senate now.

For that reason I wish it to be acted upon by the Senate now.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no amendment to offer; I do not know that I would have one to offer even if I were to consider the resolution; but it occurs to me that it ought to go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. Of course it was intro-duced and read to the Senate and has been printed, but it has been referred to no committee, and I would prefer that it should go to one. There may be other questions that that committee would consider in connection with it. I appeal to the Senator to allow the reference to be made; but if he prefers not, I reckon we had just as well take a test vote on it, and therefore I move that the joint resolution ence to be made; but if he prefers not, I reckon we had just as well take a test vote on it, and therefore I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LOGAN. I move, as an amendment to that motion, that the committee be instructed to report back immediately.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is, that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, with instructions to report it back forthwith.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Not forthwith; at an early date, I will say. The Senator does not mean that they shall report it to-day, I reckon, but at an early day after their next meeting.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; say that they shall report it back Thursday; that is the day of their meeting.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If they have a meeting then, or say "at their first meeting."

Mr. WHYTE. I would suggest that a few moments ago the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Maxey,] chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, notified the Senate that he was just about leaving the city, and would be gone some time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is an acting chairman.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to my friend that the committee will meet, I take it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hope that in the absence of the chairman of that committee there will be no instruction upon the committee to consider the joint resolution at its next meeting. I have no doubt the committee will give consideration to it at as early a day as it is pos-

I have no doubt the committee will give consideration to it at as early a day as it is posthe committee will give consideration to it at as early a day as it is possible with reference to other business before the committee; but there is before the committee quite a number of nominations, and they will have to be considered. Therefore, if we are to act under instructions to consider this matter, it might postpone other matters which the committee feel bound to act upon at their next meeting. I hope, therefore, we shall not have instructions to act at the next meeting, but at as early a time as the convenience of the committee will allow.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator this question: Is it the rule, or is it reasonable either, that the Senate shall wait upon the committee because the chairman is absent? The com-wait upon the committee because the chairman is absent? The committee can certainly act without one member.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am not putting it on that ground, if the Senator from Illinois will allow me. I am putting it on the ground that there are other very important matters now pending before that committee which ought to be considered, as important as the resolution introduced by the Senator from Illinois. An instruction to take this up at the next meeting and consider it might interfere with other business which ought to be considered at that meeting. Now I have no objection to instructions to that committee provided Now I have no objection to instructions to that committee provided those instructions are that the matter shall be considered as early as practicable, but a definite instruction to consider at the next meeting might interfere and possibly would interfere with other matters equally as important as that contained in the resolution.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no doubt there are many other matters before that committee of great importance; but at the same time I shall insist on the instruction. I know great delays sometimes occur in committee; and on account of the Senator from Delaware being on that committee, and knowing his energy and his faithfulness on committees, I am sure that it would not interfere at least with that important committee if they should be instructed to report this little resotant committee if they should be instructed to report this little resolution back the next time they meet. Therefore, I shall insist that they do report it back after their next meeting, if it is referred to that committee at all.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If these instructions are to be given I hope the resolution will not be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I happen to know that there are other matters which at the next meeting of the committee will engage the attention of the committee during perhaps its entire session, matters fully as impor-tant as that embraced in the resolution offered by the Senator from Illinois.

Now, I am sure that committee will use due diligence in the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Illinois; but I would not like to see that committee fettered by positive instructions to lay aside all other business before the committee to take up and consider the resolution introduced by the Senator from Illinois. I have no objection to instructions to the committee to report upon the matter objection to instructions to the committee to report upon the matter at as early a day as practicable; but a definite instruction, which must necessarily supersede all other business at the next meeting, I am opposed to, and I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, personally I am not eager for an extra session of Congress after the 4th of March or on the 4th of March; and this is one of my reasons for remarking that the fashionable and favored mode apparently in the Senate just now of disposing of anything which comes along is to postpone it to a more convenient season.

I have no objection to a reference of this resolution to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; but if it is to be referred I agree with the Senator from Illinois that it should be with a direction of with the Senator from Illinois that it should be with a direction of the Senate that it shall come back presently, a direction which, after listening to the Senator from Delaware, I still cannot doubt is proper; and I say that for this reason: the whole question is whether we want the legislation of Congress to so continue that every clerk in a post-office, every clerk in a Department from the head clerk of that Department down, may send through the mails matters of public business, while at the same time the members of this body and of the House of Representatives shall be compelled to defray each from his own poster the great volume of postage which is horne upon comown pocket the great volume of postage which is borne upon communications coming from the soldiers, the sailors, the widows, the beneficiaries under the pension acts and other persons who send letters not touching our business but touching their business. That is the whole question.

Now, if it is thought that the time has come when a great deal of Now, it it is thought that the time has come when a great deal of declamation about the franking privilege has done its work sufficiently in the country, has won sufficient acclaim for those who have deemed that a wise political and electioneering cry; if the time has come when this sort of rhodomontade has gone far enough and in the judgment of the Senate we had better do a wise practical thing, there is not one committee of this body which needs fifteen minutes to report a bill the form of which stands over and over again in the statutes, under which bill Senators and Representatives will be permitted to do what all other officers of the Government are now permitted to do, namely, send through the mails such matters as come to them officially without themselves personally paying the postage. No committee needs any time to do this. I must think we could here, No committee needs any time to do this. I must think we could here, in the morning hour, in a very few moments, frame such a bill; that any one Senator of all those I see around me could put this resolution if it needs alteration (which I do not suppose it does) in such form as to be exactly right. Certainly the committee can do it in a very few minutes. Therefore I hope that in one form or the other we shall have action on this very old, stereotyped, and perfectly understood point, simple and distinct as it is; and I hope also—I do not venture to give advice to any member of the Senate except myself—that I shall be able to a vote upon these questions as not to defer and defer shall be able to so vote upon these questions as not to defer and defer shall be able to so vote upon these questions as not to defer and defer and postpone and postpone until at the end of this session, without consideration and in heat, a great body of legislation will be perfected as it is called, or else will pass over making a demand of an extra session in the spring in order that work may be done which is found belated when the gavel falls on the 4th of March.

I should be glad myself to vote upon this resolution now; but if any Senator thinks it ought to undergo the action of a committee so be it. I hope the Senator from Illinois will adhere to his idea of having it go, if at all, to the committee with the understanding, which had better be in the form of an instruction, that it be reported back at once; and even if the Senator from Delaware—he will pardon my suggestion—should find it necessary to convene his committee at an extra meeting for half an hour after the adjournment of to-day, or for half an hour at some other time, I really think that the exigency of the present brief session would be enough to warrant even as much trouble as that being imposed upon the committee.

gency of the present brief session would be enough to warrant even as much trouble as that being imposed upon the committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The mere drafting of a bill to cover the case would occupy some time; and after drafting such a bill the committee perhaps might be divided just as the Senate has always been divided upon the propriety of the measure before it; and that was the reason why I anticipated that there might be difficulty in arriving at a conclusion.

ing at a conclusion.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator pardon me for interrupting him a moment?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. Assuming that to be so, this is a point on which the judgment of Senators is fixed already; and that need not delay the measure at all. The committee can come in and report the resolution adversely if the majority is opposed to it, report it favorably if the majority is in favor of it, and those who dissent can have their rights; but it is not a measure, I submit to the Senator, which requires investigation, examination, time, in the sense in which a measure connected with complicated facts going before a committee may require such time and such investigation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall not press the objection to the instructions any further. I have made known the fact that the business before that committee is of such a character that I do not think it ought to be hampered by instructions which may possibly compel the committee to lay aside other matters which ought to be at-

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I shall vote against the reference to the committee. I think every Senator is competent at the present time to vote upon so simple a proposition as is contained in this joint resolution. It is in a form which is perfectly acceptable if the sentiment is acceptable to the Senate, and we are just as well prepared now to vote upon it as we shall be when the committee report in favor of it or against it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not see any necessity for referring this resolution. If it provided for individual correspondence or private correspondence or anything of that kind, it might be necessary to alter continuous. It is provided for individual correspondence or private correspondence or anything of that kind, it might be necessary to alter it; but as I understand it, there is only one question in this resolution, and that is whether we shall allow Senators and Representatives to send their official letters free, or at the expense of the Government rather than of the individual himself. I apprehend that there is not a single Senator here who has not already made up his mind on this question. He is ready to say "yea" or "nay" to this, and it may just as well be said now as any other time. I shall vote against any reference on that account.

against any reference on that account.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia, that this joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, with instructions to report back the same upon the first call of committees after the first meeting of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understood the Senator from Illinois made a motion to amend the reference and then to accept the reference without any instruction about it.

Mr. LOGAN. No, I said if it went to the committee I wanted it to sentitly that instruction.

Mr. LOGAN. No, I sad if it went to the committee I wanted it to go with that instruction.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understood the Senator to consent that the resolution should be referred. Am I right or wrong?

Mr. LOGAN. No, I am opposed to its being referred at all, but if it is referred I want it referred with instructions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is—

Mr. KERNAN. Is the question on the reference or on the instructions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On both. The motion is that the pending joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, with instructions to report the same upon the first call for reports from standing and select committees after the first meeting of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think the Chair is right in presenting the question, but I misunderstood the Senator from Illinois, certainly, if, as he now says, he opposed the reference with instructions. I shall object to any instructions unless the reference is consented to by the Senator. That was my understanding. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads without instructions, unless the Senator accepts the reference with in-out instructions, unless the Senator accepts the reference with instructions. I do not want delay.

Mr. LOGAN. Let the vote be taken on the other proposition first.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the majority wishes it, let it go.
Mr. LOGAN. Has the Senator from West Virginia changed his be referred.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well. I move to amend that motion that it be referred with instructions to report on Thursday next.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then we vote on the instructions first, and afterward on the reference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question will be on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, to instruct the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to report on Thursday next.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the motion to refer without instructions.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 12, noes 27.

Mr. KERNAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I move to amend the motion by adding "with instructions to report the same back to the Senate on or before Thursday next."

Mr. ANTHONY. That is to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not care if it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the fact that the committee meet on Thursday, and it may not be convenient, in view of the other business before them, to consider this at that specific meeting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand that to-morrow is Thursday, and I understand that the committee has other business. If it cannot do all its business then, it can meet the next day. But I have suffered and my constituents have suffered so long from the present absurd and ridiculous state of the law that I am in favor of having this committee get the phraseology right so that there shall be no misunderstanding as to what "official" means if you please, get it clear so that we shall all understand it alike, and report it immediately. That is the array research why I wate for a reference at all. I do not think is the only reason why I vote for a reference at all. I do not think that this resolution goes far enough.

Mr. CONKLING. Nor I either.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that the idea in a republic like ours that the representatives of the people are to be taxed for communicating with them about any matter of public concern, whether you call it official business or political business, is wrong. I believe the more you can encourage the people by carrying their letters and communications to members of Congress from and upon all possible subjects, the more good you do to republican government and the dissemination of intelligence upon which it rests. Therefore I have always cations to members of Congress from and upon all possible subjects, the more good you do to republican government and the dissemination of intelligence upon which it rests. Therefore I have always voted against the abolition of the franking privilege, so called, and always voted in favor of its restoration, and I mean to do it again. We all understand how this notion of abolishing it got up. A few great city papers started it because they thought they would increase their circulation by cutting off as far as possible communication between Members and Senators at the capital and distant parts of the country; and it is a strange thing, as the Senator from New York has said, that year after year by our own laws we have declared that the only public servants not fit to be trusted in communicating with the people about public affairs are Senators and Representatives. A head of Department, any of the Department clerks, everybody in the executive service of the country is thought worthy to be trusted to communicate concerning public affairs with everybody else through the advantage of the mails, it costing the United States nothing to carry the free communications except on a very few routes. It is true that the postage that you would force Senators and Members and citizens to pay, and which otherwise they would not pay, is so much loss to the accumulated taxation of the people. That is true; but I think that every cent that you lose in allowing a citizen to send to any Senator a letter on any subject of public concern—and we all know that ninety-nine hundredths of these letters are about subjects of public concern—is ten thousand times counterbalanced by the advantage that there is to a country constituted like ours in this absoof public concern—is ten thousand times counterbalanced by the advantage that there is to a country constituted like ours in this absolutely free intercommunication. Therefore I am not afraid of the opinions of my constituents or anybody else on such a subject. The opinions of my constituents or anybody else on such a subject. The present course of procedure is very unjust to Senators and Members. Every chairman of a committee in respect of the absolute performance of his duties is taxed day by day. When I had the honor to be chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, I found that I was taxed to the extent of several dollars a week, and I have no doubt my friend from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] is now to a large sum in paying postage in respect to matters that we had no more individual concern in than a resident of France but that the public had concern in.

Now, if we have such a low opinion of our own trustworthiness that we cannot be allowed to make use of public agencies to do public busiwe cannot be allowed to make use of public agencies to do public business and to write to our constituents about matters of public concern and have them write to us, on the theory that we are going to abuse it—which was the sole pretext for the removal of this so-called privilege—then I think we ought to be ashamed of ourselves, and I for one am ashamed of myself for leaving the matter stand as it does.

I am in favor of this reference and for an immediate report, in order

I am in favor of this reference and for an immediate report, in order that the committee may consider whether they shall not extend this right—I would not call it a privilege; rather a right and a duty—to all the correspondents of Senators and members of Congress; or if they think it unfit to do that, to be careful to define the word "official" in some way, so that we can honorably and honestly understand it all alike as to what is covered by what is called "official business" of Senators. I do not know precisely what that would mean.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I have no doubt about the propriety of this resolution. I have been paying postage, as my friend from Vermont says he has been. I have done it to-day and every other day, as well as I can remember, for a long time past; but after the remarks which have been made here, is there any necessity to instruct the committee? In my judgment the committee will report as speedily as possible.

the committee? In my judgment the committee will report as speedily as possible.

Mr. CONKLING. Then what harm will the instructions do?

Mr. EATON. What is the use of them? If we have been paying it for years and years we can pay it for one day longer.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Michigan, who is on this committee, has suggested that other business would probably prevent them from considering this resolution at their first meeting. If that is the case, I should like the Senate to tell them that they want its consideration. If it is going to pass the two Houses of Congress at this session, it ought to be considered and reported soon, and after the suggestions made by different members of the committee it is proper to instruct the committee, so that they can take this up and act upon to instruct the committee, so that they can take this up and act upon to instruct the committee, so that they can take this up and act upon it promptly, if it is to be referred at all.

Mr. FERRY. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, being a member of that committee, I feel it to be my duty to say that it seems rather unprecedented that a resolution should be referred to a committee that meets on the next day with an instruction requiring that committee to consider the subject and report at once. I have shown my favor to the resolution by my vote here in reference to it, but I shall vote against compelling the committee of which I am a member, or any other committee, to report upon a resolution instanter. There may be, and there probably are, other matters before the committee, which meets to-morrow in regular meeting, which will require the attention of the committee, so that it will be impossible to give proper attention to this sub-

The Senator from Vermont has suggested that the committee can meet on Friday. Many of the members of that committee are on other committees that are obliged to meet on Friday, and therefore it would be rather unjust to require the committee to report immediately upon a subject that is just committed to it. Therefore I hope that the Senate will not concur in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont; at the same time I state that I do not do this for the proposed of the senator of the senator in the same time I state that I do not do this for the purpose of opposing the resolution, but simply to do justice to the com-purpose of opposing the resolution, but simply to do justice to the committee.

Mr. EATON. The Senator, who is a member of the committee, has expressed my opinion so much better than I was expressing it myself that I do not care to go any further into this discussion. I am in favor of extending this resolution, of making it larger than it is now, and I am not in favor of instructing the committee to report forthwith. Let them report, in view of the present indications of the opinion of the Senate, as speedily as possible, and I have no doubt they will.

with. Let them report, in view of the present indicators of the opinion of the Senate, as speedily as possible, and I have no doubt they will.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I have a little delicacy in speaking on this subject. My political life is so nearly at an end that it might be supposed I was interfering with those who are to remain here. But I cannot forbear making a remark.

The franking privilege was taken away because it was so flagrantly abused. If there had never been any abuse of that privilege, it never would have been taken away. It was really misnamed a privilege; that is, in the sense of being a privilege of the members of Congress. It was the privilege of the people far more than of any member of Congress. It enabled the people to receive what they otherwise would not have received, in the form of documents and other information of the workings and doings of the Government. It was the people's privilege, and not the privilege of the members of Congress. But it was flagrantly abused, and when I say that I speak with some knowledge on the subject; and do not let anybody suppose that I am going to make a confession, for I am not conscious that I ever did abuse it myself; but it was so flagrantly abused that there was a demand, and I believe both political parties had a sort of struggle with each other who could go the farthest in advocating the repeal of that privilege. of that privilege.
Mr. CONKLING.
Mr. THURMAN.

Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Certainly.
From the same or other sources of information Mr. CONKLING. to which he has referred, has the Senator any reason to suppose that, in its present condition, the franking privilege is abused?

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know that it is; I have not the least idea that it is; at least I have no reason to say it is.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator has been in the country all the time for the last year or so, I suppose?

Mr. THURMAN. I have; but I have not heard everything. I saw in a newspaper to-day that there had been some debate in another place in which it was suggested that there had been abuse of the privilege. I know nothing about it except what I see in the Recondition and the Senator perhaps knows about that—but this I do know: Some years ago (I will not say what year it was, but it was the year of a presidential election) I was passing, in the recess of Congress, through one of the corridors of this Capitol, and seeing three or four hundred needle at work sending off all earts of matter. I called through one of the corridors of this Capitol, and seeing three or four hundred people at work, sending off all sorts of matter, I asked a friend of mine, the chairman of the committee under whom these men were working, "Won't you give me one of those bundles that you have put up there and let me see what kind of food you are sending off to the people?" "Why, certainly," said he, and he told one of them "Give Mr. Thurman one of those bundles." He gave it to me and I have it yet, and I could show that it contained not one single line of frankable matter; and furthermore, that in the case of one man whose frank appeared upon it it was written in four different handwritings, showing that four different clerks had been writing that man's name, and that man, as I know, was not less than five hundred miles from this Capitol at that time.

Mr. President, it was that kind of abuse of the franking privilege

Mr. President, it was that kind of abuse of the franking privilege which brought it into such disrepute, until at last very unsavory stories were told, false no doubt, but many of them credited by the people, because there was so much that was done which was wrong that they were ready to believe anything. It was a sort of standing joke that members of Congress franked their shirts home to their washerwomen in order to get them washed cheaper than they could in Washington. Of course it was nothing but a coarse and unfounded joke, but such things were said to show how the franking privilege was abused.

Mr. President, as I said before, the franking privilege, carefully protected from abuse, is for the benefit of the people. There can be no sort of question about that; but to carefully draft a law that shall sort of question about that; but to carefully draft a law that shall protect it from abuse is not a work to be done between now and tomorrow. It is a work that will tax the powers of any man who tries it, and I say to my friend who presses this resolution, and to those who advocate it, that you will only make the thing more unpopular if you pass this resolution saying that we may frank anything upon any official business without any limitation or determination of what is official business, each one deciding for himself, for it must be that. The most that can be done will be to require that the man who franks it shall write "official business" on the envelope. If you do that, without any protection or guard whatever against abuse, you will only create trouble, and you will only create discontent.

And therefore, Mr. President, I say that if the franking privilege is to be revived—and we have been reviving it piecemeal by piecemeal—if you want to have a law that shall be perfect, one that shall not create discontent, one that shall not make the law unpopular, you must frame that law so as to put an end to the abuses that existed in the past. I believe it is possible to do so; but it will require great care and no little time and no little study on the part of the committee that can achieve that task. I hope, therefore, that this resolution will go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and I hope it will go to it without any instructions whatsoever. I hope that it will go to and be considered by the committee, which is an able committee, and if they can frame such a law as will admit of the existence of the franking privilege and at the same time prevent its abuse, they will have rendered a great service, not only to Congress, but to the country.

abuse, they will have rendered a great service, not only to Congress, but to the country.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I do not wish to discuss this proposition further, but the remarks of the Senator from Ohio called my attention to one thing that I happen to know something about. The law giving the franking privilege was not repealed merely because of the abuses. What abuses there were of the franking privilege, I do not know. I only know that I never abused it, so far as I was concerned; I can only speak for myself. But at the time the law was repealed, it was done at the dictation of a few newspapers of the country and of a Postmaster-General, who sent out instructions to every try and of a Postmaster-General, who sent out instructions to every postmaster in the United States to have a petition signed and sent to Congress to repeal the law, and the postmasters were instructed to get names to these petitions. That was the way it came to be stricken from the statute-book, and it was not for the reason assigned by the Senator from Ohio.

I say that, sir, in justice to the members of Congress who have been subject to so much remark about the abuse of the franking privilege, and much of that abuse grows out of remarks of Senators and Members of another House in reference to the jokes which have been made and much of that abuse grows out of remarks of Senators and Members of another House in reference to the jokes which have been made about the use of the franking privilege. By repeating they give a kind of tacit assent to such things; and whenever a proposition is made to give to the people this right, which belongs to them, to have their communications free, we always find some gentlemen who love the right so much that they throw every possible obstacle in the way of a proposition of this kind. I know some two or three times I have heard many persons say, "Yes, we are for this; it is right; it ought to be done;" but when you undertake to do it there is an objection to it. I will not say that this objection is always made that it may meet the ear of some persons who are gathering together small things in order to make great things out of them, that they may be a little more popular with a certain class. I will not say that; but I will only say so far as I am concerned myself that I introduced this resolution because I believed it to be right. I introduced it because, as I said before, this postage is a tax upon the members of Congress in communicating with the people of this country on their own business and not on the business of the Senators or Members. In fact, persons write to you about their claims, they want you to send them a bill that has been introduced before Congress and which has been printed, and you send it to them. It is a printed communication to Congress and you send it to them. It is a printed communication to Congress that they want to get, and you send it. They want to know what has become of a certain claim they have in the Treasury Department.

Mr. EATON. You can send a bill free.

Mr. LOGAN. I know that a bill can be sent free. It is printed as a public document. But people write to you about matters in the Treasury Department; you ask the Department, and the Department sends the communication to you, instead of sending it to your constituent. You open it and find that it is a communication in answer to the letter of your constituent, and you then have to send it to him and to pay the postage on it. That occurs every day to nearly every Member and Senator. I find myself reported in the RECORD as having stated the other day that it cost me $10 a month sometimes for such postage. I did not mean to say that, and I wish to correct it now. I meant to say that it cost me for one week $10 sometimes, and that it cost me from two to four dollars a week every week I am in Congress. I referred to a memorandum made by my clerk after I Congress. I referred to a memorandum made by my clerk after I went home, after I saw what was in the RECORD as stated by me, and the memorandum shows that fact. I asked him to keep a memorandum to show what my postage amounted to in a month, and, by weeks, it amounted to from $3 up to $10 per week. Now, for the benefit of the people, of course, we are bound to pay this, and I am willing to pay it if I am required to do so; but I object to paying it if I can help it, because it is not for my benefit, but for the benefit of my constituents and in fact the constituents of my constituents. of my constituents, and, in fact, the constituents of nearly every Senator here, for the soldiers write to me from every State in this Union, and I always answer their letters and send them to the Pension Department, or wherever they ask, for information, and obtain the information called for. I always do it, and that was what induced made to effort this proposition.

The Senator from Ohio says it ought to be a law well guarded.

How well guarded? This merely speaks of official letters sent from the Department through a Senator or Member. How can you guard it better than that? It only applies to official communications sent from the Departments through the Senators and Representatives to their constituents.

their constituents.

Mr. THURMAN. May I interrupt the Senator there?
Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.
Mr. THURMAN. Has the Senator never heard of the speech of a distinguished member of the Government made to his constituents, a distinguished member of the Government made to his constituents, a political speech?

Mr. LOGAN. I have heard of many of that kind.

Mr. THURMAN. Of one that was sent, as it was stated in the newspapers, by thousands and hundreds of thousands under the official frank of a Department.

Mr. LOGAN. What has that got to do with official communications from the Departments?

Mr. THURMAN. I should say that was an abuse of the privilence.

Mr. CONKLING. That was under the law as it stands now.
Mr. THURMAN. If it happened at all. I do not aver that it did happen; I only stated what the newspapers said.
Mr. CONKLING. Whatever did happen happened under the laws

Mr. CONKLING. Whatever did happen happened under the laws as they are now.

Mr. THURMAN. Which shows that they ought to be amended. Mr. CONKLING. That may be.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know what the Senator from Ohio refers to. I may have heard what he indicates, but I do not now remember anything about it. I know it is a fact that members of Congress have sent their speeches out to their constituents. They can do that under the law as it exists now, provided the speech has been published in the RECORD. It is then an extract from the RECORD. That they can do now; but that has nothing to do with official communications from the Departments, the cost of postage on which I am speaking of. As the law stands to-day a Senator or member of Congress may send free a public document; may send free anything that is printed in the RECORD; and every clerk in the Departments of the United States Government here at Washington can send free of postage any communication from that Department to your constituents, but you are deprived of the right of doing the same thing. In other words, if you want to avoid the postage you get some clerk of a Department to communicate with your constituents, he acting as their representative instead of yourself. That is the only way you can avoid it. If members of Congress delight in things of that kind, I have no objection; they can do it. As far as I am concerned, I do not agree to that mode of proceeding. I think that my constituents have as much privilege to require me to communicate with them as they have to communicate with a clerk in one of these Departments; and if they do communicate with a clerk in one of these Departments; and if they do communicate with me my message to them, or the official docucommunicate with a clerk in one of these Departments; and if they do communicate with me my message to them, or the official document I send to them, has as much right to go free as an official document under the frank of a clerk in a Department.

Now, sir, I am opposed to the reference of this resolution to a committee; but if it is referred, I am in favor of their being instructed to report it back at once. The Senator from Michigan says that they cannot investigate so important a matter as this to-morrow. If they cannot investigate so important a matter as this to-morrow. If they cannot to-morrow, when can they? I should like the Senator to give us some information on that point. They cannot do it to-morrow, he says, and they cannot have a special meeting the next day, because the members have to attend other committees then. If they cannot do that, when can they examine it? Can they do it at the next meeting? Will there not be important matters before the next meeting?

Mr. FERRY. We meet every week on Thursday; that is the regular meeting-day; and this being referred, the reference of the resolution would seem to intimate that the subject is regarded of some importance. We would meet then on the next Thursday, as the members of the committee have to meet other committees on other days. I am not occupied upon other committees on Friday, but some of the members are, and I am on other days.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator says it is a matter of much importance.

I would ask him what the matter of importance is? It is an important matter; but what is the importance of a thorough examination of this resolution? What is there in it that requires great consideration great intellect. ation, great intellect, and great learning in order to report it back?

Mr. FERRY. If the Senator wants a direct reply to that, I have only the judgment of other Senators who have expressed themselves on that point, that it would require a good deal of attention to examine the subject if it is referred to a committee, and therefore as a member of the committee it would be improper for me to express a judgber of the committee it would be improper for me to express a judgment on it until I had given attention to it.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the Senator's judgment about it? How long would it take to look over this thing to see whether he is in favor of the restoration of the franking privilege?

Mr. FERRY. I think I have expressed my favor to the resolution. I should be prepared at almost any time to act upon it. I do not know how much it may involve because I did not listen particularly to that, but I am in favor of the general features and in favor of its reference to the committee. I cannot say in advance how I may act on the whole onestion, but so far as it appears now I favor the propon the whole question, but so far as it appears now I favor the proposition.

Mr. LOGAN. As far as how much is involved is concerned, it might be well to say a word right here, inasmuch as the Senator from Vermont mentioned it. This joint resolution does not involve one cent, for the reason that the stamp is paid for by the Treasury Department and charged over to the Post-Office Department. The carrying of the mails is not affected directly or indirectly, for the contractor takes the contract at the same rate whether there is a postage-stamp on your letter or whether your name is on it. So it involves nothing. It only involves the proposition whether you are in favor of franking official communications to your constituents or pay the postage on them. That is all there is in it. So far as the word "official" is concerned, it is applicable to com-

So far as the word "official" is concerned, it is applicable to communications from a Department going through a Senator or a member to his constituents. I do not think there need be much trouble on that subject. I know what I mean by it—it is ingrafted in the resolution. I mean such communications as would be sent from a Department to a constituent of ours on the subject of his business, which would be an official answer to his request or to his suggestion. No matter by whom written, it is an official answer to that which he presents to a Department for examination, and that is all that it does mean and that is all the extent and scope and broadth of the does mean, and that is all the extent and scope and breadth of the resolution.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President—
Mr. WITHERS. I wish to present a motion that the present and all prior orders be set aside for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from that purpose?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. Has the morning hour expired?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This is not under the morning-hour rule.

Mr. CONKLING. May I make a suggestion to the Senator from Virginia? In the absence of one or two Senators who are interested in the unfinished business, on which I believe I have the floor, I ask the Senator if he has any objection to letting the unfinished business lie aside informally to go on with the Army appropriation bill?

Mr. WITHERS. That was my purpose, not to interfere with the regular business. I merely want to get the unfinished business informally laid aside.

Mr. CONKLING. There is no need for a motion for that; it will the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. CONKLING. When the unfinished business is taken up, I have the floor I believe. If I have, no Senator can deprive me of the floor to make a motion. Now, I do not insist upon my right; but I ask that the unfinished business be laid aside informally, not by a vote of the Senate but by consent. Then when I choose to call it up to make any remarks I may wish, that will be my right.

Mr. WITHERS. On inquiry from the Chair I ascertained that the discussion just closed was proceeding not under the Anthony rule nor under the morning hour, but by unanimous consent of the Senate, and consequently I did not suppose I was interfering with the unfinished business by the motion I made.

Mr. CONKLING. Not at all; the Senator is quite right and quite in order, not trenching on my rights at all, but I do not wish a vote of the Senate to postpone the unfinished business because that puts it beyond my control. I yield the floor, but I should like to have

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to say to the Senator from New York that there are two appropriation bills ready for action.

Mr. CONKLING. I shall not antagonize any of them.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence

A bill (H. R. No. 6730) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; and A joint resolution (H. R. No. 35) authorizing the name of the schooner Isle of Pines to be changed to George S. Sleight.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6719) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask that unanimous consent may be given to dispense with the pro forma reading of the bill in order that it may be read by paragraphs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has directed that it be read for amendment.

Mr. WITHERS. Then, before the bill is read, I wish to make a general statement in connection with the bill itself, in explanation of its provisions, which will probably save some subsequent inter-The amount of estimates for the next fiscal year is.. $29,053,747 51

The amount of last year's appropriation was $26,425,800. This bill therefore exceeds, as reported, the bill for 1881 by $262,000. It is less than the estimates by $2,365,947. The items of increase and reduction under the present bill as reported to the Senate, as compared with the act for 1881, are as follows:

Net increase	262, 000

Now, Mr. President, as the reading progresses, I will briefly take occasion to explain the amendments which have been submitted by the Committee on Appropriations for the consideration of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair.) The amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be acted upon as they are reached in order in the reading of the bill; and after the amendments reported by the committee are considered, amendments generally will then be received. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 10, to increase the appropriation "for expenses of recruiting and transportation of recruits from rendezvous to depot" from $75,000 to $97,000.

Mr. WITHERS. I would explain with regard to that increase of the House bill that the estimate submitted by the Department was $99,088; the Secretary of War and the Paymaster-General were both be-$99,088; the Secretary or War and the Faymaster-General were both before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and urged that it would be exceedingly injurious to reduce the amount of the appropriation asked for in the estimates, because those estimates were based upon the actual knowledge of the Department of the expiration of the terms of enlistment in the Army and the usual percentage of casualties which occur in the Army, and that a less amount than that estimated for would seriously cripple the service and prevent its being kept up to the standard of $5,000 men, upon which this bill is framed. The committee thought the reasons were sufficient to instify them in The committee thought the reasons were sufficient to justify them in reporting the increase asked for to within a fraction of the estimate. The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for the Pay Department, in line 48, after the word "pay," to insert:

And the actual time of service in the Army or Navy, or both, shall be allowed all officers in computing their pay and length of service.

Mr. WITHERS. The explanation of that is that, in computing Mr. WITHERS. The explanation of that is that, in computing what is called longevity pay in the Army, length of service is considered. There are some officers in the Army, three or four only I understand, who, prior to entering the Army, served honorably and efficiently in the Navy, but their time of service there is not computed in estimating their pay in the Army. There is a want of reciprocity in this matter, because previous service in the Army is counted in the case of a naval officer by the Navy Department. The matter was brought to the attention of the Secretary of War by the Paymaster-General, and he said there was no objection to this provision and that it was manifestly right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, after the word "officers," in line 52, to insert:

For the payment of any such officers as may be in service, either upon the active or retired list, during the year ending June 30, 1882, in excess of the numbers for each class provided for in this act.

Mr. WITHERS. That is a mere transposition from the House bill. It was there incorporated under the head of "miscellaneous expenses," and the Pay Department suggested that it had better come in its proper place here. It is a mere transposition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in line 59, after the word "discharge," to strike out "one retired ordnance-sergeant" and insert "two retired ordnance-sergeants."

Mr. WITHERS. That is done in order to make the bill correspond with the estimates and with the actual condition of the service. There are two retired ordnance-sergeants, and the two are estimated for; but by a typographical or clerical error one only was provided for in the House bill.

The amendment was agreed to.
The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill.
The next amendment was, in line 75, before the word "commutation," to insert "and for."

Mr. WITHERS. That is a mere verbal amendment to make clear The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, after the word "quarters," in line 77, to

And for the payment of any such officers as may be in service, either upon the active or retired list, during the year ending June 30, 1882, in excess of the numbers for each class provided for in this act.

Mr. WITHERS. The striking out of that is rendered necessary by the adoption of the transposed clause to which I called attention just now.

The amendment was agreed to.
The Secretary continued the reading of the bill.
The next amendment was, after the word "cents," in line 83, to

Provided, That the allowance for commutation of quarters to the Lieutenant-General of the Army shall be $100 per month.

Mr. WITHERS. That is rendered necessary by the following state of facts: two years ago the commutation was reduced by act of Congress to $10 per month, the number of rooms to which each officer is entitled being fixed by Army regulations. Subsequently that allowance was increased to $12 a month for the whole amount of commutation of quarters that should be paid, without mentioning the Lieutenant-General. In the first instance, when the commutation of quarters was reduced the Lieutenant-General's commutation of quarters was not estimated on the basis adopted but a round sum was allowed him for commutation of quarters, $70 a month. Subsequently the ordinary commutation of quarters was increased from $10 to $12, and nothing was said as to the quarters of the Lieutenant-General of the Army; and under the operation, therefore, of the present law the Lieutenant-General of the Army receives less commutation of the Army receives less commutation. the law the Lieutenant-General of the Army receives less commutation for quarters than a major-general does, who is of inferior rank. The object of this amendment is simply to increase the commutation of quarters of the Lieutenant-General of the Army, to make it $100 per month instead of $70, as it is under the present law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed, and continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the Quartermaster's Department, in line 123, after the word "fuel," to insert "and lights;" so as to read "of fuel and lights for officers, enlisted men, guards, hospitals, storehouses, and offices."

Mr. WITHERS. Under the existing regulations lights are issued by the Commissary Department. A law has been passed directing the establishment of schools in the Army for the instruction of the men; and the lights furnished by the Commissary Department, conthe establishment of schools in the Army for the instruction of the men; and the lights furnished by the Commissary Department, consisting entirely of candles, are found to be so defective that a number of schools are of but very little value at night in consequence of the want of light, the commissaries being unable to issue oil or other more efficient light. The Commissary Department object to it because they say that the transportation of kerosene with food and other supplies would damage the food, and consequently they are unwilling to do it. The object of this amendment is simply to authorize the Ouartermaster's Department to furnish lights, instead of the ize the Quartermaster's Department to furnish lights, instead of the Commissary Department, to make these schools more effective.
The amendment was agreed to.
The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, in line 136, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department from $3,250,000 to $3,500,000.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to state that the amendment is rendered necessary in consequence of the action of the committee in striking out the reappropriation which is in a subsequent portion of the bill, in order to supply the wants under this head. By reason of our refusal to reappropriate $326,000 for this branch of the service, it is necessary to increase this item of appropriation by this amount.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 137, to

Provided, That there shall be no discrimination in the issue of forage against officers serving east of the Mississippi River, provided they are required by law to be mounted, and actually keep and own their animals.

Mr. WITHERS. That amendment was urged upon the committee, and adopted by them, in consequence of what was believed to be a very unjust and injurious discrimination against officers serving east of the Mississippi River, those west of the Mississippi being entitled to draw forage in kind for their animals, those east of the Mississippi being denied that right—the only instance in the history of civilized governments where there is such a discrimination against a portion of the officers of the army. It is to remedy this inequality and injustice that the committee agreed to incorporate this provision into the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. There was a good reason for the discrimination once; but the reason has passed away; it has ceased to exist.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to understand the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to understand the Senator from Virginia. Does he say the law now existing does not allow officers serving east of the Mississippi to draw forage?

Mr. WITHERS. Yes, sir; there is no doubt about it whatever. Officers serving even in the field east of the Mississippi River cannot draw forage in kind. We have examined the law carefully; we had it before the whole committee, and the statement was made from the War Department. That is undoubtedly the law now.

Mr. LOGAN. Is the meaning of this amendment, can it be so construed as to give forage in kind for horses not in use?

Mr. WITHERS. No, sir; because it is so guarded as to render that impossible.

Mr. LOGAN. That has been done where horses were not used at all, yet forage was drawn and sold; and that was almost universal at

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator is perfectly correct in that statement, and it was that abuse which led to the enactment of the stringent legislation. This is guarded so as to render it impossible that an officer can draw forage for horses to which he is not entitled and which he does not own and use.

Mr. LOGAN. I am glad it is so.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 202, to

Provided, That such payment shall be accepted as in full of all demands for said

Mr. WITHERS. On the part of the committee I propose some amendments to the amendment as offered by the committee, and, in order to simplify the matter, I move that the paragraph which has just been read be amended to read as follows:

To pay land-grant railroads on which the United States is entitled to transportation of troops and supplies free from toll or other charge 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department finds lawfully and justly due and payable to them for transportation, $125,000: Provided, That such payment shall be accepted as in full of all demands for said services.

The necessity for this amendment, as stated to the committee, was this: the appropriation was made in the House upon information that the amount to be paid to railroads of the class specified had been fixed by judicial determination as the law required; but subsequent to the passage of the bill in the House it has been ascertained that the matter has not been definitely determined and that an appeal has been taken both by the Government and by the parties to the judicial decision of the Court of Claims. But as arrears are accumulating to a large extent and the railroads are very much in want of the cial decision of the Court of Claims. But as arrears are accumulating to a large extent and the railroads are very much in want of the money, and as this arrangement seems to have been approved by the Quartermaster's Department as well as by the managers of railroads that had land grants, we concluded to let the appropriation stand, guarded by the provision I have just read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Virginia will be reported and acted upon in connection with the amendment reported by the committee.

The Secretary. After the word "railroad," in line 200, it is proposed to insert "on which the United States is entitled to transportation of troops and supplies free from toll or any other charge."

Mr. WITHERS. The whole had better be read together and the vote taken on all, because the amendments depend one upon another, and all are really one amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to hear it read as it is proposed to be voted on.

The Secretary read as follows:

To pay land-grant railroads on which the United States is entitled to transportation of troops and supplies free from toll or other charge 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department finds lawfully and justly due and payable to them for transportation, $125,000: Provided, That such payment shall be accepted as in full of all demands for said services.

full of all demands for said services.

Mr. DAWES. Why should it be accepted in full if the cases are still pending in the court and how much they shall receive ultimately is yet to be determined? Why is it desired to cut them off? This cuts off, I suppose, both the Government and the railroads from any adjustment in the courts of the proper proportion, does it not?

Mr. WITHERS. The inquiry of the Senator is a very pertinent one. This amendment which has now been suggested was framed in the Department of Justice as embodying in their view the best settlement of the question. Although these claims have not received final judicial determination, yet it is understood that many of the claimants are perfectly willing to accept, as is the Government to allow, 50 per cent. as the basis of adjustment. This is not compulsory, for any railroad company which is unwilling to accept this and sory, for any railroad company which is unwilling to accept this and give the receipt in full need not receive any of it and can prosecute its claim.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator state whether 50 per cent. was

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator state whether 50 per cent. was what was allowed in the Court of Claims? Mr. WITHERS. That was the sum allowed in the Court of Claims. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 217, to increase the appropriation "for purchase and manufacture of clothing and camp and garrison equipage, and for preserving and repacking the stock of clothing and camp and garrison equipage and materials on hand at the Philadelphia, Jeffersonville, and other depots of the Quartermaster's Department," from $1,000,000 to $1,100,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is rendered necessary by the fact that the committee have stricken out, and the Senate so far in Committee of the Whole has indorsed their action in striking out, the reappropriation provided for in the very next clause, and that would leave, under the present prices of clothing and the supplies of flannel and other specified articles required to be furnished the Army, a deficiency. Therefore the committee agreed to increase the appropriation for these clothing supplies to the extent of $100,000, being a small fraction, $8,000 perhaps, less than the estimate of the Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to call attention to an amendment acted on instruction.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to call attention to an amendment acted on

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order to amend anything already acted on unless there be a motion to reconsider.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the amendment in lines 203 and 204. I do not know that I understand the matter; but I suppose that by the contemplated adjustment between the Government and the railroads 50 per cent. of the amount due for transportation is to be paid to the railroads in money and 50 per cent. of the amount justly due is to be made a part of the sinking found. It is to as 8 fund. Is it not so?

Mr. WITHERS. No, sir. There is a certain class of railroads which received aid from the Government, land-grant railroads, over which the Government was entitled to transportation on certain conwhich the Government was entitled to transportation on certain conditions; a certain proportion of the cost of transportation was to be paid to them, and payment was prohibited until the amount they were entitled to receive should receive judicial determination, and under that law their cases were hung up in the courts for some years. Finally, a few years ago, an appropriation of $300,000 was made, upon the basis of an adjustment of 66 per cent., to the railroads. Services which have been rendered since that time have all to be subjected to the same judicial determination before the railroads can receive anything. Suit, consequently, has been brought by the companies in the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims fixed upon 50 per cent. as the amount which ought properly to be paid them. Inasmuch as an appeal has been taken from the decision of the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States, two or three years must necessarily elapse before the case can have a hearing in the Supreme Court. In this state of affairs some of the railroad companies are Court. In this state of affairs some of the railroad companies are willing to take the amount agreed upon by the Court of Claims, and the Government is willing to allow it, provided the railroads will accept it in full of their demands. Those railroads which are not willing to do that will of course await the ultimate decision of the willing to do that will of course await the ultimate decision of the Supreme Court. In the opinion of the committee it will probably be better for Congress to make an annual appropriation to meet something like the amount due these railroads, rather than wait several years and then have the accumulated earnings of the roads paid them.

Mr. BLAIR. Take, now, the original language of the bill; it speaks of a certain amount, whatever amount the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them. Does the Government controvert the amount due after it has once been found to be justly so due by the Quartermaster's Department?

amount due after it has once been found to be justly so due by the Quartermaster's Department?

Mr. WITHERS. I did not catch the question.

Mr. BLAIR. The phraseology which it is proposed to amend speaks of the amount which "the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due" for transportation, not an amount in controversy between the Government and the railroads, and it proposes to pay 50 per cent. of the amount found justly to be due the railroads, provided they will give a receipt for the whole and thus waive all claim for the remaining 50 per cent. thus found to be justly due them. It see, to me there is some confusion of the language which is employed, which it is proposed to amend. If the proposition was to pay 50 cent. of the amount claimed by the railroads provided they wot give a receipt for the whole amount, I could understand it. But th bill proposes to pay 50 per cent. of the amount justly due them, previded they will give a receipt for all of it and discharge the Gove ment.

Mr. WITHERS. The amount justly due them is the sum as Mr. WITHERS. The amount justly due them is the sum as tained by the Court of Claims, because there was an agreement tween the roads and the General Government when they receiv governmental aid that they should transport Government supplies, &c. There are two different classes of grants; but the general idea was that they should transport at such rates below the regular rates to other persons as might be fixed by judicial determination. That was the law of Congress. Mr. BLAIR. I understand that; but this is the language of the bill: "To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them for transportation, $125,-000." Then the committee propose an amendment, adding this condition, "provided that such payment"—50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department finds to be justly due them—"shall be accepted as in full of all demands for said services." I do not under-

Mr. ALLISON. The language employed there, "justly due," does seem a little incongruous. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia that instead of using the words "justly due" he use this language, "50 per cent. of the amount earned."

Mr. WITHERS. The amendment which has just been adopted, I think, will meet the views of gentlemen. I would ask that the Secretary report the amendment which has been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the sec-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the section as amended.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish, in reference to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa, to ask him what distinction there can be between "the amount justly due" and "the amount earned?" Why not substitute for the phrase "justly due" the "amount claimed by them?" Is not that precisely what is in controversy?

Mr. ALLISON. That will not do for the reason that that is not what is in controversy. These land-grant railroads agree that in view of their land grants the Government is entitled to a different rate of transportation because of its right to their road-bed; but they claim that they are not bound, under the language of the statutes making the grants, to furnish rolling-stock and locomotives, &c., and men to conduct this transportation. They say, therefore, that a reasonable sum should be allowed for the use of this rolling-stock and for the expenses of transportation, but—

Mr. BLAIR. And that constitutes the controversy.

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me to complete my sentence. But they are willing that a deduction should be made for the road-bed. The Secretary of War many years ago fixed 66% per cent. as the proper proportion that should be paid to these railroads, allowing 33% per cent. for the road-bed. The railroads thought that was a just solution of the question, but the Court of Claims have decided that 50 per cent. instead of 66% was the proper proportion, and therefore the railroads are practically claiming 66% per cent., and the Government is proposing to pay them 50 per cent.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Iowa—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I call his attention to

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I call his attention to the fact that he is not answering the point; that he is stating why one side or the other may properly claim or both sides may agree that less than the ordinary cost of transportation to other customers shall be charged the Government. Whether the sum which is justly due these railroads be 50 per cent. of the ordinary price or 66 per cent. or 30 per cent., it is a sum justly due them. That is what is due the roads. The bill uses the phraseology that the Quartermaster's Department having ascertained what is justly due the roads, which is 66 per cent. or 50 per cent. of an ordinary price, they shall take 50 per cent. of that. It is not 50 per cent. of an ordinary compensation; it is 50 per cent. of this claim of the United States that they are to take; so that if the Court of Claims and the Quartermaster's Department should say they are entitled, by reason of the Government right to the use of the road-bed graded, to only 50 per cent. of what would otherwise be charged the Government, then, under the bill, they have got to take 25 per cent. of that. That is the difficulty.

Mr. ALLISON. I quite agree with the Senator, that the proper phraseology has not been used in the bill; but I was endeavoring when interrupted to criticise the suggested phraseology of the Senator from New Hampshire, which is 50 per cent.

Mr. BLAIR. I suggested nophraseology. I suggested somewhat in criticism of the Senator's that he substitute for the word "earned" the words "the amount claimed."

Mr. ALLISON. So I understood the Senator, but I understood him also to say the allowance should be 50 per cent. of the amount claimed. That will not do, because the railways only claim 66§ per cent. of the whole compensation, and the object of the bill really is to give them 50 per cent. of the Senator from Iowa and the Senator

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Virginia, as a change of phraseolgy to meet what everybody agrees ought to be, to strike out "justly due them" and insert "to be a just compensation." Then it would read:

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department finds to be a just compensation for transportation.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that he add "under their regular tariff."

Mr. DAWES. I do not know whether it is the regular tariff or whether they have a special tariff for Government freight. I propose that whatever the Quartermaster's Department finds to be a just compensation for this service, the Government shall withhold 50 per cent. of it and pay over 50 per cent. to the other party. The Quartermaster's Department will be governed by that, of course, if that is the rule. Does the Senator from Virginia get the idea of this amendment?

amendment?

Mr. WITHERS. I will state, in this connection, that a portion of the phraseology now employed was furnished to the sub-committee by the Department of Justice, because we desired to meet the points which are provided for, in our judgment, by the bill. As the phraseology was a matter of great importance, we requested that the Department of Justice should furnish us the language which would accomplish the purposes desired to be attained, and that was furnished. nished.

The Quartermaster-General was before us.

Mr. EATON. The Quartermaster-General was before us.
Mr. WITHERS. The Quartermaster-General was before us, as was also the representative of the Department of Justice.
Mr. DAWES. I think the Senator is much more critical and accurate in the use of language than that is, and he will see at once that that phraseology is open to question.
Mr. WITHERS. It is not to my mind; no doubt it is my fault; but not being a lawyer I was unwilling to trust myself in framing the legislation which would attain the object sought to be secured, and applied to what I believed to be the best authorities on the subject. That part of the bill was submitted to them. There were one or two verbal changes made at the suggestion of a Senator in whose judicial and legal attainments I have the utmost confidence. Therefore I am unwilling, unless very good cause can be shown, to depart from it.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move to strike out the word "justly" before "due," and to insert after the word "transportation" the words "under their regular tariff."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Rhode Island that sundry amendments to this clause have been agreed to, and unless a motion is made to reconsider those votes the agreed to, are always will not be in order at this time.

agreed to, and unless a motion is made to reconsider those votes the amendment, of course, will not be in order at this time.

Mr. DAWES. This is not an amendment to an amendment; it is an amendment to the text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that perfectly, but the amendments to the clause have been agreed to and it has been passed over. If there is a motion made to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to, the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island will be in order.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Chair rule that no part of this text can be

Mr. DAWES. Does the Chair rule that no part of this text can be amended in the Committee of the Whole except it be amended while the Senate is considering the Appropriations Committee's amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated the rule of pro-The Senate is considering the amendments offered by the committee, and when they are through with any other amendments that may be proposed can be considered. This course is pursued as a mere matter of convenience.

Mr. DAWES. Does that apply to amendments in Committee of the Whole as well as in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly.
Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will the PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts wind state his point of order.

Mr. HOAR. My point of order is that when the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Blair] addressed the Chair, the Chair informed him that he could only proceed upon a motion to reconsider, and thereupon stated from the Chair that a motion to reconsider was pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not state that a motion to reconsider was pending before the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not state that a motion to reconsider was pending before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I so understood the Chair. I make the motion to reconsider now, with the leave of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator from Rhode Island will permit me—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has moved to reconsider the amendments adopted to this clause from line 200 to line 205. That motion is now pending, and the Senator from Rhode Island has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. BURNSIDE. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. BURNSIDE. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, Will the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, reconsider its action in adopting the as in Committee of the whole, reconsider its action in adopting the amendments reported by the committee?

Mr. ALLISON. It is not necessary to reconsider. The amendment suggested is an amendment to the text; it was not considered by the committee. This paragraph is amendable after the committee's amendments are considered.

Mr. WITHERS. After we get through with the committee's amendments.

Mr. HOAR. It is only a matter of form. The Senate has got the whole thing before it, and has heard it probably quite as much as any Senator desires, and can deal with it now. If we reconsider, my colleague's amendment or that of the Senator from Rhode Island can be added to the amendment proposed by the committee and the whole matter disposed of. Otherwise we have got to depart from this subject, go to the end of the bill, and then come back and have the whole matter discussed over again. It is a mere question of convenience,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the amendments to this clause will be regarded as reconsidered. The Senator from Rhode Island now proposes an amendment.

Mr. BURNSIDE. In line 201 I move to strike out the word "justly" before "due," and after the word "transportation," in line 202, to insert "under their regular tariff."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE.]

Mr. BLAIR. If I understand this at all, it is a very simple matter. Really it is only a question whether we choose to enact into law a requirement that a man shall accept 50 per cent. of what we admit to be due him in full discharge of the whole. That is all the question that is involved; and if that is a correct statement of it, the trouble will all be remedied by simply striking out the words "50 per cent. of," leaving the rest of the clause as it now stands:

To pay land-grant railroads what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them for transportation, $125,000.

Then the provision can follow with reference to its being accepted in full of all demands for services. I suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that instead of the amendment which he has moved he agree simply to strike out the words "50 per cent. of" in the first line agree simply to strike out the words "50 per cent. of" in the first line of the paragraph.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I beg to say that that would place the whole thing in the hands of the Quartermaster's Department as to percentage. The matter of percentage has been decided by the Court of Claims. They have decided that 50 per cent. is the amount that should be allowed to the railroads for transportation.

Mr. McMILLAN. Fifty per cent. of what?

Mr. BURNSIDE. Fifty per cent. of the amount that would be due them under their regular tariff for transportation. In the consideration of this question before the Military Committee we always regarded that as the proper percentage of the regular tariff of the roads. For of this question before the Military Committee we always regarded that as the proper percentage of the regular tariff of the roads. For instance, if they would charge $15 for transporting a soldier or any other person a certain distance, they are to be allowed $7.50 for the transportation of the soldier; that is, if the regular rate would call for a payment of $15 in the transportation of that soldier or of anybody else, then they are to be allowed $7.50 under the decision of the Court of Claims.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President—

yield?

Mr. BURNSIDE. Yes, sir. Mr. BLAIR. I do not wish to take the floor from the Senator, but I wish to suggest that the whole matter seems to be strangely confused with what is being done in the Court of Claims in regard to a controversy between certain railroads and the Government. It seems controversy between certain railroads and the Government. It seems to me that there is no occasion for taking into consideration anything but the language here employed. Whatever is in controversy between the Government and these railroads is not likely to be found by the Quartermaster's Department to be actually due to the railroads. They are not to pass upon the question where there is any matter involved in controversy, or if they do their finding would be likely to conclude the Government. At all events it would conclude the Government in connection with the phraseology of the bill here. The real design, I suppose, is that the Government may adjust with the railroads and pay them in full whatever is really due to them, whatever they mutually agree to be due, without reference to a controversy in the Court of Claims at all.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to state—

Mr. BLAIR. In a moment.
Mr. BURNSIDE. Just at this point.
Mr. BLAIR. Just at this very point one word more.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator speaks of what is due under the ordinary tariff for conveying a passenger. That is not what is due from the Government for the conveyance of a soldier, because there is a special agreement with reference to the conveyance of the soldier; and the Quartermaster's Department will undoubtedly find to be justly due for the conveyance of the soldier or for governmental transportation whatever that tariff dictates, whatever is due by the terms of the whatever that tariff dictates, whatever is due by the terms of the tariff. This evidently concedes a claim on the part of the railroad companies that a sum is due to them by the Quartermaster's Department. That being so, I see no reason why that account should be receipted for in full upon the payment of one-half of it. It seems to me that the matter is very clear, and that it is designed to have reference to nothing whatever but accounts which are not in controversy between the Department and the railroad companies. If we strike out the words "50 per cent. of" and drop the amendment in toto, the whole will be explicit and there will be up room for any sort of conwhole will be explicit and there will be no room for any sort of controversy whatever.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The Senator from New Hampshire seems to lose sight of the fact that there has been a controversy between the War Department and the railroad companies for six or eight years, and they have been bickering with each other in trying to arrive at some onclusion.

Mr. BLAIR. Has the Department found any sum justly due? I should like to ask the question if the Quartermaster's Department finds any sum to be justly due?

Mr. BURNSIDE. The Quartermaster's Department had no right to find any other sum than what would be due to the companies under their results of the companies under their results of the companies under their regular tariff.

Mr. BLAIR. Do they admit that to be justly due?
Mr. BURNSIDE. They say distinctly that a distinct sum is due to the railroad companies.

Mr. BLAIR. Then the bill as amended provides that one-half of the amount which the Quartermaster's Department finds to be justly due being paid, the railroad companies shall receipt for the whole. Why not provide that upon the payment of the whole amount which the Quartermaster's Department finds to be justly due they shall give their receipt for it and receive that amount?

Mr. BURNSIDE. They need not take the 50 per cent. unless they want to do so; they are not compelled to take it. The Court of Claims has decided that the Secretary of War shall open an account, which I think was fixed at 66 per cent., or 60 per cent. at one time.

Mr. BLAIR. It will not be any use for me to endeavor to make

Mr. BLAIR. It will not be any use for me to endeavor to make myself understood, and I shall not make any further effort.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I can understand the Senator from New Hampshire perfectly. I am willing to say that the railroad companies can take this 50 per cent. in full if they desire, and if they do not wish to do so they need not take it. I hold that 50 per cent. of the regular tariff is a just and fair sum to which they are entitled.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator mean to say that he understands that 50 per cent. of the amount justly due is all that is justly due?

Mr. BURNSIDE. Yes, I do.

Mr. BURNSIDE. No; I have moved to strike out the word "justly" so as to provide that they shall be paid one-half of what is due them under regular transportation rates. Under the law these roads have to transport troops free of charge. The Senator from New Hampshire understands, I take it, what is meant. It is that the Government of the United States can have the use of the railroad track to transport its troops, but in transporting its troops it must furnish its moport its troops, but in transporting its troops it must furnish its motive power. The question presented is simply a decision as to how much the use of their cars and their motive power is worth. As the court seems to have settled upon 50 per cent, as the proper amount due to the railroad companies for the use of their cars and their motive power is worth. due to the railroad companies for the use of their cars and their motive power, it is simply a construction of law, and the Quartermaster's Department have nothing to do with it. The bill appropriates a certain amount of money for the payment of the claims due to the railroad companies, and says if you will take the 50 per cent. in full you can have it, and if not you cannot have it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Rhode Island wield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BURNSIDE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I thought I was recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island was yielding, and the Chair recognized the Senator from Tennessee to ask

Mr. HARRIS. I simply desire to ask how the Quartermaster-General will ascertain what is justly due a railroad company. The first step the Quartermaster-General must take, as it seems to me, is to ascertain what the contract between the Government and the rail-road company is. If the contract is that the railroad company is to receive 50 per cent. of what is usually charged for transportation, then the Quartermaster-General would determine what 50 per cent. of the the Quartermaster-General would determine what 50 per cent. of the amount of transportation amounted to, and that would be the sum justly due. I think the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire is clearly proper and necessary, because the bill, as it now stands, asserts that you shall pay only 50 per cent. of what is found justly due. The Quartermaster-General cannot find a larger amount as due than will be due under the contract between the Government and the railroad company, and if that contract is to receive only a proportion of the ordinary charges the Quartermaster-General would proportion of the ordinary charges the Quartermaster-General would calculate and ascertain the amount by and from that proportion. I think the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire is absolutely necessary. Otherwise under the bill you can pay but one-half of what is ascertained to be actually due to the parties.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I will state to the Senator from Tennessee that I have moved to amend the bill by striking out the word "justly" before "due." I will state another fact which he seems to have lost in the first and the Senator from New Hampshire has lest sight of the sight of, and the Senator from New Hampshire has lost sight of the same thing, that the amounts found to be due these companies under their regular tariff are not on record in the Quartermaster's Department. Every time a regiment or brigade of soldiers has been transported, accounts have been rendered, and the Quartermaster's Department has those accounts. He knows distinctly what they are under the regular tariff of the road. Under the law giving grants of land to these railway companies that have to transport transport under the regular tariff of the road. Under the law giving grants of land to these railway companies, they have to transport troops free of charge. It has been decided that that simply means that they shall furnish their road-bed and track, but that they are not bound to use their rolling-stock and motive-power. Therefore an allowance must be made to these companies to pay them for the use of their motive power and general rolling-stock. It has been settled, not finally settled, but it has been generally agreed by the courts and by the committees of Congress, that 50 per cent. is the proper amount. The Appropriations Committee has very properly said that a certain amount of money, so many thousand dollars, is appropriated for the purpose of paying these claims, or rather 50 per cent. of them, which accounts are all in the Quartermaster's Department under charge of the Quartermaster-General himself, in case they accept it in full. In case they do not they need not. I think that statement goes to the wery bottom of the subject.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President—

Mr. BURNSIDE. Allow me just one moment more. I propose to strike out the word "justly" before "due," and after the word "transportation" to insert "under their regular tariff," so that the clause will read :

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department finds due them for transportation under their regular tariff, $125,000.

Then comes the provise that the road accept this payment in full. If they do not accept it in full then their claims will not be paid out of this appropriation.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, we seem—

Mr. WITHERS. Before the Senator from Massachusetts proceeds will he allow me—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield? Mr. HOAR.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Kentucky?
Mr. BECK. I desire to suggest to the Senator before he proceeds, that perhaps he would like to have a communication to the Comptroller read, and the reply of the Comptroller, which explains much of what has been spoken of. I do not want to say a word except to selve the Clerk to read these papers.

of what has been spoken of. I do not want to say a word except to ask the Clerk to read these papers.

Mr. HOAR. I will yield to the Senator from Kentucky, and then to my good-natured friend from Virginia.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator from Kentucky has proposed to do exactly what the Senator from Virginia has been anxious to have done for the last fifteen minutes.

Mr. BECK. Let the Clerk read the communications I send to the desk. They illustrate much of what has been the action of the committee and show why we have noted.

mittee and show why we have acted.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Comptroller:

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Comptroller:

In the matter of the payment of $300,000, appropriated by the sundry civil act of March 3, 1879, to certain land-grant railroad companies, referred by the Quartermaster-General, through the Secretary of War, April 12, 1879.

In the year 1850, and at various times since almost down to the present time, the Congress has granted portions of the public lands to certain railroad corporations, and to several of the States for the use of railroad corporations, chartered or to be chartered by said States, to aid in the construction of their roads.

These grants were made on certain conditions as to Government transportation. The conditions vary in some cases, but in the cases of more than forty of said roads they are the same, or nearly so, and are substantially "that said railroad shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, free from all toll or other charge upon the transportation of any property or troops of the United States."

This condition was held by the legislative and executive departments to require said companies to do the transportation of the Government without charge; and this understanding was concurred in by said railroad companies generally. But some of the companies resisted, and in the cases of the Lake Superior and Mississippi Railroad Company vz. United States, the Supreme Court decided at October term, 376, (93 U. S., 442) that said provision "secured to the Government the free use of the road, but does not ertille the Government to have troops or property transported by the company free of charge for transporting the same;" that the companies are entitled to compensation for all transportation performed, subject to a fair deduction for the use of the road.

Congress has passed three acts prohibiting payment to land-grant railroads, viz. Act of June 16, 1874, (18 States, 74), act of June 22, 1874, (18 States, 3) act of March 3, 1876, (18 States, 40 and 18 property or troops of the United States, or e upon the same condition as that in the two cases before the Supreme Court, the Congress extended the provision and appropriation so as to embrace all railroad companies that were in the same predicament, or at least in the same category; leaving to the accounting officers to determine to which companies the Supreme Court's decision is applicable. This will clearly appear from the proceedings, especially in the Senate, relating to the provision in question.

On careful examination of the original acts of Congress in the light of the decision of the Supreme Court referred to, I find that the following list embraces all the companies that will be entitled to receive payment out of the appropriation of $300,000 in the act of March 3, 1879, in case payment has been withheld from them under the three acts referred to therein. This list corresponds with the list furnished by the Quartermaster-General, transmitted to Congress by letter of the Secretary of War, February 24, 1879, namely:

These, as I understand, are all the companies that can be entitled to the relief afforded by the provisions referred to in the act of March 3, 1879, and of course only such of these as payment has been withheld from under the acts of 1874 and 1875. If any other company shall be found to be entitled it may be added hereafter. The case of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company will be considered separately.
I understand from you that it has been already determined that the sum appropriated is not to be distributed pro rata among the several companies entitled, but that the amount payable is to be paid in full to each company in the order of the filing of the claims. I suppose the filing either with the Quartermaster-General, the Third Auditor, or the Court of Claims should be considered as proper filing under the rule.

the Third Auditor, or the Court of Claims should be considered as proper filing under the rule.

The act provides that the payment shall not exceed 50 per cent. of the full amount allowed by the Quartermaster-General.

As the finding of the Quartermaster-General is always subject to be admitted by the accounting efficers, the payment should be 50 per cent. of the amount allowed by the Quartermaster-General, as admitted by the accounting officers.

The foregoing general statements will perhaps sufficiently answer the inquiries of the Quartermaster-General, but I recommend that the following more distinct answers be made to his several questions, namely:

1. The provision quoted is applicable to all land-grant railroads (not subsidized) having accounts suspended; that is, having compensation withheld under the acts of 1874 and 1875.

of 1874 and 1875.

2. The appropriation is applicable not only to the cases actually decided by the Supreme Court, but to the cases of all roads in the same category; that is, whose charters contain the same condition as to Government transportation, and are therefore embraced in the decision.

3. The provision is applicable, or would be applicable, to claims in which, under the rulings and decisions of the Supreme Court, the Court of Claims has given judgment in favor of the railroad, though I do not know that there is yet such a case.

4. I do not understand that the last clause of the provision is intended to describe the roads or limit the number or character of the roads that are entitled to the relief afforded by the provisions, but merely to prohibit payment to any of said roads of more than 50 per cent. of the amount due until after said roads shall have gone to the Court of Claims and recovered judgment for some amount above the 50 per cent. paid.

A. THOMAS, Chief of Division.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, May 19, 1879.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War through the honorable Secretary of the Treasury.

1. I know at present of no sufficient ground for excluding from the operation of the within-recited provision of the act of March 3, 1879, any accounts for military transportation upon which action has been suspended under the acts of June 16 and 22, 1874, and March 3, 1875.

2. I think that payment out of this appropriation is not confined to the particular cases or claims that have been litigated in the Supreme Court.

3. I think this appropriation is applicable to claims in which, under the rulings and decisions of the Supreme Court, the Court of Claims has given judgment in favor of the railroads, subject, however, to a question whether other claimants of this appropriation may not be entitled to insist that such judgments shall be satisfied out of some other appropriation; and as to whether such right exists in favor of other claimants I do not feel at liberty to express an opinion until the respective cases shall come before this office for decision.

4. I think the same question may arise in regard to payment of claims mentioned in the fourth interrogatory, and that unless excluded on that ground the $300,000 is applicable to their payment.

Attention is invited to the inclosed opinion of Mr. Alfred Thomas, of this office.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—

W. W. UPTON, Comptroller.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President—
Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator—
Mr. HOAR. I think I shall not yield to anybody else.
Mr. ALLISON. I was about to ask the Senator to yield to me so that I may suggest an amendment.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has

Mr. HOAR. I will take but a moment to point out that this whole Mr. HOAR. I will take but a moment to point out that this whole discussion is a discussion over a phrase to accomplish a result to which every Senator is agreed. It is clear that the phraseology proposed by the committee will not do, because this 50 per cent. once allowed is all that is "justly due." It will not do, therefore, to say that when 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department allow, to use the phraseology of the original act, is ascertained, they shall still only have 25 per cent. of that, the result of this 50 per cent. Fifty per cent. would be the allowance, and they could only have 50 per cent. of that, the result being that they would get only half of what is justly due and only a quarter of what the Quartermaster's Department finds to be the whole price of transportation. The objection to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island master's Department finds to be the whole price of transportation. The objection to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island is that he requires the Quartermaster's Department to take the railroad's regular tariff absolutely and in all cases. In the first place, the railroads may not have a regular tariff which is applicable to soldiers; and, in the next place, if we embody this phraseology in our legislation the railroads may put up their regular tariff 100 per cent.; and if the Quartermaster's Department is bound absolutely by that, they would get the whole price.

I make a suggestion which I think my colleague, who has moved an amendment, will agree to, to substitute the precise language of the original act. I ask the attention of the honorable Senator from Virginia to it. I suggest to insert after the words "Quartermaster's Department" the word "allow;" so that it will read "to pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department allows for transportation." That is exactly what the original act

Says.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion on that very point?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I propose to insert, if the Senator will just look at the printed bill, so as to make it read "to pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of the amount audited and approved by the Quartermaster-General for transportation."

Mr. HOAR. That is a great deal better than mine, and I agree

Mr. WITHERS. Will the Senator allow me to suggest that under that phraseology the roads would not receive anything because of the existence of a law which forbids it until the amount of their claim upon the Government shall have been judicially determined.

claim upon the Government shall have been judicially determined.

It has not been judicially determined.

Mr. HOAR. This would repeal the old law.

Mr. WITHERS. There is now litigation before the Supreme Court.

Mr. HOAR. This pro tanto repeals the other law, and when it goes into effect will take the place, pro tanto, of the other law.

Mr. WITHERS. Would it repeal the other law?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly, to that extent.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Virginia will pardon me, I will venture to move an amendment, to strike out in line 200 all after.

will venture to move an amendment, to strike out in line 200 all after the word "of" down to and including the word "then," in line 201, and insert in lieu thereof "the account audited and approved by the Quartermaster-General."

Mr. CONKLING. And pay 50 per cent. of that?
Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir. Then it would read:
To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of the amount audited and approved by the Quartermaster-General for transportation, $125,000: Provided, That such payment &c.

Mr. BURNSIDE. On what basis is the Quartermaster-General to audit the account? He may take it upon himself to say that they shall have only 50 per cent. I think this is a very unjust proposition. Mr. ALLISON. These accounts are all audited in the Quartermas-

Mr. ALLISON. These accounts are all audited in the Quartermaster-General's Office, say for two cents per mile—

Mr. BURNSIDE. I beg pardon, they are not audited in the Quartermaster-General's Office at all; they are arranged by the quartermasters on the lines of transportation. Vouchers are given to the railroad companies for the transportation of troops at given rates, and the figures are sent to the Quartermaster's Department, and the Quartermaster-General has nothing to do with them. There is no basis upon which a court can decide except the regular rates of the railroad. If the court says they shall have 50 per cent., it means 50 per cent. of what? Fifty per cent. of what the Quartermaster-General eral here in Washington shall say is due them? No; it means 50 per cent. of the regular rates of the company. There is no other basis to go on; and you cannot make any other basis.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Rhode Island will allow me, I will put against his statement the opinion of the Court of Claims with reference to the method of adjusting these accounts. In suggesting this amendment I must do myself the justice to say that I simply copied the language of the Court of Claims. I took that language of the Court of Claims. simply copied the language of the Court of Claims. I took that language from the decision of the Court of Claims upon this very question. I thought I had it before me, but I have not. I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island that these accounts are regularly audited in the Quartermaster-General's Office and then sent, of course, to the other accounting officers. If troops are transported they are transported according to a regulation of the Quartermaster-General's Office, at, say, two cents per mile. If freights are transported they are transported usually upon special contracts made upon public lettings, there being perhaps three or four or half a dozen of these land-grant roads who can transport this freight. Then these accounts are returned to the Quartermaster-General and he makes up his accounts, crediting these railways as if they were not land-grant roads. My amendment proposes to pay them 50 per cent. of that sum, whatever it is.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator from Massachusetts has very correctly stated that the whole of this discussion is a matter of criticism of phraseology. We all desire to attain exactly the same end that is, to pay these parties 50 per cent. of what their usual rates of transportation are in consideration of what we have done for them in the granting of lands.

Mr. BURNSIDE. That is exactly what I say. The Senator from Virginia has taken my position exactly. We want to pay them 50 per cent. of their usual rates. Perhaps that is a better term than

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island, however, to the fact that under existing law nothing can be paid these roads until their claims against the Government shall have received judicial determination.

Mr. BURNSIDE. That is true. Therefore I think this matter is not very material, because if a road does not feel itself amply paid under the law it will not accept the sum tendered.

Mr. WITHERS. The whole object of the committee was to liquidate claims against the Government for money due the railroads by appropriating an amount each year something like the amount to which the companies are entitled, in order to distribute it and prevent accumulation, and to make that distribution in such a way as to prevent the Government being made liable to an amount greater than 50 per cent., which is the sum ascertained by the Court of Claims to be equitable and right. That was the object of the committee, and every Senator who has spoken on the subject seems to concur in that view. As to the particular phraseology used by the committee, it was in part copied from the existing law on the subject and in part furnished by the Department.

Mr. CONKLING. It seems to be considered the duty of every Senator to make a suggestion about this matter, and I wish to conform to what is evidently the sense of propriety of the Senate. I will make my suggestion by inquiring of the Senator from Virginia whether I am right in understanding the purpose to be to pay to these companies one-half of what they earn for transportation. Is not that it? date claims against the Government for money due the railroads by not that it?

not that it?

Mr. WITHERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. Is there any other object?

Mr. WITHERS. None, except, if the Senator from New York will permit me, to require that that shall be accepted in full of their claim; not to pay that on account, but as in full for their claim.

Mr. CONKLING. Let me restate it and see if I can embrace that.

The purpose is to pay certain railway companies one-half the amount earned by them for transportation and to pay it in full. Is that it?

Mr. WITHERS. That is it, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. And all this discussion proceeds over the question how to attain that object?

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator has correctly stated it, according to my understanding.

Mr. CONKLING. If I had not heard other Senators so much more earned and lawyers so much more astute differ with each other about this, I should have supposed it was very simple to express that purpose. If the object is to state that you propose to pay to certain companies in full of their demands for transportation one-half the amount of that transportation, I should have supposed that almost any Senator might invent language which would express that idea; but admonished as I am by the diverse beliefs of others I would not be guilty of the temerity of suggesting, except orally, how it could be expressed. I think, however, if the Senator from Virginia with his customary enterprise and alertness will keep on long enough, and if he can enlist the attention and aid of enough other members of the body, eventually he will be able to put into the bill that he proposes to pay these companies in full for their demand one-half of what they

Mr. WITHERS. I was in hopes we should have had a luminous suggestion from the Senator from New York that would accomplish nat purpose without further discussion.

Mr. CONKLING. I have stated two or three times, taking some pains to repeat it here, not venturing to move an amendment, words which, it would seem to me, with the imperfect knowledge that I have of such things, must express clearly that idea and no other. If I want to pay the Senator from Virginia one-half of a certain account between him and me and to pay it in full for that account, I should suppose if I said so that that would be an expression of that idea.

Mr. EATON. As a member of the committee and as a member of the sub-committee, I desire to say to my friend from New York that it was not the idea of the committee to pay one-half of what was due to these companies. I do not think myself upon examination of this language, and therefore I am criticising my own actions, that it conveys the idea that the clause ought to convey. The idea of the committee, based upon the findings of various courts, is that the Governmittee, based upon the findings of various courts, is that the Government will pay one-half of what would be a proper amount by other patrons of the road, according to an agreement heretofore entered into. The great difficulty about ascertaining that amount is that on into. The great difficulty about ascertaining that amount is that on some of the roads 50 per cent., as we are informed, of what my friend from Rhode Island ealls their regular tariff is ample, it is right and just. On other roads we are informed by the Department that there should be more than 50 per cent. paid. In other words if they charge the Senator from New York and myself one hundred cents for a certain traffic they should charge the Government sixty-six cents instead of fifty cents. Most of these roads have agreed and are anxious to adjust this whole question by the payment of 50 per cent. of what is called a fair price for the amount of service that they perform for other parties. form for other parties

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator from Connecticut permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. EATON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Does this relate to past transactions or to current transactions?

Mr. EATON. It relates to past transactions.
Mr. WITHERS. Altogether.
Mr. EATON. I so understand it.

Mr. EATON. I so understand it.
Mr. JONES, of Florida. If I remember aright this question has been before the Supreme Court.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now?
Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think they have already decided.
Mr. EATON. It will not be decided in three years.
Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Supreme Court passed on one case, and has said what proportion of the full rate shall be paid by the Government to the respective railroad companies who received lands in aid of the construction of their roads. As I understand it, they have passed upon that in one case.

in aid of the construction of their roads. As I understand it, they have passed upon that in one case.

Mr. EATON. I was about to observe that one of the great difficulties is to ascertain what the Government ought to pay; in other words, what is in fact 50 per cent. of their fair charge. The railroads have refused to say what their charges were and therefore the necessity, whatever the wording may be, of this language, that if they accept this act it shall be in full payment.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. EATON. Certainly.

Mr. EATON. Certainly.
Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator a question or two. I understand now that the railroad companies claim from the Government the same or substantially the same rates for fare and transportation that they claim from outside parties.

Mr. EATON. No.
Mr. BLAIR. Then what is the claim of the railroad companies against the Government?
Mr. EATON. I will state the claim so as to make it perfectly plain to my friend from New Hampshire. The desire is not to exceed under any circumstances 66 per cent., and from that down to 50 per cent. The legal authority of the United States said that on certain roads

The legal authority of the United States said that on certain roads it should not be over 40 per cent.

Mr. BLAIR. Precisely. Now let me ask this question—
Mr. EATON. Let me finish my answer. They claim one-half.
Mr. BLAIR. Of what?

Mr. EATON. One-half of what their regular rates ought to be; but they will not show the regular rates they charge my friend from New Hampshire over the same route. Therefore the difficulty in the New Hampshire over the same route. Therefore the difficulty in the Quartermaster's Department in arriving at a proper sum, and therefore the necessity of sending this to a court in order to ascertain what 50 per cent. of the 100 per cent. they charge ordinary traffickers is. I think that the amendment which was suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire may cover this whole question—it is not impossible—but I want him to understand, as I do, (I may be wrong, I think not,) that it is 50 per cent. of what might be called a legitimate traffic by other parties over the same line of road.

Mr. BLAIR. But the bill proposes to deal only with the sums found justly due by the Government.

Mr. EATON. I understand that, and therefore I said in the start that as a member of the committee and the sub-committee I had perhaps overlooked what the true meaning of the language of the bill is. I am not satisfied, in other words, with the bill just as it stands now.

Mr. BLAIR. Would striking from the bill the words "50 per cent. of" express the real meaning of the committee?

Mr. EATON. If you go on and add to that what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due, because we want to pay all that is justly due.

Mr. BLAIR. Please read it with a little closer attention and see if it would not then express precisely that idea:

To pay land-grant railroads what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them for transportation: Provided. That such payment shall be accepted as in full of all demands for said services.

Mr. EATON. I observed that possibly the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire might cover the ground. I have not ac-

Mr. EATON. I observed that possibly the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire might cover the ground. I have not accepted it.

Mr. CONKLING. I submit to the Senator from Connecticut—
Mr. WITHERS. Will the Senator yield to me one moment in connection with that point? The difficulty is that the Quartermaster-General might, and I am of opinion would, find that a greater sum was justly due some roads than others.

Mr. BLAIR. That might be. I do not see how that interferes, however, with the suggestion I make. Each road is to be dealt with separately, individually, and I suppose the committee wants to pay to each road the amount which the Quartermaster-General finds due to the road in full and take a receipt accordingly; not to pay 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster-General finds to be due and insist upon a receipt in full for that.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Senator from New York proceeds he will permit the Chair to state to the Senate the motions that are pending, so that it will understand exactly what is under discussion. In line 200, after the word "railroads," the Committee on Appropriations proposed to insert "on which the United States is entitled to transportation of troops and supplies free from toll or other charge." And then, after the word "finds" to insert "lawfully and;" which would make it read, "lawfully and justly due;" and after the word "due" to insert the words "and payable to;" so that if the amendments of the committee be agreed to the lines would read thus:

The read agent to the lines which the United States is entitled to transport.

To pay land-grant railroads on which the United States is entitled to transportation of troops and supplies free from toll or other charge 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department finds lawfully and justly due and payable to them for transportation, $125,000: Provided, That such payment shall be accepted as in full of all demands for said services.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Burnside] has moved, in line 201, to strike out the word "justly" before "due," and after the word "transportation," in line 202, to insert the words "under their regular tariff;" so that if his amendment be agreed to the clause would

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department finds due them for transportation under their regular tariff.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state what is further pending. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] proposes to strike out all after the word "of," in line 200, down to and including the word "them," in the words "what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them" and to insert in lieu thereof "the amount audited and approved by the Quartermaster-General;" so that if his amendment were to prevail the clause would read:

To per land great railreads 50 per cent of the amount audited and approved by

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of the amount audited and approved by the Quartermaster-General for transportation.

The Chair is in doubt as to whether the Senator from Iowa has any The Chair is in doubt as to whether the Senator from Iowa has any right to propose an amendment to an amendment, as his amendment includes the portion proposed to be amended by the Senator from Rhode Island. If there is no point of order raised, the Chair will state that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is the pending question before the Senate, which is to strike out the words "what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them" and to insert in lieu thereof "the amount audited and approved by the Quartermaster-General." On this question the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKUNG] is entitled to the floor. CONKLING] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. EATON. If my friend from New York will permit me, I want to make a suggestion and see if it will not cover the entire ground. I suggest that the clause be made to read:

To pay land-grant railroads whatever sum the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them for transportation, $125,000: Provided, That such payment shall be accepted as in full of all demands for such services.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Connecticut

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut hold the floor by permission of the Senator from New York?

Mr. EATON. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New Hampshire to ask him a question?

Mr. EATON. I do.
Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut to state to the Senate wherein his suggested modification differs from mine? I suggested striking out the words "50 per cent." He proposes to add to the word "what" the word "ever," making the compound word "whatever," and then the phraseology is precisely the same as I suggested.

Mr. EATON. I stand on the compound word.

Mr. BLAIR. I will agree to the compound word.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Will the Senator from New York allow me just

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.
Mr. BURNSIDE. I think the amendment of the Senator from lowa covers the point as fully as it very well can be covered, because these roads will not accept this money unless they are satisfied with the provision; and I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from New York allow me to make a suggestion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York

what he thinks about this affair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York who has the floor be allowed to occupy it and state to us what he thinks about this affair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Rhode Island to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. BIDNSIDE I withdraw it

Mr. BURNSIDE. I withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island is withdrawn. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Alli-

Mr. CONKLING. I beg the Chair to forbear a moment, because if anything else is withdrawn I shall withdraw myself.

I wanted to say to the Senator from Connecticut, but it was so long ago that the motive for doing it is rather faded, that I think long ago that the motive for doing it is rather faded, that I think he falls into an error in his mode of treating this point. He mixes together, as I understand him, two things which it seems to me are plainly separate. As the Senator from Virginia approved my saying some time ago, the purpose of the committee is to allow to these persons one-half their earnings. The Senator from Connecticut says no, because he puts into the statement another thing which I think I can convince him, if he will hear me, has nothing to do with this proposition at all. The first object is to allow and pay to these parties one, half that sum which would be paid them but for their special proposition at all. The first object is to allow and pay to these parties one-half that sum which would be paid them but for their special relations to the Government. Is not that it?

Mr. EATON. Yes. Mr. CONKLING. Mr. EATON. Yes.
Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Connecticut says "yes."
Plainly this is the proposition. If it were not the Government, if it were somebody else, if there were no special and exceptional relations, the whole amount, whatever it might be, of those earnings of course must be paid. Owing to peculiar relations between the Government and these parties, only half of that whole is to be paid.

That is the position is it not?

ernment and these parties, only half of that whole is to be paid. That is the position, is it not?

That is the position, is it not?

That would be very easy of execution and easy of settlement but for another thing which has nothing to do with the proposition itself except that it relates to the mode of ascertaining that total, and therefore that one-half of the total. If you can ascertain what the 50 per cent. is there is no difficulty about it. That is what you want to reach. The difficulty is in reaching it.

The Senator from Connecticut says that the freight tariff, the toll-sheet of one railroad may be extravagant; that of another railroad may be very economical and fair affording only a very small profit.

sheet of one railroad may be extravagant; that of another railroad may be very economical and fair, affording only a very small profit, moving freight per mile per ton at the minimum of cost which will yield profit. He said, or rather he implied, that in such a case as that he would accept it and pay 50 per cent. of that, but when he comes to a railroad that has its freight-sheet so graduated that it makes a large profit above the cost he would not pay on half of that. All that the Senator says in that regard relates to the method of ascertaining this 50 per cent., and does not touch at all the other proposition, namely, to pay 50 per cent. of the value or the earnings, whatever they are. ings, whatever they are.

One would suppose that naturally the way would be to allow the 50 per cent., whatever it might come to, and then in the same section 50 per cent., whatever it might come to, and then in the same section or in another specify the mode in which this value shall be ascertained. If you cannot trust the Quartermaster-General to do it, if you want a court to do it, if you want some other referee, or umpire, or arbitrator, or expert, or process to ascertain, so be it; but all the time what you propose to do is to say although everybody else will have to pay the full price, whatever it is, the actual value, owing to the special relations of the Government the Government pays only half price. That is all there is of it. You propose to pay half price.

Now the Senator asks, how shall we ascertain half price? In other words, how shall we ascertain what would be the fair whole. The point is that you propose to pay 50 per cent. of the actual thing if you can find out what it is. We are all agreed upon that, are we not? The Senator from Connecticut does not respond and very likely I am now misstating his position again, although I understood him once or twice to assent to it.

once or twice to assent to it.

I suggest that having fixed, as the Senator from Iowa proposes to fix, and every Senator who has made a suggestion, as I understand it, proposes to fix, the fact that 50 per cent. of the freight earned is it, proposes to inx, the fact that 50 per cent. of the freight earned is to be offered to these companies,—whether they are to accept it or not I do not know, nor does it concern this matter—having done that the Senate should address itself to the mode of ascertaining that 50 per cent. For one I should be inclined to suppose that if a railroad under the acts of Congress, under its charter, under such competition as takes place under the jurisdiction of the Legislature of the State through which it runs, fixes a certain freight tariff and other people pay according to that tariff, first it might be very fair for the Government to assume that tariff, more especially as there would be a pretty strong presumption that it was a fair basis on which to settle. Again, if an exceptional case should arise where the tariff is thought to be extravagant, one would suppose that the Quartermaster-General, the official of the Government whose business it is to manage transportation, who is presumed to have more knowledge of its value transportation, who is presumed to have more knowledge of its value than any other officer of the Government, and who is the Government's and not the railroad's agent, in the interest of the Government, acting on behalf of the Government, might be trusted to say whether the current rate was a fair one and 50 per cent. of that was to be allowed, or whether it was suspicious and there ought to be particular investigation of that case to see whether they were charging too much per linear foot of space, if the contract calls for that, ing too much per linear foot of space, if the contract calls for that, or per ton per mile moved, if the contract calls for that.

Therefore, in short, I do not see why the Senator from Iowa is not right in substance in saying that if you pay 50 per cent. of that total amount, one-half of that price which the Quartermaster-General ascertains, audits, and certifies, you have the thing about as near safe on the part of the Government as you can well get it. That is the idea of the Senator from Iowa and I do not see why his idea is not correct. The Senator from New Hampshire proposes to get at the same thing in a different way. I am not sure that he does not get at it.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not get at that idea at all, because the committee annex to the language the Senator from New York proposes to use a proviso that the party receiving one-half of what is found by the Quartermaster's Department to be justly due shall give a receipt in discharge of the whole. Now strike out that language and it is all right.

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend will observe that I have not said one word about that. It has no connection whatever with that to which I have spoken; it is a separate and independent proviso at the end of this section, which has nothing at all to do with that part of the section to which I have been speaking. My remarks have been addressed merely to showing what the committee sought to accomplish and how it could be accomplished in measuring the amount to be offered to these companies. This separate and independent provise, which requires of the companies an accord and satpendent proviso, which requires of the companies an accord and satpendent proviso, which requires of the companies an accord and satisfaction, which requires every company that accepts this 50 per cent. to take it as an extinguishment and satisfaction of its demand, is a thing entirely separate from the one in reference to which we have been discussing. How the right or wrong of that may be I do not know, for I have not turned my attention to it. The Senator from Rhode Island answered that suggestion in the remark he made. He said that if the companies thought they ought not to take this, they would not, and I agree with him about that, and, for one, although they may be land-grant railroads and although I know how fashionable and, presumably, how profitable it is to orate and harangue about land-grant railroads, I hope they will have the pluck themselves, or find somebody to advise them who has both the courage and integrity to induce them to resist and rsfuse to take this 50 per cent. if, in rity to induce them to resist and refuse to take this 50 per cent. if, in rity to induce them to resist and refuse to take this 50 per cent. if, in fact and in law, they ought to refuse it. If in honesty they have a larger demand, I have no hesitation for one in saying that I hope they will not be bullied into accepting anything which is not just and fair, although they have not a party but a sovereign to agree with and to deal with, although they have on the other side a government, which may do as it pleases, instead of an honest party amenable to law. I believe myself that one of the crying evils of these times is a tendency which comes to be, that the Government of the United States, because it can, because it is strong in a tyrannous freedom, marches rough-shod over contracts and obligations, over those things which plain folks call good faith. And I want the Senator from Massachusetts to understand that I am neither arguing in favor of nor sympathizing with the idea that the Rob Roy doctrine favor of nor sympathizing with the idea that the Rob Roy doctrine favor of nor sympathizing with the idea that the Rob Roy doctrine is to be applied by the Government to a railroad or to anybody else, that because the Government has the power to snatch and the power to keep, it is therefore decent not to yield to individuals and citizens, corporations or whoever they may be, whatever justly belongs to them according to the principle on which honest debts are paid and just obligations are performed. But I have said nothing about that; I was dealing merely with the other part of the section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I do not think there is any good ground to suppose that the United States has any power under existing laws to do an injustice to a corporation any more than to a private individual in respect of contracts, for the law authorizes everybody who has a contract claim against the United States to sue it if he cannot settle his claim upon terms that are satisfactory to him. That was exactly the case with the railroad companies that are referred to in this bill. Some of them did sue the United States to get what they claimed was contract compensation for United States to get what they claimed was contract compensation for United States transportation. The defense of the United States was that by the acts which granted them lands in aid of building their roads, it was provided that the transportation of the United States over those provided that the transportation of the United States over those roads should go free of toll. The Supreme Court in the two cases that came up decided upon the language of those two grants—and of course upon no others, because no others were before them—that the railway company was right and the United States authorities were wrong in claiming that they were entitled to compel the company to furnish cars and locomotives and service for this transportation free of charge under the language of the grants. They held that the meaning of those two grants which were then under consideration was that the companies were bound to furnish the United States the free right to carry over a track provided by the company the property of the United States of the description named and, therefore, that if the company furnished not only the track, but the cars and locomotives and service, it was entitled to whatever the proportion was between the whole expense of the enterprise referable to cars, to locomotives, and to service, as compared with the road itself. That was the substance of the decision. Therefore it is decided, right or wrong, and it is of no consequence now which view was right; it is settled and we are bound to follow the decision, as I agree, for the time being at any rate. Hence these companies are all lawfully entime being at any rate. Hence these companies are all lawfully entitled to a certain amount of pay for this species of transportation, and according to the principle of the decision, they are entitled to exactly the proportion that the service bears to the cost of the road

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator from Vermont permit me to ask him a question?
Mr. EDMUNDS. With pleasure.
Mr. JONES, of Florida. May I ask if the condition of which the Senator speaks was incorporated into all the land grants that were made to the several railroad companies?

made to the several railroad companies?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps not in every one of them. That was the matter I was about to speak of next. In this great number of grants the phraseology of the statutes varies. Sometimes one phrase is used; sometimes another. In a great many of them I believe the phrase is identical, and all the cases in which the phrase is in substance or literally identical with the two cases decided, of course, you have a rule for; as to the others you have not a rule. So it appears to me, with great deference to the opinions of other Senators, that the simple thing that the Senate needs to do is to provide a sufficient sum of money to discharge whatever lawful obligation the United sum of money to discharge whatever lawful obligation the United States are under to these companies and leave to the administrative authorities to apply this money to each road according to what its rights under this decison are.

Mr. CONKLING. Without saying how that shall be ascertained in the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Without saying in the bill how it shall be ascer-

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont whether these railroads have not an ample, so far as it is ample, remedy in the Court of Claims? I understand that this provision of the bill is one which comes here at the desire of the railroads themselves. The which comes here at the desire of the railroads themselves. The question at issue between them and the Government is a question applicable to each road, what proportion of the cost of carrying troops and supplies for the Government should be allowed, and what the Government should get free in consequence of its right to have the road-bed used for that purpose gratis. Most of the roads say "we will agree to take 50 per cent. and settle the controversy in that way." Any road that refuses has its remedy in the Court of Claims, or may settle with the Government in any other way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know whether any cases are now pending or not. Certainly they may if there is ground of dissatisfaction, seek a remedy by action in the Court of Claims. I think every Senator will see on reflection that if 50 per cent. is the just sum to one road, it does not necessarily follow that it is the just sum to another, even under the very same language in the grant, because then the road, it does not necessarily follow that it is the just sum to another, even under the very same language in the grant, because then the question of the cost of the road, the cost of the rolling-stock and the service are immediately brought into comparison, and in respect of one road the proportion might be altogether different from what it would be in another case. It might happen that 50 per cent. would be too much in one case, it would be too little in another, and we have not the means of determining whether it is right or wrong in any case; but we do know from this decision that in respect of certain of these railroads they have been decided by the last tribunal in this country. but we do know from this decision that in respect of certain of these railroads, they have been decided by the last tribunal in this country for settling private rights to be entitled to a compensation for this service that bears a just proportion, (without its being fixed, except fixed at that particular moment,) to the expense of keeping up the road-bed and the track, and so on. Very well; now in such a case what better can we do than to provide the necessary money and leave it to the administrative authorities to adjust with each company upon the principles laid down by the Supreme Court and the analogies that can be drawn from that decision what each company is entitled to have. That is what it seems to me is the true thing.

Mr. ALLISON. May I interrupt the Senator to make a suggestion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. The difficulty in the way of the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont on this bill is that there is a statute standing in the way of these officers which prohibits them from paying anything to any of these land-grant roads until a decision of the courts shall have been had. We did not feel that we could repeal that statute; in fact, we did not know whether it ought to be repealed or not, because there may be still other questions that ought to be adjudicated in the Court of Claims. A mere appropriation will not do, because under an appropriation, with this statute staring these officers in the face, they cannot pay anything, because the statute says they shall not.

in the face, they cannot pay anything, because the statute says they shall not

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not able to agree with my distinguished friend from Iowa on that proposition. The existing statute declares that the officers of the Government shall not pay anything to these land-grant railroads. Here comes a later statute which authorizes the administrative Department of this Government to pay to the the administrative Department of this Government to pay to the extent of the money that we appropriate to these very same railroads. Mr. ALLISON. Which would operate as a repeal of the other? Mr. EDMUNDS. It-operates, so far as this money goes, as a protanto repeal beyond all question, just like the former act we passed which said that while they are prohibited from paying these companies in general out of the current revenues of the Government appropriated for the Army we will set aside a special sum which the administration of the Government may pay to the railroad companies that are lawfully entitled to payment. Our prohibition against payment is not a decision that they are not lawfully entitled to it. We merely stop the supplies; that is all. Now to the extent of this $125,000 we open the supplies, and just so far the administrative authorities are entitled to pay out the money, in my judgment, beyond thorities are entitled to pay out the money, in my judgment, beyond all question.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree with the Senator about that; but the $125,000 does not settle up these claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly not.
Mr. ALLISON. And therefore this provision was inserted so as to cover a certain class who are willing to take 50 per cent. A certain other class of these railways are not willing to take 50 per cent. Therefore we did not want to bind them to take that. They can go

Therefore we did not want to bind them to take that. They can go into the courts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to bind any of these companies to take 50 per cent. as full satisfaction, because they have the right to fight it out and means are provided of fighting it out, and each case is left on its own merits. If you leave out the proviso entirely and simply appropriate the money to this extent, it leaves it then to be adjusted on business principles under the law between the Government and the company who is willing to take what the Executive Department is willing to give as applied to that particular road to this extent. I do not see any difficulty about it.

But now there is another difficulty that I think ought to be corrected, and that I believe to be of considerable importance in principle. As this bill reads, it is to pay "land-grant railroads," without any limitation. The Union Pacific Railroad is a land-grant railroad, and so are all those that had subsidies in bonds. I think I do not know one that had subsidies in bonds which did not also have a subsidy in lands. I do not wish to break in upon the system that has been adopted about the money-subsidized roads by providing any new means of payment of their funds than such as we have already carefully provided for. Consequently it appears to me there ought to be an amendment of this description such as I think the committee propose to offer.

Mr. MULTHERS. There is an amendment to the printed bill.

Mr. WITHERS. There is an amendment not in the printed bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought I had seen it in the hands of the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. WITHERS. My amendment was adopted by the Senate this morning, but it is not in the bill as printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was told it had been reconsidered; but no matter. That provision ought to be made so as to limit the application of this clause to those companies that have land grants and not money grants.

Mr. WITHERS. It was designed to limit and specify the roads.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont

Mr. BURNSIDE. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont if he would not give the Quartermaster-General, under his suggestion, the judicial power to decide?

Mr. EDMUNDS. By no means. I give him the ordinary business administrative power that private persons dealing with the same companies would have, that is, to say, "Now I think the settlement in respect of your road under the provision in the grant entitles you to 60 per cent.," and my friend from Rhode Island, being president of the company says, "I think it is entitled to 60 per cent." The Quartermaster-General says "I am not able to agree with you." "Very well," the president of the road says; "pay me something on account; let us be paid as far as the Quartermaster-General is willing to pay; and let the court decide on a trial whether the 60 per cent. or 50 per cent. in that given case is the true proportion as between the to pay; and let the court decide on a trial whether the 60 per cent. or 80 per cent. in that given case is the true proportion as between the car-service and the track." It does not give him any judicial power at all. It only gives him the power in a business way to deal with the party with whom he is doing business, and if they finally differ they must then resort to the courts.

Mr. BURNSIDE. That is what they have been doing now for a great purpose of years.

great number of years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The supposed hardship to the railroads was in the fact that Congress prohibited the expenditure of any money for this purpose.

Mr. BURNSIDE. And the original hardship was that the Government failed to pay them anything; in other words, that there was a difference between the railroads and the authorities.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is true enough, but the Quartermaster-General, in my judgment, was quite right, because there was strong ground to maintain that where an act of Congress had said that there should be free transportation without toll or charge, it was intended fairly to include the actual carriage by cars and locomotives and mediated. It was a fair point for the Quartermaster-General to make. He did make it. The courts in the particular case referred to decided that he was mistaken. Then the question is settled; there is no further ground of difference so far. If there are other grants in different language that points still more clearly to the idea that the benefits obtained by the grant are to be compensated for by an actual carriage of troops and supplies free of cost, let the question of the meaning of such grants be judicially determined. I am exactly in favor of the justice the Senator from New York speaks of.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Then I understand the Senator from Vermont to mean that the Quartermaster-General ought to exercise this authority, having the decision of the Court in view, to decide what percentage shall be allowed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a business question. He must; he is the only person who can decide it for the time being.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I would not be averse to that. The company under that decision need not accept it.

under that decision need not accept it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly not.
Mr. BURNSIDE. I do not know that I object to that.
Mr. HOAR. I desire to express my dissent from the opinion of the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Rhode Island. It seems to me that here is a very important matter, involving very serious questions of law and very serious questions of comparison of values, to wit: how much all this great class of railroads, who are beneficiaries of the Government, shall be compelled to allow to the Government by reason of its right, so far as the use of their road-bed is concerned, to free transportation; how much they shall have of the actual cost of transportation performed by them by reason of their contribution of rolling-stock and service.

It seems to me that the policy of the law has been to require that matter to be settled by judicial decision, where the United States might be heard through its law officers and with the right of appeal upon all questions of law existing to the Supreme Court. The suggestion of the Senator from Vermont would refer that entire matter to a single officer of the Government to say what is the law on this

Mr. BURNSIDE. It is entirely optional with the company as to whether they will accept the decision of the Quartermaster-Gen-

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Rhode Island misunderstands me. I am not speaking of this proposition of the Senator from Vermont as objectionable because it does not secure the rights of the railroads. objectionable because it does not secure the rights of the railroads. They are not compelled to accept it, undoubtedly. It is objectionable because it does not secure the rights of the United States. I am not satisfied to leave this important right of the United States to rest solely in the judgment of this officer, however excellent an officer he may be. In other words, at present we do not propose to pay out this money unless Congress and the railroads agree, as the amendment of the committee proposes, or unless the courts have settled the very grave legal questions and questions of fact which are required for the adjustment of these accounts. The Senator from Vermont, as I understand him. of these accounts. The Senator from Vermont, as I understand him, is willing, so far as the right of the United States is concerned, to transfer that entire power to the Quartermaster-General.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To the extent of this $125,000.

Mr. HOAR. Exactly. Suppose this $125,000 may be enough in regard to all the roads who are willing to accept it to pay every dollar they claim; in other words, suppose here are seven railroads in all, six of them do not agree with the Quartermaster-General, and he chooses to pay the whole $125,000 to the seventh. He may do it if their claim is up to that amount.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question. In view of the decision of the Supreme Court, where would he find a more intelligent judge as to the relative claims of the different parties than the Quartermaster-General? The decision is that the railroads are not bound to furnish rolling-stock and motive power, but the Government of the United States has the right to use the road-bed, and the Court of Claims has decided that in one case 50 per cent. is the proper amount. In view of these two decisions, where will he find a more intelligent judge than the Quartermaster-

General?

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the present law refers that question still, where it comes up, to the Court of Claims, and I propose to leave it there, with the exception that where the railroads are willing to take 50 per cent. as a proper percentage and Congress gives its assent to that, they may have it. I think that is the true policy.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations on considering this clause—

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them for transportation, $125,000—

Decided to add this proviso:

Provided, That such payment shall be accepted as in full of all demands for said services.

For what reason was this action recommended? While the numerous land grants for railroads varied somewhat in their language, the general provision was, "that said railroad shall be and remain a pub-lic highway for the use of the Government of the United States free from all toll or other charge upon the transportation of any property or troops in the United States." The Executive Department and the Congress of the United States construed that to mean that wherever Congress had given land grants to railroads the company should transport the troops and supplies of the United States over the road free of charge. Two different appropriation bills passed in 1874 contained a proviso prohibiting payment for such service, and on the 3d of March, 1875, a general law was passed in these words:

That no money shall hereafter be paid to any railroad company for the transportation of any property or troops of the United States over any railroad which in whole or in part was constructed by the aid of a grant of public land on the condition that such railroad should be a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States free from toll or other charge, or upon any other conditions for the use of such road for such transportation.

We claimed the right to transport everything free, but we gave the right to the companies in that act to sue in the Court of Claims with right to the companies in that act to see in the Court of Claims with an appeal to the Supreme Court, to see whether that was the proper construction or not. Under that right two companies, the Lake Superior and Mississippi Railroad Company, and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company, brought suit in the Court of Claims, and the decision was that the language of the original act of Congress did not deprive the companies of the right to compensation for the use of their railway coaches, their locomotives, and the service they rendered while the United States did have the right to go free over the railway itself: and they assertained that the right of the over the railway itself; and they ascertained that the right of the United States was about one-half and the right of the railway com-panies was about one-half, and an elaborate calculation was made to show that that was the fact.

The case between the Acthison, Topeka and Santa Fé Company and the Government went to the Court of Claims, and in 1879, at the September term, it was adjusted on the basis of 50 per cent.; that is, that the Government's right to use the road amounted to one-half for the road-bed, and the company's right to charge the Government for the use of their cars, locomotives, and labor amounted to the other half. The language of the decision is in these words:

Taking this proportion, we have a result of $83,200.88 as the sum to be paid to the claimants, or 51.3 per cent. as the allowance for the use of the road, and 48.7 as the percentage due the claimants.

In view of these different results, obtained from independent calculations, all approximating to an equal division of the gross earnings between the road and service, we can have no doubt that when Congress in 1879 authorized the payment of 50 per cent. of the approved bills of the land-grant roads, it intended to give its assent to the principle that 50 per cent. of the gross earnings is on the whole a just remuneration for the services and the profits which we have included in this computation.

And they close, after still further elaborating the case, with this statement:

The claimants' damages on this branch of their case are therefore limited to 50 per cent. of the bills for the land-grant service audited and approved by the Quartermaster-General; that is, to 50 per cent. of $170,843.55. This amounts to $55,421.76. Of this sum the claimants have already received $79,748.44, leaving due $5,673.32. Adding this amount to the $5,656.09 already found due for transportation over the non-land-grant branches of the claimant's road, we have $11,329.41 as the amount of the judgment in the claimants' favor.

Judgment will be entered accordingly.

This provision of the bill is carrying out that idea. The Quarter-master-General shall have the right to make any contracts he pleases with land-grant railroads, and when he does make the contracts, the United States having a right to have all its supplies and munitions of war and soldiers carried on the road itself free, and the companies having a right to charge for the use of their locomotives, cars, and labor 50 per cart is the true preportion in the cases already settled. labor, 50 per cent. is the true proportion in the cases already settled, and we make provision on that basis to allow him to pay 50 per cent., that being in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court in the case that has been there, and according to the decision of the Court of Claims in the late case just reported; and if the companies see fit to receive that, it shall be a finality of the claim. If they do not submit to receive it, and see fit to go to the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court under the right given them in the statute, and can get more, they have the right to do it; but as the law now stands it prohibits expressly any payment at all, and if this clause is stricken out they get nothing.

We did not desire to say that the railroads should not have anything, because the action of the Court of Claims and the Supreme thing, because the action of the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court would seem to indicate very clearly that all these roads would have a right to compensation for the use of their locomotives, their cars, and their services, although the road-bed is free to the Government; and so far as it has been decided 50 per cent. is the amount agreed upon, not of their regular carrying rates but of the rates agreed upon between the Quartermaster and the roads. Whatever they agreed upon to be the true amount, it means one-half of that when the service was performed on a road free to the United States and the other half performed in cars and labor owned by the company and the other half performed in cars and labor owned by the company, and the other half performed in cars and labor owned by the company, and 50 per cent. is the proportion due to the company for its services and 50 per cent. is the amount the United States has a right to. We therefore made the provision of $125,000 to settle the claims as far as the railroads are willing to settle on those terms, and if they are not willing to so settle, then they can go to the Court of Claims, as the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé and the Lake Superior roads did and get what they can. If, however, acquiescing in the decision of the Supreme Court and the Court of Claims in the cases already there and the reasoning and full and elaborate discussion they have had and the reasoning and full and elaborate discussion they have had they submit to take that, it ends the matter and there is no further controversy as far as they are concerned.

That is the way I understand the provision. That is the object of it, the law being now absolutely prohibitory of paying a dollar except as modified by the decision of the court in one or two cases which we are willing to acquiesce in as being the rule in all such cases as the Quartermaster-General may see fit to pass upon as the proper amount

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison] to strike out in lines 200 and 201 "what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them" and insert "the amount audited and approved by the Quartermaster General."

Mr. BECK. I suppose the mover of that does not design that it shall include the words added this morning by way of amendment, describing and defining more clerly the roads affected by this clause.

Mr. ALLISON. Not in the slightest degree. This is to follow the language already inserted, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The question being put, it was declared that the negative appeared

Mr. ALLISON. That is so necessary an amendment that I trust there will be no objection to it. I shall ask for a division on it.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator propose to leave off the proviso?

Mr. ALLISON. That is another question; it has nothing to do with this amendment of mine.

The question being put, there were on a division-ayes 15, noes 19;

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 15, noes 19; no quorum voting.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays, and now desire to say a word. I supposed this amendment was perfectly understood by the Senate, but it does not seem to be.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. May I ask my colleague on the committee why his amendment and the language of the committee are not the same thing?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. May I ask my colleague on the committee why his amendment and the language of the committee are not the same thing?

Mr. ALLISON. I will endeavor to state as briefly as I can. We have here as this proposition stands—and I discuss it now entirely outside of the proviso, for that has nothing to do with this question—a declaration that we will pay these land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of the sum justly due them; in other words, by legislation we propose to put ourselves in the attitude of paying only half what we agree that the Government owes these railroads. If there is anything more absurd than that to put into a statute I am unable to describe it. We say that we will pay half the sum that the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due to these railroads. Now, instead of that, I propose that we shall pay them just what the Court of Claims has decided they are entitled to receive, namely, 50 per cent. of the amount which the Quartermaster-General in the ordinary processes of his office audits for the benefit of these railways, not deciding what is due or what is not due, but simply deciding that where the Quartermaster-General audits a sum we will pay 50 per cent. of that. These very questions are still in litigation in the Supreme Court of the United States; the very case of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railway, as I understand, is pending on appeal in the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court may decide that the Court of Claims was in error when it said that 50 per cent. was the just and fair sum, either by saying that 50 per cent. is too little or too much. It seems to me that we are perfectly safe in paying to such railways as are willing to abide by the decision of the Court of Claims this 50 per cent., and that is all there is here.

But I do think it is a legislative absurdity to say in a statute that there is here.

But I do think it is a legislative absurdity to say in a statute that we will pay only one-half what our own officers say is due to a railroad, and that is the reason why I propose to change the phraseology; and I am amazed that members of the Committee on Appropriations adhere to the language of the bill after their attention has been called as I said when criticised by the Senator from New Hampshire, that my attention had not been called to that phraseology, and if it had been called to it I never would have consented by my vote to agree to such an absurdity.

Mr. WITHERS. I did not design saying anything further, but the language of the Senator who has just taken his seat requires that the language of the Senator who has just taken his seat requires that I shall say something in justification of the position I occupy and others who think with me. I do not place the construction on the language which is placed by the Senator from Iowa, and I think his amendment is tantamount to the bill as it at present stands. It follows a previous law on the subject in regard to the administration of which we have had experience, and although a seeming anomaly exists in requiring us to pay 50 per cent. of what is justly due, the difficulty arises on the construction of that language as to what is "justly due." My construction would be what is justly due them under their regular rates of transportation, or under their contract with the Quartermaster-General, as the case may be. That is what is justly due them, and under the decision of the Court of Claims 50 per cent. of that is required to be paid. According to my understandis justly due them, and under the decision of the Court of Claims 50 per cent. of that is required to be paid. According to my understanding of the phraseology used by the Senator from Iowa in his amendment, it is precisely what the bill provides for now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, how would it do to make the same provision that was made in the act of 1879 leaving out the world "arrears" perhaps? That provision which appears to have worked satisfactorily, was:

For the payment of arrears of Army transportation due such land-grant rail-roads as have not received aid in Government bonds as compensation was withheld from, under the acts of June 16 and 22, 1874, and March 3, 1875, to be adjusted by the proper accounting officers in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court in cases Jecided under the said acts, to be paid as other Army transportation, but in no event shall more than 50 per cent. of the full amount allowed by the Quartermaster-General be paid until the decision of the Court of Claims be had in each case, $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Perhaps that would solve all this doubt and difficulty. I do not see why it would not. The trouble about laying down any horizontal rule of 50 per cent. is, as I said before, the fact that in respect of many of these roads the provisions as to the rights of the United States are different to what they are in regard to others. In the case decided, I believe the language was that the United States should have the right to transport free of charge and toll its property. That, the court held, was merely a right of the United States, furnishing its own locomotives and cars, to run over the road; but in other cases the grants have been, I think—although I do not remember the precise language—that the company is bound to transport the troops and other material of the United States free of tolls. In that case, I think it would trouble a court considerably to hold that the company was only bound to furnish the road and that the United States was bound only bound to furnish the road and that the United States was bound to furnish the cars. So it seems to my mind to be impossible to settle by any legislative rule a case that shall apply lawfully and justly to each one of these varying provisions. I have a list here before me of what these provisions are, but I will not take the time of the Senata to read it, because it is very long.

If the legislation of 1879 was found to be satisfactory in practice,

If the legislation of 1879 was found to be satisfactory in practice, to provide now the necessary money to fulfill our obligations as far as they have been settled and ascertained either by direct decision or fair analogy, and only to put up a payment of 50 per cent. in respect of these cases that are not yet settled satisfactorily, it appears to me would be safe to everybody. I should be entirely willing to leave it, as I stated before, to a simple appropriation of this small sum of money to allow the Quartermaster-General to discharge any lawful obligation that we are under, and I am willing to trust him between now and the next year to the extent of $125,000, not to pay out the money of the United States unlawfully because it is exactly the way we are obliged to trust him and every other administrative officer in disposing of the millions we appropriate. I merely suggest this amendment in order that the Senate may find some way out.

DISTRICT ADVERTISING.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate to allow me to make a report from a committee of conference, which will take but a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent to make at this time a report from a committee of conference. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It will be

No. 2658) to regulate the award of and compensation for public advertising in the District of Columbia having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Honses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the said bill, and agree to the same, amended to read as follows:

"That all advertising required by existing laws to be done in the District of Columbia by any of the Departments of the Government shall be given to one daily and one weekly newspaper of each of the two principal political parties, and to one daily and one weekly neutral newspaper: Provided. Mr. WHYTE. This is the Senate amendment agreed to, merely striking out two or three lines.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the bill read and the Senate

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read and the amendment, showing what action has been taken by the conferees.

The Secretary read House bill No. 2658, as it passed the House of Representatives, as follows:

Be it enacted, dc., That all advertising required by existing laws to be done in the Dis rict of Columbia by any of the Departments of the Government shall be given to the three daily newspapers having the largest regular circulation, to be ascertained by the sworn statements of the publishers thereof: Provided, That the rates of compensation for such service shall in no case exceed the regular commercial rate of the newspapers selected.

Sec. 2. All laws or parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, what was the Senate amendment? The Chief Clerk read the Senate amendment, which was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That all advertising required by existing laws to be done in the District of Columbia by any of the Departments of the Government shall be given to one daily newspaper of each of the two principal political parties and one neutral newspaper, and, in the discretion of the head of the respective Departments, to the two weekly newspapers having the largest regular circulation, to be ascertained by the sworm statements of the publishers thereof: Provided, That the rates of compensation for such service shall in no case exceed the regular commercial rate of the newspapers selected; nor shall any advertisement be paid for unless published in accordance with section 3828 of the Revised Statutes.

Sgc. 2. All laws or parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have that thing go over until tomorrow. I confess I do not like the idea of providing in statutes about political parties. If in this town, or any other town where we need advertising, a democratic paper has the widest circulation among business men and people who are concerned in such advertisements as the Government makes, it ought to have the advertising, and if it happens to be a republican or a greenback or any other kind of a paper religious or secular, that has the widest circulation, I do not care what the opinions are that it expresses about political affairs. And I want to vote every time that I have a chance in these respects against any legislation that talks about different political parties. There are some exceptions, it is true; I do not think this is one of them; and I much prefer the original House bill, although that provides for more newspapers probably than are necessary, than this undertaking to distribute out the value of advertising to newspapers of different political parties because they happen to be such. I do not believe in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question required to be put is, Will the Senate now proceed to the consideration of this report. The Senator from Vermont asks that it be laid over until to-morrow

Mr. WHYTE. It can be laid over temporarily. There is no objection

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be printed that we may see just what it

Mr. SAUNDERS. The Army appropriation bill is now in order again before the Senate, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Army appropriation bill is before the Senate, and the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

Mr. SAUNDERS. I voted for the amendment as offered by the Senator from Iowa, and shall do so again if it comes to a vote by yeas and nays; but I find that it does not suit all the other parties who have been trying to amend the bill and I have prepared an amendhave been trying to amend the bill, and I have prepared an amendment which I think may cover the case and remove the objections of all. It will not be in order now to present it, but I should like to have it read to see whether it may not be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska will propose in due time an amendment, which will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of whatever amount shall be audited and approved in the Quartermaster's Department for transportation of troops and munitions of war, $125,000: Provided, That the amounts allowed shall not be higher than the rates charged to other parties: And provided further, That said sum of 50 per cent. shall be accepted as in full of all demands for said services.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If that would be acceptable to all, it covers, I think, the objections that have been raised by different Senators. think, the objections that have been raised by different Senators. I understand that this 50 per cent. grows out of the fact that, in the first place, the Government has the right to transport its own troops and munitions of war over the roads free of charge, provided it furnishes its own power and its own rolling-stock. That is one consideration. Another is that the business is done generally in a very large way; it is what we might term a business in the wholesale way, according to the common expression. For instance, to illustrate, a cording to the common expression. For instance, to illustrate, a single passenger is charged on the Union Pacific route about seventy dollars from Omaha to Ogden. If you were to order one hundred troops to be sent, which would not be a very unusual thing probably in an active time, it would cost $7,000. The company agrees to receive, or would receive under this, $3,500 for that service, making more money probably than they would off so many individuals not going in a body. That is another consideration in this matter. It having, as I understood, been settled pretty fully, in one case at any rate, by the Court of Claims in favor of 50 per cent. we are ready to yote for that.

stood, been settled pretty fully, in one case at any rate, by the Court of Claims in favor of 50 per cent., we are ready to vote for that.

What I want is to cover the point raised by the Senator from Iowa that each account should be audited first and approved by the auditing officer of the Quartermaster's Department, and next to cover the objections of others that it shall not be at a higher rate than is charged to individuals for the same kind of service. My amendment covers both the objections, and it would seem to cover this whole case. Just strike out the lines as they stand and insert what I have suggested. If the Senator from Iowa insists on his amendment I shall vote for it, as I have said, and then I may offer mine afterward.

of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BECK. One word. The Senator from Iowa-a thing very unusual with him-seems to have exhibited some temper at the rest of the committee for not agreeing to the suggestion made by him. I differ with him because I think both the clause as reported and his amendment are the same thing. The idea I have is that the proper construction of the language as now amended is that where the United States, either by contract or otherwise, uses a land-grant rail-United States, either by contract or otherwise, uses a land-grant railway, when the Quartermaster-General comes to adjust with that company he allows one-half, one-half being for the right of the Government to the road-bed and the other half for the cars, locomotives, &c., of the company. The United States get one-half and the company get one-half. We do not propose to pay them one-half of the one-half. There is no idea of that sort. The court having said that we are entitled to run the road ourselves free, and that is one-half the value of transportation; and the railroad company having the right to one-half the transportation because they own the cars and right to one half the transportation because they own the cars and locomotives and furnish the labor, the whole amount due the railroad company is half the cost of transportation.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky—I am in a better humor now

Mr. BECK. I am glad to hear it.
Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky if he thinks it is a wise thing to put phraseology into a statute which on its face shows that we are only intending to pay one-half of what

Mr. BECK. I do not so understand it. I understand that this language means that we only pay one-half of what is due to the railroad companies, because we own the other half ourselves. One-half belongs to us and the other half belongs to the company, and therefore, the earnings of the road being from the use of the road-bed, which is ours, and the cars, which are theirs, and each being entitled to one-half, they are only entitled to one-half of the original cost and we pay them that much.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to ask the Senator a question, to be sure that I understand him. I should like to know what he understands the Quartermaster's Department transportation. Does he expect the Quartermaster's Department to say that the Government owes to the railroads justly the sum for transportation that a private individual would owe to Mr. BECK. I do not so understand it. I understand that this Department to say that the Government owes to the railroad justly the sum for transportation that a private individual would owe to the railroad for the same service? Or does he expect that the Quarter-master's Department will say that the Government has rendered certain favors to these railroads, land-grants and other things, it may be bonds and subsidies of various descriptions, so that the railroads maintain different relations to the Government from what they maintain to private individuals, and there is instly due from the Government. tain to private individuals, and there is justly due from the Government to the railroads for any service only one-half or 50 per cent. of what a private individual would owe the railroad for the same service? If the Quartermaster-General finds exactly the sum in dollars that should be paid by the Government to the railroad company for the transportation, under these circumstances, in view of the peculiar condition of the laws and the relation of the Government and railroads to each other, how is the Quartermaster-General to say that the Government owes precisely the sum that I would for the same service? He will never make such a decision as that; but he tells the Government as between the Government and the railroad what the Government as between the Government and the rainoad what the Government owes, which is, we will suppose, 50 per cent.; the railroad claims 66 per cent., some say, of what the private individual would owe for the same service. He says we should give 50 per cent. of what a private individual would have to give. He having found that sum to be justly due, does not the Government owe that amount? And the Government owing that sum, what sense is there in this provision that the Government may pay just 50 per cent. of it, 50 per cent. of what is found to be justly due by the Quartermaster and extort a receipt for the whole? If the idea of the committee is not that, why not strike out this language?

Mr. BECK. My understanding, to begin with, is that if the companies are not satisfied with the Quartermaster's statement they are not bound to take it, and therefore they can go to the courts. There is no hardship there.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator from Kentucky let me interpose a moment now? Is there no hardship there, to begin with, if this provision is to be put in the bill, namely that if they do take the money they give up the right to go to the courts or anywhere else?

Mr. BECK. I think not. The Senator from New York was not in his seat awhile ago when the report was read showing that the courts have said, so far as they have passed on it, that 50 per cent. ought to be paid to the railroads because the United States had a right, under the charter, to the use of the road-bed, and that had been agreed upon in cases already decided.

Mr. CONKLING. Fifty per cent. of what, does the Senator understand ?

Mr. BECK. Suppose you send troops on the railroad from Omaha to Ogden without any contract at all. The railroad company would to Ogden without any contract at all. The railroad company would charge the Senator from New York or myself a certain sum for our transportation that distance. They come before the Quartermaster-General, and he says whether that is a fair charge or not.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator understand that the Court of Claims has said that they are entitled to one-half of what other passengers would to pay?

Mr. BECK. They have not decided whether that was the fact or not, but they have decided that they are entitled to one-half of whatever is just and reasonable.

Mr. CONKLING. Now, I do not understand that they have decided any such thing. That is one of the fallacies of this whole debate. I understand they have decided as far as they have said anything on that point, that one-half the current rates, one-half of what the public pays, as the Senator said a moment ago one-half of what he and I and other persons would pay, they are entitled to. That is what the court-has said, as I understand. And another Senator says that he is not content with that but wants to have a provision by which the court can go into that and see if they did not charge everybody too much and if they charged everybody too much scale that down as far as it ought to go and then take one-half of

Mr. BECK. I do not propose anything of that sort, but I suppose that every account of this kind that comes against the Government has to be looked into in the Quartermaster's Department, and if an unjust charge is made he ought not to approve it. If it is a just and proper charge he ought to allow it, and that account, when so adjusted, as all other accounts against the Government, has to be audited by the proper officers, and the amount is to be divided as to landgrant railroads equally between the United States and the com-

Mr. WITHERS. The committee had information that accounts now pending for settlement in the Quartermaster's Department are suspended because the Quartermaster-General is in possession of information that certain roads have charged more to the United States Government than they charged to other parties.

Mr. BECK. We supposed the proper accounting officers of the Treasury would have the right to look into railroad as well as private claims, and that it was only after such a claim had met the approval of the accounting officers that it could be paid; and hence we agree to the provision here incorporated. That is the way I understand it, and I think the committee so understand it. and I think the committee so understand it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consider-

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORRILL. Will my colleague allow me to offer an amendment to the pending bill †

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer an amendment to the pending bill to have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be pursued.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. WITHERS. That is not a debatable motion; but I should like to dispose of the bill to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot dispose of it to-night, and this matter will be settled by morning so as to be satisfactory.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, January 12, 1881.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. Samuel Domer, D. D., of Washington, District of Columbia.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BELFORD. I call for the regular order.
The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move that the call of committees this morning

The SPEAKER. That can be done by a two-thirds vote.

The question being taken on Mr. Buckner's motion, there were

The question being taken on Mr. Buckker's motor, and ayes 69, noes 20.

Mr. WEAVER. A quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. WEAVER, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Buckner.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported ayes—123, noes 24. So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the call of committees was dispensed with.

MAJOR JACOB E. BURBANK.

On motion of Mr. BROWNE, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 313) for the relief of Major Jacob E. Burbank was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHANGE OF NAME OF SCHOONER.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I ask that by unanimous consent the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 35) authorizing the name of the schooner Isle of Pines to be changed to George S. Sleight.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution, and it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

FUNDING BILL.

Mr. BELFORD. I demand the regular order.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the funding bill; and pendng that motion I move that all debate on the pending amendment be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. BURROWS. What is the pending amendment?

The SPEAKER. It will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk rend as 1010Ws:

Strike out all of section 1 included between the word "hereby" in the fifteenth line to and including the word "issue" in the twenty-fourth line and insert the following:

Authorized to issue bonds not to exceed $450,600,000, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after ten years, and payable thirty years from date of issue; also notes in the amount of $250,000,000, and redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after two years, and payable in ten years from the date of issue, which notes it shall be lawful and national banks shall be permitted to hold as part of their legal reserve, and the interest on said bonds shall be 3 per cent., and the interest on said notes shall be 3½ per cent.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. There is no such amendment as that pending in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That is an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Newberry.]

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. It was submitted to be read; and I think the gentleman from Michigan himself was not aware he was offering it as an amendment think the gentleman from Michigan himself was not aware he was offering it as an amendment.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I believe the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means is right. The amendment was submitted to be read and will be offered when the proper time comes.

The SPEAKER. Then there is no disagreement about it. The question of what is the pending amendment can be determined in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Chair has no power to regulate the matter in the House. It will be determined by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, subject, of course, to the will of the committee.

The question being taken on the motion to limit debate on the pending amendment to thirty minutes, there were—ayes 112, noes 7.

Mr. WEAVER. A quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will order tellers; and appoints the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. WEAVER, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Dibrell.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 149, noes 4. So the motion to limit debate was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was then agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. Covert in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt; and under the order of the House debate on the pending amendment is limited to thirty minutes. The pending amendment is that offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Fernando Wood,] which the Clerk will report.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. One word, Mr. Chairman, before the other gentlemen who desire to address the committee proceed. I desire to say for myself, not being authorized to say it by the committee of which I am chairman, that I see nothing inconsistent with the establishment of a 3 per cent. rate of interest on the bond and on the certificate and the shortening of the option as indicated in the bill. I will go further than that—speaking for myself—and say I believe that with a repeal of the tax on deposits in the banks, and the establishment of a rate of 3 per cent., the question of option is absolutely immaterial; because the bonds and certificates, although bearing a minimum rate of interest at 3 per cent., will be of that character that they will not be likely to rise to any great premium; and whenever the Government is in possession of a surplus for its sinking fund or for the retiracy of any portion of the public debt, the bonds and certificates will be within its reach at par or a nominal premium in advance. Therefore I believe, and I am strengthened in the belief from what has come to my knowledge since the last discussion, that we can safely establish a 3 per cent. rate with every confidence in the speedy negotiation of every bond and certificate thus issued within the required time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the pending amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 17 and $22 strike out "three and one had it will read:
"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds in the amount of not exceeding $500,000,000, which shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, after twenty years, and payable forty years from the date of issue, and also notes in the amount of $200,000,000, bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, after two years, and payable in ten years from the date of issue."

Mr. STEVENSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair requests the committee to come to order. The importance of the subject under discussion is such that it is very desirable complete order should be preserved and that there should be silence on the part of gentlemen not addressing the Chair.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, it would be difficult to conceive

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, it would be difficult to conceive of legislation of more vital interest to the people of these United States, of legislation more far-reaching in its consequences, and which more nearly affects the present and the coming generations of this country than that proposed by the pending bill. The question which confronts us is, what shall be the policy of this Government with reference to its debt? Shall it be our policy as rapidly as possible to extinguish or indefinitely to postpone the payment of our bonded debt? Shall we by solemn act of Congress declare it to be the settled, the deliberate purpose of this Government to maintain a permanent national debt? Disguise it as we may, this is the principal question we are now to meet. The refunding of our maturing bonds for a period of thirty or fifty years means no thing more nor less than the creation of a permanent national debt in this country.

The practical question, then, I repeat, which confronts us upon the very threshold of this discussion is, shall we out of our abundant resources, out of our surplus revenues, start now upon the sure pathway of paying the debt, establishing this as our undeviating policy; or shall we indefinitely postpone its payment? More than that, sir, shall we virtually declare in favor of the non-payment of these bonds, and that this generation and the generations to follow shall be taxed for the maintenance of a national debt? Let us not be misled by the delusive statement that the question is simply whether we shall borrow money at 3 or 3½ per cent. interest and with it discharge Government obligations bearing a higher rate of interest. As has been said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Kelley,] this view precludes from consideration all of the pregnant questions involved. As that gentleman has well shown, the question is not whether we shall refund a permanent national debt, such as exists in Great Britain, France, Germany, Austria, Italy, and Spain, but whether we shall now create such a debt.

This brings us to the discussion of the necessity of the proposed

This brings us to the discussion of the necessity of the proposed legislation. Bonds of the Government to the amount of $671,917,600 are redeemable on the 1st day of July of the present year. Four hundred and seventy million dollars of this amount bears interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, and the residue at 6 per cent. This vast sum is not, as has been so frequently asserted, due upon the 1st of July next, but only redeemable at the option of the Government. It is a mistaken idea that the Government is bound to meet this debt at that time. The bonds can be redeemed or not at the discretion of the Government. The best interest of the Government, then, is the sole question for the consideration of Congress in dealing with this question.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelley] presents the issue clearly when he says:

Can we pay the 6 per cent. and the 5 per cent. bonds shortly to mature without borrowing! In reply to it, let me say here that a constant payment of $60,000,000 a year for ten years will pay them; that for fifteen years we have paid an average of within three millions of $60,000,000; that in the year just closed we paid nearly seventy-four million dollars, and that in the first half of the present facal year, as appears by the last debt statement of the Secretary, we have paid $42,990,559 of the debt, showing an ability to pay more than eighty-five million dollars in the current fiscal year.

Now, sir, with these figures compiled from official sources before six, what is to be the policy of the Government? Shall we apply the $90,000,000 of our surplus revenues annually to the extinction of our debt or by a long-term bond, running thirty, forty, or fifty years, mortgage the property and labor of the American people, as is proposed upon this floor? For one, even to secure a lower rate of interest, I will not consent to this. I will never consent that this Government shall surrender the option to pay $700,000,000 of its debt for the long period proposed, thus creating, as I have said, virtually a permanent mortgage upon the property and labor of our people and harassing them with heavy burdens of taxation to meet the interest accruing upon this vast debt.

Do gentlemen realize the danger of placing this debt beyond our control? By act of a former Congress the payment of more than seven hundred million dollars of our bonds has been prolonged until the year 1907. These bonds hearing 4 per cent, interest, are to-day at a

Do gentlemen realize the danger of placing this debt beyond our control? By act of a former Congress the payment of more than seven hundred million dollars of our bonds has been prolonged until the year 1907. These bonds, bearing 4 per cent. interest, are to-day at a premium of a fraction over 13 per cent. Is this not a startling fact? The bonds of the Government at a premium of 13½ per cent., but the Government itself, by its own act, unable to call them in, to redeem them, for the period of twenty-seven years. And all this under the cry of a long bond and a low rate of interest.

With the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mills] I believe that by

With the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mills] I believe that by strict economy, by the honest application of our surplus revenues to the extinguishment of that portion of our debt which the pending bill seeks to cast upon posterity, it can be wholly discharged long before another decade shall have passed. This resolves itself into a question of figures. What, then, are our resources? The Secretary of the Treasury states officially that the surplus revenues for the present fiscal year will be $90,000,000. I think, sir, that it would not be difficult to show that this is a low estimate. The receipts from all sources for the first half of the present fiscal year amount to the enormous sum of $182,000,000, making for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, a total revenue of $364,000,000. Conceding our expenditure and interest for the same period to be $260,000,000, as estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury, we will have a surplus of $104,000,000. As we increase in population and in wealth, as our resources are developed, of necessity the sources from which we draw this immense revenue will be enlarged. As the gentleman last mentioned has shown, we have added twelve million souls to our population within the past ten years. Five hundred thousand annually by immigration alone is a low estimate. The greater the number of consumers the larger the annual revenues to the Government.

The practical question, then, is—and we are dealing with a purely practical question—what shall be done with the immense revenues now accumulating and hereafter so rapidly to accumulate in our Federal Treasury? Shall they be hoarded or possibly squandered by injudicious appropriations and subsidies, or shall they be applied to the extinguishment of our bonded debt? I can hardly conceive, sir, of but one answer to this question. But the pending bill proposes refunding the maturing bonds to prevent the possibility of their redemption within the life-time of the present generation. For my own part, I can never consent that with a surplus revenue of $100,000,000 annually the hands of this Government shall be so tied as to prevent the extinguishment of our debt.

There is another practical phase to this question to which I wish for a moment to call attention. Let this bill pass, and postpone the payment of this debt for forty years; when that period shall have elapsed, what guarantee have we that the next generation will be in better condition to commence its payment than we are to-day? True, our resources will be greater, but who can forecast the future? Who can tell what exigencies as yet undreamed of will have east new obligations and liabilities upon the Government? When that period shall have elapsed, after we shall, time and again, have paid this debt in installments of interest, the debt will still remain undischarged and the next generation following in our footsteps will refund the debt, possibly for a still longer time, and at a higher rate of interest. Thus would the debt become a permanent charge. It is, sir, to guard against such a possibility that I urge upon this House the necessity of declaring now that it shall be the fixed policy of this Government to pay, not to perpetuate our bonded debt.

In the discussion of this bill let us not be deceived by the specious

In the discussion of this bill let us not be deceived by the specious cry that its passage will reduce taxation. Unquestionably its passage will be made the pretext for the abrogation of certain taxes; but what taxes? Only the taxes upon hank-checks, bank deposits, and bank circulation, the taxes paid by capital. The earnest advocates of this measure propose no reduction of taxation upon the articles of prime necessity, such as are indispensable to rich and poor alike, such as bring comfort and joy to the cottage and hovel as well as to the palace. And yet, sir, it can easily be shown, as it has a thousand times been shown, that by the reduction of the tariff upon the articles by which the poor are fed and clothed the revenues of the Government will be greatly augmented. It would be difficult to state this more forcibly than has been done by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] when he said:

When he said:

But the question is, do you propose to relieve those who are best entitled to your sympathy? Let us see if we understand each other. How much do you propose to reduce the tax on sugar, that is taxed from 62 to 73 per cent.? On rice, that is taxed 100 per cent.? On salt, that is taxed from 40 to 65 per cent.? On cotton goods, that are taxed from 61 to 71 per cent.? On window-glass, that is taxed from 90 to 116 per cent.? On iron, that is taxed from 70 to 90 per cent.? How much do you propose to reduce the taxes on spices, that are all the way from 181 to 461 per cent.? How much on wool and woolen goods, so essential to the comfort of fifty millions of people in winter? They are taxed from 60 to 90 per cent. How much on blankets and wool hats, that are taxed from 60 to 90 per cent. How much on blankets and wool hats, that are taxed from 60 to 90 per cent. How much of such comforts because they are not within their reach? These taxes are shamefully oppressive. They are so exorbitant that they defraud the Government and rob the people.

Mr. Chairman, no gentleman on this floor more earnestly than myself desires the reduction of taxation. But let us move in the right direction. Let us commence where the burdens rest most heavily. Remove the tariff taxes from the articles so indispensable to human life and comfort. Let capital bear its just proportion of the burdens of government.

I am persuaded, sir, that the pending measure bodes no good to the country. In the interest of wealth it proposes a permanent national debt, which all experience has demonstrated to be a national curse. It is legislation in the same line and looking to the same end with that which established and fosters national-banks; which exempts Government bonds from taxation; which demonetized silver and seeks the destruction of the greenback currency. It may be that this bill will pass and a permanent national debt, with all its attendant evils and corrupting influences, be fastened upon this country. It may be that its advocates, as have the authors of the other measures to which I have referred, will receive popular commendation. But I trust, sir, that before it is too late the American people may awaken to the dangers which lie in their pathway; dangers which threaten even the existence of our free institutions.

Mr. WEAVER. I think that it is idle to talk about the difficulty of placing the bonds contemplated by this bill at 3 per cent. In my judgment the holders of the bonds, if they can do no better, would gladly accept a long-time bond without interest, with the privilege of banking upon them, rather than forfeit the control which they now exercise over the business and commercial interests of this country.

exercise over the business and commercial interests of this country.
We have already paid the holders of the Government bonds of this country an amount of interest greater than the present bonded debt of this nation, and still they are not satisfied. We have paid them in interest alone one hundred millions more than it cost to pay, clothe, and feed our Army during the late war. This money power, in its insatiate hunger, reminds me of a tiger with his teeth deeply and firmly imbedded in the throat of his victim. Let the industrial classes arouse themselves and shake the monster loose. I warn the holders of these bonds against further aggressions in this direction. The people are not in a mood to be further trifled with.

Now, sir, if I cannot get what I believe to be the best thing for the tax-payers, namely, the speedy payment of the bonds in the manner contemplated in the substitue of my colleague, [Mr. GILLETTE,] then I shall do all in my power to perfect the bill so as to secure to the people the lowest possible interest and the shortest possible time. If that is not acceptable to the holders of these securities, then let the bonds remain as they are, subject to payment at any time, and the people will send a Congress here that will provide for their payment.

I prefer the whole matter shall be left open if this House has not the courage to protect the labor interests of the country. The people are watching the progress of this bill with more vigilance and interest than they have given to any other measure pending before Con-

I enter my protest, then, against refunding these securities into obligations that will take from the people the right to pay at any time. Two hundred millions are payable, as I have before stated to the House, in greenbacks. We shall never part with that right with my

Mr. McMILLIN addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]
Mr. DUNNELL. When the bill now pending before the Committee of the Whole was reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, the rate of interest was fixed at 3½ per cent. When the bill again came up for consideration in the Committee on Ways and Means during the present session, it was evident to the entire committee that bonds could be negotiated at 3 per cent. I do not understood the ing the present session, it was evident to the entire committee that bonds could be negotiated at 3 per cent. I do not understand that any information has come to the committee since its action on the rate of interest that would justify any change in the judgment of the committee. I am informed by the chairman of the committee [Mr. Fernando Wood] that there is in his possession, as chairman of the committee, no evidence at all that the bonds may not be negotiated at 3 ner cent, the rate fixed when he committee and he tiated at 3 per cent., the rate fixed upon by our committee and embodied in the amendment now pending before the Committee of the Whole. It is my belief that there can be no difficulty in negotiating these bonds. There is in this country a very rapid and large increase these bonds. There is in this country a very rapid and large increase in the amount of trust funds seeking such investments as these bonds and these Treasury notes will furnish.

The gentleman who just sat down [Mr. McMillin] says that he is opposed to a long-time bond. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, no one upon this floor is advocating a long bond. The time fixed in the bill itself is not open to that objection. I shall vote for a reduction of the twenty years to ten years. I believe it is better for us to issue a 3 per cent. bond running for ten and twenty years, or ten and forty years, than to raise the rate of interest to 3½ per cent. I am very clearly of the opinion that the investors of a very large amount of money in the nature of trust funds will be relieved when we take up these 5 and 6 per cent. bonds, and that there will be no possible up these 5 and 6 per cent. bonds, and that there will be no possible difficulty in securing a ready sale for these 3 per cent. bonds. With a 3 per cent. bond the question of time is less important, for such a bond would not go above par, and therefore the Government would be able at any time to buy them in without being compelled to pay a

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. Mr. Chairman, as the time for debate is limited, I shall barely have time to allude to the questions upon which I should have liked to have enlarged. If the object of this bill was to reduce taxation, I should support it; but it is not. It seems to me merely an attempt to perpetuate a debt that we have the means to pay in a short time, as has been fully demonstrated on this floor by different and the properties of the prope gentlemen; and in my humble judgment its object is to furnish bonds as a basis for national banks, and to continue the worst system of financiering that exists in any civilized country; a banking system based upon bonds bearing interest that comes semi-annually out of the pockets of the people, to be added to the profits of these bankers on the notes of their banks. Over one hundred millions of dollars that go notes of their banks. Over one hundred millions of dollars that go to pay the interest, in fact the whole interest on the public debt, is collected out of the two articles produced in a large degree by my district and State—tobacco and whisky—as is shown by the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I want to put a stop to this taxation by paying off these bonds and stopping the interest. I do not want to see the debt perpetuated under the pretext that we can get the money at a lower interest by refunding the debt, which in the end will result in our paying a much larger amount by continuing the debt for even over ten years. It was demonstrated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Buckner] last session, when this bill was under consideration, and by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Mills,] the other day, that the immense revenue that is collected by the Government yearly affords a balance or a surplus of one hundred millions of dollars per year, and it is still increasing every year, and will ions of dollars per year, and it is still increasing every year, and will soon be over one hundred and twenty millions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let all the surplus money in the Treasury and the surplus revenue every year be applied to the payment of these bonds, and let us now impose an income-tax upon the bondholders and wealthy capitalists of the country that have been bearing none of the burdens of the Government, and let the taxes be made equal and uniform, and let the large additional amount that would be thus raised by just taxation be added to our annual surplus and applied to the payment of these bonds. Let us in the mean time practice close economy in the administration of the Government, and these bonds will be paid off in four or five years. Why put it out of our power to pay off these bonds for twenty years, or forty, as is proposed by this bill? Sir, it is only to keep up the national banks. Let them go; they can take care of themselves. We now have over two thought sand of them. They control nearly four hundred millions of dollars. By their expansion and contraction they can control the price of labor and of everything. They wield to-day a dangerous power in the Let them go. Let us have greenbacks or Treasury notes in place of their issues, and add that to the gold and yearly increasing silver, that ought to be coined to the full capacity of our mints, and we will have a healthy currency, and not tax the people to keep up the national banks, based upon bonds which they and their friends on this floor desire to perpetuate.

I would vote to day to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay these bonds off in Treasury notes, greenbacks bearing no inter-est—they are as good as gold, and if the bondholders refuse to take them let him buy silver bullion and coin it in dollars and halves of 412½ grains to the dollar and pay off these bonds with it, if they want coin according to the stipulations of the bonds, procured by fraud and outrage upon the taxpayers of the country; when the original bonds were payable in greenbacks that were largely under par when the act of Congress was passed by a republican Congress making them payable in coin, thereby adding over six hundred millions to the national debt. Mr. Chairman, some gentlemen look at me with surprise. Have they forgotten their votes? Mr. MILLS, from Texas, offered an amendment to the Warner silver bill at the last extra session as follows, (see Congressional Record, first session Forty-sixth Congress,

Strike out section 3 from the fourth to the fifteenth line, inclusive, and insert:
SEC. 3320. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to purchase, without limit, all sliver bullion, trade-dollars, and foreign silver coins that may be offered for sale at the market value of silver, and such purchases shall be continued as long as 412½ grains of standard silver can be purchased for one dollar of legal-tender Treasury notes. And all holders of any of the silver coins of the Unite! States may present the same in any sum not less than $20 and receive therefor legal-tender Trea ury notes at par for the same. That all silver coins of the United States shall be receivable in payment of all Government dues and shall be a legal tender in payment of all debts, public or private, for any sum whatever. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to have the silver bullion, trade-dollars, and foreign silver pieces coined as fast as possible into American silver coins and to apply all silver coins of the United States that may come into the Treasury to the payment of the interest and principal of the public debt, before using any of the gold or Treasury notes of the Government, for such purposes.

He advocated it, and so did I. Who voted for it? Let the record speak. They were true representatives of the wishes of the people.

Mr. Mills. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 60, nays 155, not voting 90; as

Mr. White. I move that the House do now adjourn.

And there were ninety not voting at all, and many others said it was right but voted against it because they said it might endanger the original bill. If it was right then, if gentlemen could vote for it then, why cannot they do it now? I understand the same proposition will be substantially offered as an amendment to this bill. It certainly is more appropriate now. I voted for it then, and I am ready and I shall vote for it again when it is offered, and I shall not consider that I am invaring the credit of the Government by nearly a bond and I shall vote for it again when it is offered, and I shall not consider that I am impairing the credit of the Government by paying a bond in silver coin of 412½ grains to the dollar that is on its face payable in coin, as the gentleman from Maryland said the other day. Why, sir, 412½ grains of silver is the standard dollar and has been ever since 1792, and it is the standard stipulated in the contract. Gentlemen forget the history of the country in their tenderness for the bondholders. Why should they be the pets of this Congress? What meritorious acts have they performed that they should be exempted from taxation and paid in gold, to the exclusion of other creditors? They bought the Government bonds at from forty to sixty cents on the dollar; they went up to par; then they appealed to Congress to make them payable in coin. It was done. Then they had silver demonetized, and now their friends on this floor say they ought to be paid in gold. Thank God, sir, silver has been remonetized. It is again the lawful currency of the country and is good enough to pay bondholders as well as the farmers and laborers of the country.

Mr. Chairman, if this bill passes what is to become of the hundred

Mr. Chairman, if this bill passes what is to become of the hundred million a year of surplus revenue that is collected? Is it to be hoarded up in the Treasury and taken out of the circulation of the country? Is it to be an idle fund to encourage wild and reckless appropriations Is it to be an idle fund to encourage wild and reckless appropriations of the public money—as it certainly will do if it remains there? Or is it to be be used in buying up those very bonds after they are refunded? If so, we will have to buy them at 10 or 12 per cent. premium—experience proves it—and the bondholders will make millions while the tax-ridden people lose it. We will have the control of these bonds in July, and in the name of the people whom we are here to represent do not let us give up that control by refunding them. Do not let us put ourselves in the power of these insatiable bondholders who have had so many favors from Congress at the expense of the tax-rayers of the country. Sir the greatest statesmen we have ever tax-payers of the country. Sir, the greatest statesmen we have ever had, Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Adams, and others whom I might name, have all regarded the continuance of a public debt as a great evil.

Sir, I regard the perpetuation of this debt, or anything that looks toward it, like a hereditary evil that descends to curse the rising generation. We have the ability to pay these bonds in four or five years by the course I have alluded to. We have $671,917,600 of bonds that are redeemable between this and 1st of July—$202,266,550 bear interest at rate of 6 per cent., and $469,651,050 bear interest at 5 per interest at rate of 6 per cent., and $469,051,050 bear interest at 5 per cent. The excess of our revenue over the ordinary expenses and the yearly interest on the public debt is over one hundred millions. The Secretary of the Treasury tells us in his report that the surplus for this year will be $90,000,000. He is under the figures. The first six months of the fiscal year show $182,000,000. The next six months, according to the estimates, will be $185,000,000. That will make $367,000,000, instead of $350,000,000—making the surplus this year $107,000,000, the ordinary expenses and interest being $260,000,000. The surplus is increasing every year. The yearly increase of our population is over a million. The emigration to this country is over three hundred thousand annually. This large increase of population increases the consumption of everything upon which the taxes are imposed, and this swells the annual revenue. Let us add to this surplus by a tax on the incomes of the bondholders and millionaires who have been exempted for years past. Let them come forward and pay their proportion of the expenses of the Government.

This is the opportune time for imposing this income tax. If we do their proportion of the expenses of the Government.

This is the opportune time for imposing this income tax. If we do not do it now it will never be done by this Congress and certainly not by the next. For it is impossible to get the Ways and Means Committee to report such a bill, just and right as it is. Experience shows it. During the last extra session Mr. DIBRELL, of Tennessee, moved to suspend the rules and pass such a bill. The yeas and nays were called and it received an overwhelming majority, but not two-thirds, and so it failed. I voted for it. It was said that that expressed will of the House would be regarded as an instruction from this House to the Ways and Means Committee to report such a bill. That session expired. The long session or second session of the Forty-sixth Congress passed, and we are one-third through this session, and yet no such bill has been reported by them, and under the defective rules of this House we cannot get such a bill before the House no matter how many are offered, because they are all referred to that committee and they have failed to report one; hence I say I am warranted in saying that unless we now pass such a measure, as an amendment to this bill, no income tax will be imposed at all.

tax will be imposed at all.

Let us do it now, and add this fund to the surplus revenue, and, sir, in five years we can pay off these bonds—may be in less time—and then we can reduce our onerous system of taxation. There is no man more in favor of reduction of taxation, sir, than I am. I will go as far as any man on this floor; but, Mr. Chairman, you know and I know that as long as the pretext exists the taxes will be kept up; and therefore I want these bonds paid off and not refunded. I shall vote for every amendment reducing the rate of interest and shortening the time of payment, and then I shall vote against the bill ening the time of payment, and then I shall vote against the bill itself unless the substitute or amendments are adopted, which will prevent a refunding of these bonds. I am utterly opposed to the refunding and consequent perpetuation of the debt, and hope it may be defeated.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Mr. Chairman, I rise to advocate again with confirmed judgment a 3 per cent. bond; and if the House should agree to that rate I hope to see this bill amended in such a way as to give to the Government the option after one or two years. I hold in my hand, and will take occasion to publish in the Record, a communication from Mr. Elliott, of the Treasury Department, exhibiting the interest realized to investors on $4\frac{1}{2}$ and 4 per cent. bonds as compared with the 3 per cent. bonds:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,

January 12, 1831.

Sin: The "flat" premium, or premium including the interest accrued since the last quarterly payment of interest, on the 4½ per cent. bonds and on the 4 per cent. bonds at the present market quotation, being respectively 12½ and 13, the "net" premium, or premium not including accrued interest, is respectively 1247 and 12.29, and the corresponding rate of interest realized to investors is respectively 3.12 and 3.27 per cent. per annum.

Respectfully,

P. S. The substance of the above has already been sent by telegraph. Hon. Samuel J. Randall., Speaker House of Representatives.

This statement shows that taking the market value of the bonds into consideration, there is a difference of only a fraction in the probable interest to be realized on a 3 per cent. bond and that now realized on 4½ and 4 per cent. bonds at their present market premium, and it also goes to establish the fact that even in an open money market a 3 per cent. bond can be negotiated at par. I wish to show how such 3 per cent. loans can be placed.

The amount of indebtedness falling due in 1881 is about six hundred and sixtuation sillion dellar.

and sixty-nine million dollars. How would I pay this indebtedness and float these bonds? Secretary Sherman proposes to reduce by a cash payment of $50,000,000 the indebtedness as stated to that extent.

I beg to refer to the following authentic statement given to me by the Comptroller of the Currency:

The amount of United States bonds held by the Treasurer to secure the circulation of national banks at the close of business on the 10th day of January, 1881, are as follows:

6	per cent	$50, 185, 750	00
6	per cent. Pacific Railroad	4, 019, 000	00
5	per cent, 10-40	445, 700	CO
5	per cent. F. 81s	158, 432, 850	00
	per cent. F. 91s	36, 695 450	00
4	per cent	109, 875, 800	00
	Total	359, 654, 530	00

From this statement it appears that there are held by the banks From this statement it appears that there are held by the banks as security for their circulation, and which they must substitute in some way when we redeem the 6 per cent. and 5 per cent. bonds of 1881, 6 per cent. bonds to the amount of $50,185,750; and of 5 per cent. bonds to the amount of $158,878,550. There is held by the Government as security for deposits of public money in the national banks $15,000,000, or thereabout. There are held by the banks on investment additional bonds to the amount of about twenty-eight millions of dollars. I estimate that about one-half of these bonds are 5 and 6 per cent. bonds. The savings-banks in only fourteen States hold national bonds to the amount of $187,413,220; trust companies, $19,109,650, and State banks, $7,142,532, making $213,665,402 of panies, $19,109,650, and State banks, $7,142,532, making $213,665,402 of bonds held by corporate bodies of this character. The above figures are taken from the report of the Comptroller of the Currency. I suppose that about one-half of this amount to be in 5 and 6 per cent. bonds; to wit, about one hundred and six million dollars. Such bonds would have to be supplied by the bonds in great part as issued under this bill, and thus a market for near four hundred million dollars of 3 per cent. bonds would be found, and there would be left but $270,000,000, or a little over, of indebtedness to be provided for.

Under the fifth section of the committee's bill, hereafter the Gov-Under the fifth section of the committee's bill, hereafter the Government would receive 3 per cent. bonds as security in every instance where security may be in future required. In case we had no other purchaser for this balance of $270,000,000, I would then await the incoming revenues. According to Secretary Sherman's figures the amount required for the sinking fund and the probable surplus is $90,000,000 per annum. Three years will provide for this sum, and in that time we could liquidate them by payment of this $270,000,000 for three years, as shown by Secretary Sherman's estimates. Let us view it, however, in another light. According to the statement of my colleague, [Mr. Kelley,]$108,000,000 was actually paid during the last calendar year. According to my estimate of the probable receipts and expenditures for three years to come we shall have at the end of thirty months $297,500,000, which would more than pay off this $270,000,000. Probable receipts each year for three years to come, $350,000,000; probable expenditures each year for three years, $175,000,000; to which there should be added, if this loan is negotiated, $60,000,000 each year for interest on the public debt, aggregating each year of out-go $235,000,000; showing a surplus each year of $115,000,000, or thereabout, to go to the sinking fund and liquidation of the debt, amounting in thirty months to the sum I have heretofore given, $297,500,000. This view is based upon supposition that no outside purchasers could be found, beyond corporations named. In the light three years, as shown by Secretary Sherman's estimates. Let us view it, $297,500,000. This view is based upon supposition that no outside purchasers could be found, beyond corporations named. In the light of these figures what excuse is there for this House to hesitate in fixing 3 per cent. as the rate of interest on these bonds?

Mr. BUCKNER. Does the gentleman in his calculation assume that the banks, without any legal compulsion, will take these bonds in exchange for those they now hold?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I propose to follow the authorization of these bonds by suitable legislation to that end. I would say to the banks that hereafter whenever bonds are required to be deposited for their circulation or for the security of public moneys, those bonds shall be three percents. At the same time I would provide that whenever the three percents are called in, the banks shall have the privilege of substituting any other bonds of the Government. But I would make the banks the medium of placing $400,000,000 of these bonds at 3 per cent., for by such legislation as I have suggested no injustice could be done to them, as the relative value of the four-and-a-half percents, four percents, and the proposed three percents would a-half percents, four percents, and the proposed three percents would soon reach a common level. [Here the hammer fell.] I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the golden opportunity is now presented to this Gov-ernment to place the loan of the United States at as favorable a rate ernment to place the loan of the United States at as favorable a rate of interest as the most favorably situated countries of Europe. I believe that this opportunity, if now thrown away, may never return during this century; and as a representative of the people I feel that I would be guilty of criminality if I failed to take advantage of the opportunity now presented to place the bonds of our Government alongside those of England, Holland, France, and Germany. And that would be an event, sir, which would mark an epoch in the progress of American finance and make it parallel in success the great ability by which France revived her credit after the French-German war.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.
Mr. HOUSE. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question.
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I hope I will be permitted to answer the question which the gentleman has asked me.
The CHAIRMAN. Under the prior order of the House all discussion of the pending amendment is exhausted.
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) But the gentleman from Tennessee asks me how I will compel the banks. I would authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to use the gold in the Treasury so as to call in, say, $50,000,000 at a time.

Several Members. Regular order!

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move to amend by making it two and

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move to amend by making is two and a half.

Mr. FRYE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, who took the floor to close debate in favor of a 3 per cent. bond, and without objection from any who are opposed, occupied a great deal more than the time allowed by the rule. Now it seems to me some gentleman who favors a higher rate of interest than three should be permitted to reply to a certain extent, at any rate, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I have no objection to that.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Under my motion to amend, the gentleman can reply and make the speech he desires to make.

The CHAIRMAN. In reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine the Chair desires to state that in his opinion the Committee of the Whole cannot extend the time for the discussion as the neading mittee of the Whole cannot extend the time for the discussion as the House by order has limited the time for discussion on the pending

Mr. FRYE. I suppose unanimous consent can do it. But I do not know whether that can be obtained.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. What is the question before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. It is the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD.]
Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move to amend the amendment, and that is debatable without regard to the action of the House.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels inclined to hold this committee has not the power of itself to extend the time for discussion.
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I move the committee rise. My object is to extend the time for debate. I have myself, and perhaps it is a little selfish, something more to say on this subject, and, if the other side desire to be heard, I think they ought to have that right.
Mr. WARNER. I desire to be heard in opposition.
Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Is that necessary as the amendment is only in the first degree? It is liable to be amended, and when an amendment to the amendment is moved it is debatable under the rules without regard to the order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair adheres to the opinion that this committee has not the power to extend the time for discussion.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I call for the reading of the rule.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I move the committee rise, and my object is to extend the time for this debate.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I think in view of the remarks of the

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I think in view of the remarks of the gentleman from Maine it appears only pertinent and just time should be accorded to him and any other on that side of the question to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, of course within the same time taken by that gentleman. I hope it will be done by unanimous consent, because if the committee rises and we go into the House again, it will be almost impossible to pass a vote by which we can put any proper limit to the discussion now renewed and running. I hope, therefore, we shall not rise, but settle the matter amicably among ourselves.

I hope, therefore, we shall not rise, but settle the matter amicably among ourselves.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I exercised nothing but a parliamentary right, and an equitable right, to close the debate in favor of the amendment. It belonged to those in favor to close.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know how many amendments were pending before the committee when the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House.

The CHAIRMAN. When the House went into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this measure there were pending the amendment of the gentleman from New York and the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kansas, and further the formal amendferred by the gentleman from Kansas, and further the formal amend-ment which the Chair understands to have been offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then another amendment is in order to the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois he is of the opinion that an amendment would be in order to the pending amendment of the gentleman from New York, but it would

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to have read the rule which shows the amendment is clearly debatable.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the order of the House which was passed before we went into committee, and which provides for closing the debate on the pending amendment, be read.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Read also clause 6 of Rule XXIII.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the order of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CALKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I wish to read this rule, and I desire also to make a point of order under it.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has risen to a parliamentary inquiry; he will please state it.
Mr. CALKINS. I desire to know whether the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia is in order at this time.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that the gentleman from Virginia has yet presented his amendment.
Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York to make the rate 2½ per cent. I confess it is a formal amendment, but under the rules of the House I have the right to make it, and I wish to read the rule bearing upon the question.

House I have the right to make it, and I wish to read the rule bearing upon the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that there is no difference in sentiment between the gentleman from Virginia and the Chair. The Chair recognizes the right of the gentleman to offer the amendment to the amendment already pending.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. But the Chair has stated that I have no right to debate the amendment when it is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair still adheres to that opinion.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I call the attention of the Chair, then, to this rule in support of what I have said. I read clause 6 of Rule XXIII. It is as follows:

The House may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph to a bill, close all debate upon seed section or paragraph, or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only; but this shall not preclude further amendment, to be decided without debate.

[Great laughter.]
The CHAIRMAN. That seems to sustain the Chair.
Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Yes; you are right; I sustain the decision of the Chair myself. [Laughter.]
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent that the request of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] be complied with and that he be allowed five minutes' time to reply, if he so desires, to the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.] Mr. BLOUNT. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from New York that there is already pending a motion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the committee now rise for the purpose of extending the time for debate. [Cries of "Question!"] The committee divided; and there were—ayes 125, noes 16.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Coverr reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt, and had reached no conclusion thereon.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering the funding bill; pending which motion I move that all debate upon the pending amendment shall cease in thirty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The House has heretofore limited debate upon the pending amendments on motion of the gentleman from New York to thirty minutes. The Chair would suggest that the gentleman can reach his purpose in a parliamentary way by moving to reconsider the vote by which debate has heretofore been limited, and thus trav erse the preceding action of the House and reach an extension of the

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on agreeing to the original proposition of the gentleman from New York, which he now pro-

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed. [Cries of "Make it an hour."]

Mr. MURCH. I move, then, to amend by making it one hour.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was then agreed to.

Mr. BUCKNER. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the time for debate has been limited upon the pending amendment; and also move to lay that motion upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I now renew my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the refunding bill. The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. COVERT in the chair.)

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Chairman, from the indications which I have seen in this House it is to my mind very evident that it is not the intention or the wish of the majority of the House to issue what is termed a long bond. In other words it is, so far as I can see, the purpose of the House in refunding this debt not to put it in such form pose of the House in refunding this debt not to put it in such form as will place it beyond the power of the Government to pay it in ten years or at any shorter period that we may be able to do so.

There is no question at all, judging of the resources of this Government according to the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the probabilities of large increases of revenue growing out of the fact of our increase of population and wealth, that in ten years we can pay every dollar of this debt; and that will be in time to begin the payment of the four-and-a-half percents due in 1891. And I believe it is the purpose of this House so far as it can be done to set upon that is the purpose of this House, so far as it can be done, to act upon that idea to make the bonds redeemable at such periods as that we shall have complete power to pay the debt without any increase of premium or without going into the market to make purchases. If left at our option to pay it within ten years we can pay it; and we ought to pay it.

Therefore the only question of difference between the members of this House can be as to the rate of interest of the renewal bonds. this House can be as to the rate of interest of the renewal bonds. Why, sir, my friend from Pennsylvania, the Speaker of the House, admits, and so does my friend from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] impliedly admit, that you cannot float a 3 per cent. bond with short option unless with other legislation; and that is legislation in the interest of the banks. You must reduce taxation, they say. You must take taxation off the circulation as well as off the capital and the deposits. In other words, Mr. Chairman, this measure is a eat in the meal-tub. There is a Trojan horse behind it, the object of which is to make a represent forever the national banks of this country. eat in the meal-tub. There is a Trojan horse behind it, the object of which is to make permanent forever the national banks of this country, founded as they are upon the indebtedness of the Government. That is the object of this bill or the object of a 3 per cent. rate.

You cannot float your bond at par at a 3 per cent. rate. You must ask additional legislation; and you must have such legislation as my friend from New York [Mr. Chittenden] asks; that is, you must take the taxes off the deposits and the circulation.

Now, I respectfully suggest to these gentlemen they had better do that first, before they take the risk of putting on the market bonds bearing as low an interest as 3 per cent. If we get our bonds floated at a 3 per cent. rate it is lower than any nation on the face of the earth has been able to get. It is lower than England has to-day. It is lower than any government on the face of the earth has. And I would hardly believe it if one were to arise from the dead and tell me you could float six hundred and fifty millions of debt of this Government on short hood at 3 rear year that are represented as in the face of the careful for the form the dead and tell me you could float six hundred and fifty millions of debt of this Government on short hood at 3 rear year that have a contract the face of the first floated. ernment, on short bond, at 3 per cent. at par under existing legisla-tion. Yet that is the measure we are asked to act upon. Hence I am in favor of the amendment which will be proposed by my friend from Maryland, [Mr. McLane,] that the rate shall be not exceeding 3½ per cent.

Some will say you will never be able to get it at less than 3½ per cent. You will get it at 3 per cent. provided there is 3 per cent. money in this country to any extent. If there is $300,000,000 of 3 per cent. money that is lying in such quantity in the banks and insurance companies, or elsewhere, as that the owners of it prefer 3 per cent. to nothing better, you will get it, but not otherwise.

A Member. The Secretary of the Treasury says you can get it.

Mr. BUCKNER. The Secretary says you can get some of it, and I doubt not you can; but I do not believe any man on this floor believes you can get money enough for the entire debt at 3 per cent. on a short bond. The gentleman from Pennsylvania admits that in order to get it at 3 per cent. you must have a change of law in reference to bank it at 3 per cent. you must have a change of law in reference to bank

Mr. FRYE. This is not, it strikes me, a question whether or not the United States has the power to dragoon national banks into taking 3 per cent. bonds. I admit that the United States, through this Congress, has complete power over the national banks. I admit this Congress, has complete power over the national banks. I admit the dragooning process can be applied if the Congress of the United States desires to do it.

Why attack the national banks? I say, sir, that there never was a country in the world which had a national banking system so prolific of good and of safety to the people as the one we now enjoy.

And I say to gentlemen who attack that system that they will never find a people in the United States hereafter who will consent to a State banking system where the bills shall not be protected beyond a peradventure by the deposit of bonds to secure circulation. That, sir, is the beauty of the system of national banks in this country to-day. And when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [the Speaker] proposes to find a customer for three percents only in this, that the United States has the power and ought to use the power to break down this banking system, he is making an appeal not to the good sense and justice of this House but to prejudice and passion.

Again, sir, I say the gentleman may compel, perhaps, these savingsbanks and trust companies to take the three percents, but if he does who pays the penalty of the low rate of interest? The bondholder? no; the people who have got their hard-earned gains on deposit in the trust companies and the savings-banks. It is no heavy hand laid the trust companies and the savings-banks. It is no heavy hand laid on the rich, but a blow directly at the face of the poor.

Again, the gentleman from Pennsylvania intimated that you might withdraw gold and pay bonds. Sir, resumption is dependent upon the gold in the United States Treasury.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Why, the Secretary of the Treasury has a law authorizing him to obtain all the gold he wants at 5 per cent. to make absolutely secure resumption.

Mr. FRYE. That is, gold outside the Treasury?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I said the gold in the Treasury to a limited extent, perhaps 33 per cent. above the amount required to protect the greenback circulation, might be used to take up these bonds—to start the negotiation.

protect the greenback circulation, might be used to take up these bonds—to start the negotiation.

Mr. FRYE. That amounts only to this, that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized under the law to sell 5 per cent. bonds and save resumption. We want no such remedy as that.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I do not believe there would be any need for such a remedy.

any need for such a remedy.

Mr. FRYE. The gentleman declares in his speech that he wishes to see this country stand in credit side by side with England and France and other European Governments. I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he cannot name a country on the face of this earth which for eighteen hundred years' birth has ever been able to float a 3 per cent. bond at par.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Will the gentleman—

Mr. FRYE. No interruption now, please. I say that the British consols, having a perpetual time to run, and thus being a great deal better than your 3 per cent. bonds at five, ten, or twenty years, have stood during the last ten years, from 1869 to 1878 inclusive, at 93.48. Deducting dividends and accrued interest the average has been 92.73, realizing interest on the investment at the rate of 3.23½. In 1798, when they were first placed, they were placed at 49½. The best point ever reached by England in placing her three percents was 7.3 discount.

Godn.
[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I will take the floor and yield time to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE.]
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Does not the gentleman from Maine know that British 3 per cent. consols have sold on the Bourse of London within thirty days at 102?
Mr. BANDALL (the Speaker.) And does not the gentleman know

Mr. RANDALL. (the Speaker.) And does not the gentleman know the fact that England proposed, and but for the Irish troubles would now be able, to enter upon a scheme of replacing her 3 per cent. loan with a loan at 24 per cent.?

Mr. MILLS. A perpetual loan, however.

Mr. FRYE. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his courtesy. It is urged here in favor of the 3 per cent. loan that the British consols once in fifty years have gone to 2 per cent. above par—the British consol with accrued interest. There never has been sold by the government itself, in order to place it, a British consol at a better rate of discount than 7.3 per cent., and no other country in the world has ever placed a 3 per cent. bond on as favorable terms as that. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelley] and other gentlemen have quoted our 4 per cent. bonds in the English market at 116, and have declared that that was an evidence that we could place a 3 per cent. bond at par. At the time that quotation was made those bonds only bore a premium of 124 per cent.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman is mistaken; I made no such asser-

Mr. FRYE. I am mistaken, then, but I understood that gentleman and others to give not only the quotations of the bonds in the English market but the English quotations. Now let me say to the House lish market but the English quotations. Now let me say to the House that the English quotations and the American quotations are made on an entirely different principle. The English par of the pound sterling is $5, while the American par of the pound sterling is only $4.86.6. To-day by reason of the rate of exchange the American par of the pound sterling is only $4.82\frac{1}{2}.

Now, if the gentleman will only make his calculation, calling 500 the English par of the pound sterling and 482\frac{1}{2} the American par of the pound sterling, the problem will be this: As 500 is to 482\frac{1}{2} so is 116 to the answer. That will show that the English quotation was equal to an American quotation, at sight, of about 111.

Now, I say (and I thank the committee for listening to me so long as they have and extending my time) that this is no partisan question. The attempt to place a 3 per cent. bond before the country and a

they have and extending my time) that this is no partisan question. The attempt to place a 3 per cent. bond before the country and a failure to do so will be a disaster which every honest man loving his country ought to seek to avoid. I believe in my soul that if you attempt to place a 3 per cent. bond at par you will fail. I equally believe that if you fix the rate at 3½ per cent. you will succeed. I therefore shall vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLang.] to fund six hundred millions at 3½ per cent., redeemable after of e year. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I would like to ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. FRYE. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) What justification has the gentleman for fixing the rate of interest at 3½ per cent. when the premium upon the four and four-and-a-half bonds are now equivalent to a bond at par of 312 and 327 respectively?

at par of 312 and 327 respectively?

Mr. FRYE. Does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] know that the very day the Committee on Ways and Means by a unanimous vote determined to fix 3 per cent. as the rate of interest upon the outcoming bonds the four percents went up, with a fictitious leap, 2 per cent.?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) They did not go up with a fictitions leap. They merely approached a common level, so that the proposed three percents, if they were issued, would approach a common level with the other bonds; just as water always reaches a common level.

Mr. McLANE. Is not the thirty minutes' time allowed for de-

Mr. BURROWS. One hour.
Mr. McLANE. Is not the one hour which by order of the House was given for debate to be under the five-minute rule?
The CHAIRMAN. It undoubtedly is.
Mr. McLANE. Then I ask the Chair to be good enough to enforce

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has strictly enforced that rule. Mr. McLANE. The time of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] which has just expired, was allowed to run for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maryland that at the expiration of the five minutes accorded to the Maryland that at the expiration of the five minutes accorded to the gentleman from Maine the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Randall] sought and obtained recognition from the Chair, and thereupon yielded his five minutes to the gentleman from Maine. The gentleman from New York [Mr. EINSTEIN] is now recognized.

Mr. EINSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I am greatly surprised at the temper in which this House approaches a bill of such magnitude and importance to the country as is this measure for refunding the bonds of the Government. In view of the knowledge which gentlemen possess as to the present condition of the money market, and particularly so as regards its hearing and relation to and mon the credit of possess as to the present condition of the money market, and particularly so as regards its bearing and relation to and upon the credit of the United States, I cannot see how they can for one moment contend that it is possible for us at the present time to float so large a loan as from three hundred million to six hundred million dollars at so low a rate of interest as 3 per cent. per annum. The very fact that our 4 per cent. bonds are now selling in the market at about 112 ought to be proof conclusive on this point.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I beg to remind my colleague that the 4 per cent. bonds are selling at 113½, and at the present premium yield the investor an income of only about 3½ per cent.

Mr. EINSTEIN. My colleague is correct as to the price, but as it fluctuates I assumed it to be about 12 per cent. premium. However, at 131 per cent. premium, these bonds would yield to the investor about .03375 per cent. per annum. These bonds have been and are now largely in the hands of people who hold them for investment. We propose to offer another loan of vast amount, considerably dearer and consequently less desirable than this one. What do you suppose investors who must have Government securities will do; will they buy the 4 per cent load which for the sense amount of more will yield them. who must have Government securities will do; will they buy the 4 per cent. bond which for the same amount of money will yield them thirty-seven hundredths of 1 per cent. more return than the proposed new loan, or will they invest in the new loan at 3 per cent. from purely patriotic motives? I think not.

It is necessary, Mr. Chairman, that a very large amount of bonds should be refunded. Will not this great sum of the new loan tend to keep down its price as well as that of the other Government loans? Bankers and investors know our position and understand over necessition and understand over necessition and understand over necessitions.

Bankers and investors know our position and understand our necessities. They will know that we are compelled to place this 3 per cent. loan, and it will be absolutely impossible for us to sell at par bonds bringing a lesser return than our four percents, are now yield-on that basis.

Our position is plainly this: We have now, in round numbers, about six hundred and eighty-three million dollars of indebtedness to be refunded. If this should all be refunded at as high a rate as 4 per cent. per annum, our saving of interest would be about nine million dollars annually. If we refund at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum, it would be about twelve million four hundred thousand dollars. And of our ability to fund at this last rate I have no doubt, and unhesitatingly assert that it is my indepent that we cannot sell our bonds at par when they yield any lower rate of interest than 3½ per cent. per annum. And I do not believe that we are warranted in taking the risk of a failure when this bill becomes a law. Gentlemen should understand what our position would be in case we should undertake to refund at 3 per cent. and not succeed. The loss to the Government in its future monetary operations would be incalculable, and the responsibility of it would rest upon this Congress

Gentlemen talk about the relative credit of the United States and England and then ring the changes on British consols; but my friend from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has just exposed how fallacious are the statements made relative to those securities. Because once in the last twenty-five years British consols have sold at par, it is claimed on this floor that we can sell our three percents at the same price. It is said that the credit of the United States is as good, if not better, than that of Great Britain. I admit it, and I further believe that the credit of our Great Britain. I admit it, and I further believe that the credit of our Government rests and will forever rest on a firmer and a stronger basis than that of any other land, but for that very reason we should be careful not to injure it or affect it in any way. Gentlemen well know that one of the great causes of the high price of British consols is the immense amount of money invested in them for estates and trust funds, and which can by law be invested in no other security. Even though consols yielded but 1 per cent. per annum interest in return, yet these investments would still have to be made.

Another and equally powerful reason for their high price is on account of the plethora of capital in Great Britain, something our new and yest country is not yet troubled with. And further, let me in this and vast country is not yet troubled with. And further, let me in this connection speak of our position as contrasted with that of a few years ago. We have just emerged from the most disastrons and proyears ago. We have just emerged from the most disastrons and protracted panic the country has ever witnessed—industries prostrated, labor paralyzed, the wheels of commerce blocked, and destitution and misery staring at us from many sides. That was the picture but a little while ago. Mark the contrast. Prosperity's busy hum is heard throughwhile ago. Mark the contrast. Prosperity's busy hum is heard throughout the land, and everywhere we find new evidences of success and development; the country is alive again; gigantic enterprises promising great returns are now being undertaken and money for them is obtained from the public; new railroads greatly needed in many sections; the great project of opening up our sister republic, Mexico, to commerce and 'American capital—these and many other enterprises offer themselves for the investment of large amounts of money, and these to a certain extent must work an influence on the refunding of our loan; small it may be but prepentible. our loan; small it may be, but perceptible.

our loan; small it may be, but perceptible.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that there is but one way in which thisloan can be refunded at 3 per cent., and that is by the abolition of the national bank tax on circulation; and from what I can judge of the feeling of members, I do not believe they would vote for its repeal; but if that is not done, and the refunding bill passes with the 3 per cent. interest clause, I believe the effect will be to compel many of the national banks to retire their circulation, as I cannot see how the little profit they can make will justify them in continuing to keep it out. The consequence will be a contraction of currency, perhaps a very severe one, and you will not only find your refunding operation seriously endangered, but possibly many greater evils may follow. I ask gentlemen to pause and consider, before they cast their vote, whether it will not be more to their country's interest that they should not risk even the remotest chance of possible failure in this refunding bill. But they can have the alternative, and if three percents are worth par, three-and-one-half percents will command a banker, warned the committee against adhering to a $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. bond, saying that a 4 per cent. bond could be placed upon the market at par. The Secretary of the Treasury at that time thought differently, and a great many bankers of the country agreed with him. But the Committee on Ways and Means adhered to the idea of a 4 per cent. bond, and \$738,000,000 of such bonds were placed upon the market at par, and are now ruling at $113\frac{1}{4}$ in the markets of the United States States

States.

Last winter the Secretary of the Treasury said that we could not successfully place upon the market any bond at a lower rate of interest than 4 per cent., but the Committee on Ways and Means insisted upon 3½ per cent. Now the Secretary comes in and says that a 3 per cent. loan of $400,000,000 of Treasury notes running from one to ten years can be put upon the market at par. The credit of the United States in the course of one year has risen to such an extent that gentlemen who last year said that 4 per cent. was the lowest rate at which a bond could be floated agree now that a 3½ per cent. bond can be put upon the market. But a 3½ per cent. bond would command a premium; and why should we put such a bond upon the market at a premium when we can place a bond at a less rate of interest at par?

Mr. MORRISON. Would not any Government bond be at a premium after being placed on the market?

Mr. TUCKER. That may be. In February of last year, when we were discussing this question, 4 per cent. bonds were at 105, which showed we could then have floated a 3.72 bond at par. At one hundred and nine and a fraction you can float a 3½ per cent. at par.

dred and nine and a fraction you can float a 3½ per cent. at par. At one hundred and eighteen and a fraction you can float a 3 per cent.

Mr. MORRISON. At the same time?
Mr. TUCKER. At the same time. You see, four percents are rising in the market, so that the money market will bear a less and less rate of interest every day. My word for it, Mr. Chairman, if we pass a 3 per cent. bond by this Congress, the four percents will go up to a point which will make the three percents at par, worth as much to the investor as the four percents.

Mr. FRYE. I ask whether time has not something to do with the four percents?

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir; but when you make your calculation of the premium on the four percents and the time they have to run, you will see the investor is really only getting to-day 3½ per cent.

Mr. REED. But he has his money invested, which he cannot have with an option bond.

Mr. TUCKER. What kind of option bond?
Mr. REED. One-year option bond.
Mr. TUCKER. Four per cent.?
Mr. REED. Three per cent.

Mr. REED. Three per cent.
Mr. TUCKER. I am not talking about that.
Mr. REED. That is my point.
Mr. TUCKER. Is my time out, Mr. Chairman
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.
Mr. TUCKER. I do not believe the time of option, as has been stated this morning, is of great importance. I believe a 3 per cent. bond, for reasons already stated by others in this debate, will never be at any large premium, and therefore there will be, if you place a three percent on the market at ten or fifteen years, a virtual option be at any large premium, and therefore there will be, if you place a three percent on the market at ten or fifteen years, a virtual option in the Government always to buy in that bond at par. The consequence would be, if we can only secure our objective point of negotiating a 3 per cent. bond, we will save $3,000,000 of interest on this $600,000,000 now to be refunded.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TUCKER. There are one or two other points I should like to add to my remarks, if there be no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. TUCKER. The extraordinary rise in the credit of the United States is due to many causes, to which it is needless to refer. The scrupulous maintenance of the public faith has brought the rate of interest on our bonds down to the standard of European nations. Hazard to the lender breeds usury for the borrower, and good credit Hazard to the lender breeds usury for the borrower, and good credit is the parent of low rates of interest. When, therefore, the perfect safety of our bonds is assured, why should any nation of the Old World borrow at a less rate than this young and growing nation of the New World?

The rate of interest for public securities in England and on the Continent of Europe is not over 3 per cent. The money of the Old World will be lent to us at the same rate if our security is as good, and with our good faith assured, and our population doubling in every quarter of a century, and our wealth in a greater ratio, how can any American doubt our capacity to float at par a bond at the common rate of interest among European nations, the rate of 3 per cent. we

When I first came here we had never negotiated a bond for less when I hist came here we had hever negotiated a bond for less than $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Now the premium on our fours indicates we can to-day float a bond at par at 3.25 per cent. The movement in our committee a month ago to change the rate in our reported bill from $3\frac{1}{2}$ to 3 per cent. sent our fours up to a higher premium which showed the investor was willing to take a less and decreasing rate of interest for his money. Pass this bill, and the premium on the fours will rise to an equilibrium with the new three percents at par.

Look at the splendid effect of the passage of this bill for three percents.

In 1875-'76 the annual interest charge on the Treasury was nearly one hundred million dollars.

If this bill passes as we propose, the account will stand thus:

Total principal interest-bearing debt	.1,618,000,000	00
Four percents due in 1907, say Four-and-a-half percents due in 1891 Three percents, say	. 250,000,000	00

Annual interest on fours..... 29,520,000 00 11,250,000 00 Annual interest on four-and-a-halfs..... Annual interest on threes..... 18,900,000 00

59,670,000 00

Then the annual interest charge will have been reduced nearly forty million dollars in five years.

This will give us the following results as to revenue and expendi-

 Revenue from customs (estimated)
 $195,000,000 00

 Revenue from internal taxes (estimated)
 130,000,000 00

 Revenue from other sources (estimated)
 25,000,000 00

Total (estimated) revenue...... Expenditures: Ordinary expenses..... $175,000,000 00 Interest on debt 60,000,000 00

235, 000, 000 00

115,000,000 00 debt, annually. 65,000,000 00

And we will have a surplus of.....

Now, what will we do with it? Some gentlemen say utilize it all for the rapid extinction of the principal of the debt, and save posterity and our grandchildren from its burdens. I cannot agree to this as a matter of justice or policy. If the debt was contracted for a permanent good, the heir to whom the good descends should take it with the burdens incurred for its acquisition. This is just, according to the common law and to common sense.

As a question of policy, why should the tax-payer now pay the taxmoney which to him costs 5 or 6 per cent., or even more, instead of borrowing through his Government at 3 per cent.? Is it economy to him to force him to contribute at 6 per cent. money to pay his share of the public debt, charged with only 3 per cent.?

Besides, in 1591, when the four-and-a-halfs fall due, we will have 65,000,000 of people and a fourth more wealth. In 1907, when the fours fall due, we will have 100,000,000 of people and triple our present wealth. The burden of our debt per capita to-day is about $34.
In 1907 the same debt would only be $17 per capita, and the ratable burden of the debt on wealth would become less. Is it policy, then, to extract from the young nation, in the morning of its prosperity, all of this debt? Is it not better to pay it gradually, according to the sinking-fund plan, which will discharge all the proposed bonds before 1890, all of the four-and-a-halfs before 1895, and all of the fours before they mature, even with the reduction of taxation which I suggest?

But I am in favor of the gradual as against the rapid process of ayment of the debt, because I wish to lift from enterprise and labor the burden of taxation now crippling the one and oppressing the other.

The present revenue from taxation is $325,000,000. Estimating our total population at 50,000,000, the rate of Federal taxation per capita is $6.50, or, counting five persons to a family, is $33 per family.

After supplying the sinking fund and paying the annual interest we will have a surplus, as I have shown, of $50,000,000. Shall this be continued as a tax, or shall the burden be lifted?

we will have a surplus, as I have shown, of $50,000,000. Shall this be continued as a tax, or shall the burden be lifted?

I do not hesitate to say that this condition of things calls loudly for lessening taxation, and by readjustment of our revenue system of customs and internal taxes to decrease burdens, whereby, with the full maintenance of our public faith and meeting all the requirements of our constitutional duties, we may increase individual and the general prosperity by taking off the trammels on trade and the industries of the country and permitting the consumption of the necessaries of life by all classes, to be cheapened by a decrease of the taxes which now so largely enhance their cost to the consumer, and especially to the laboring and poorer classes of the people.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I propose to vote against the whole business of refunding, and in doing so I think I voice the sentiment of a majority of the people I have the honor to represent. If we refund the debt now we will, in my judgment, perpetuate it forever. I favor paying the national debt, not refunding it. We have the resources with which to pay, then why mortgage the labor of the country for twenty, thirty, or forty years in the payment of a grinding interest, when the same money might as well go toward discharging the principal. The debt we propose to refund is, say, in round numbers $683,000,000. Because we can borrow money at low rates of interest, it is proposed to postpone the day of final payment twenty, thirty, or forty years, in the mean time paying twenty-one to twenty-four million dollars annually in the way of interest, thus perpetuating the principal, so that in the end we will have to meet the problem that faces us to day, "What are we to do with this national incubus? Pay it, or continue to pay interest on it?"

A prudent man, finding himself in debt, will not continue to pay interest on a principal that he has the means of discharging, but will interest on a principal that he has the means of discharging, but will at once apply his surplus means in the payment of his principal debt in order to stop the payment of interest. The Government should do the same. We have in the past fifteen years already paid interest amounting to $657,537,195, a sum equal to nearly the principal which amounting to $657,537,195, a sum equal to nearly the principal which we now propose to refund. Suppose that had been applied in the payment of the principal, we would now be nearly out of debt.

Suppose we refund the debt for, say, twenty years—I believe that is the minimum time proposed—what amount of interest will we pay? At 3 per cent., the lowest rate proposed, it will amount to $420,000,000, more than half of the present principal. At 3½ per cent. it will amount to $590,000,000, about 85 per cent. of the principal, which, added to the interest already paid, will at the lowest rate aggregate a total of $1,027,537,195, and at the highest rate amount to $1.247,537,195 interest paid, yet we have the principal remaining and $1,247,537,195 interest paid, yet we have the principal remaining and are no nearer the end than when we first began.

Now, why not pay off the debt and close up the books? that we must make provision for the six percents and five percents falling due, and gentlemen appear to see no way open except to take up our old notes and give new ones. That proposition is not "a new way of paying old debts," but it is the old, old way of bankrupting the debtor by the renewal of his notes and the payment of interest. The oftener we renew the more interest we will have paid, and consequently to that amount the less able to pay off the principal. Will we be in better condition to pay off the principal ten, twenty, or forty years hence than we are to-day? Can we expect our surplus revenues to be larger then now? Will the principal look smaller to us then the sit does now? then than it does now?

The amount actually due to-day is much less than the surplus revenue now lying idle in the Treasury. Take that money and pay that off. The six percents and five percents are not payable now but redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after the 1st of July.

The surplus revenue is said to be more than ninety million dollars The surplus revenue is said to be more than ninety million dollars per annum. Let us apply it in discharge of the principal—in the redemption of the 6 per cent. bonds. In short, let the bonds stand as they are and apply the surplus revenue in redeeming them. As was said by my colleague, [Mr. Hurd.] a 3½ per cent. twenty-year bond would cost the Government more than the 5 per cent. bonds if not redeemed within the next ten years. With a surplus revenue of $90,000,000 a year in eight years, or ten at farthest, we will have paid the whole of the principal.

If in the future a change should come over the presperity of this the whole of the principal.

If in the future a change should come over the prosperity of this country; if our boundless resources should fail; if the balance of trade should be against us, and not in our favor; if the surplus revenues of the Treasury should dry up and the credit of this great Government be in danger of being weakened, it will be time enough then to talk about renewing our obligations or asking an extension of time. But now, at a time when the wealth of Europe is being poured into this country, when our coffers are filled to overflowing, our material prosperity the wonder and admiration of the world, to talk about renewing our obligations and continuing the payment of interest when we can as well discharge the principal is, in my judgment, anything than good management. than good management.

It is suggested that if times get hard and the Government becomes hard pressed for money, interest will become higher, bankers will refuse to loan their money, and a panic will ensue.

Well, Mr. Chairman, it is time enough to cross a bridge when we reach it. I suppose this Government will be found equal to any emergency that may arise hereafter. I recollect on an occasion once before when the Government was hard pressed for means, under the auspices of the great and good republican party, it issued its non-interest-bearing promissory notes, and by law compelled the people to take them as money in payment of all their debts, and a republican Supreme Court, organized it was said for that purpose, decided the act constitutional. It is said now, however, that the republican Supreme Court is now prepared, should occasion require it, to decide that the former constitutional decision of a former constitutional Supreme Court was unconstitutional. How that is I do not pretend to say, but certainly we need give ourselves no concern, but that a way will be found to protect the credit of the Government at all times and on all occasions. times and on all occasions

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the honorable Speaker of this House, has expressed an anxiety that the credit of this country should be shown to be equal to that of several European nations which he has mentioned, among them England, France, and Holland. Now, for the purpose of calling his attention and that of the House to the exact state of the credit of his attention and that of the House to the exact state of the credit of these nations, I desire to submit a few figures showing the price at which the various 3 per cent. loans issued have been sold and the prices at which they are now held. The highest price ever obtained by the government for British consols, conceded on all hands to be the highest form of governmental credit, was 82½. The principal part of the French 3 per cent. loan was sold by that government at 60½, equivalent to a 5 per cent. loan at par. They afterward sold at 69½, and some at 66½. Belgium sold three percents at 75½; Denmark sold three percents at 75; Russia sold three percents at 68; Portugal sold three percents at 32½.

The gentleman has on several occasions made allusion to the credit of Holland. Now, Dutch 2½ consols, to which he has alluded, sell in the open market at 65 when British consols sell at par.

The French 5 per cent. loan (rentes) of $1,400,000,000 sold at a price equivalent to 6 per cent. at par. I also desire to call the attention of the committee to the price of British consols from 1789 down to the the committee to the price of British consols from 1789 down to the present day. In two instances only in all that period have they been at par—in 1846-'47, and again in 1852-'53. In 1853 the then chancellor of the exchequer, Mr. Gladstone, proposed to float a 2½ per cent. consol. In this he failed; but the temporary effect of the proposition was to bring the price of 3 per cent. consols to par. In May, 1853, British consols sold at 101. In October of the same year, less than six months afterward, with the bank rate at 5 per cent., consols declined to 90. The average price of British consols for fifty years, from 1789 to 1839, was only 67; for twenty-five years, ending in 1873, the average price was about 92.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Why, British consols have been at par within three months.

par within three months

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I am not now talking about the present price of consols.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) British consols have been at par within three months, although there has been a balance of trade against England of $900,000,000, and the United States, with a balance of $167,000,000 in its favor, certainly should be able to float its loan at a less rate of interest.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I am aware the consols have recently been sold at par, but we have had an exceptionally low rate of interest both in this country and in Europe. We cannot hope that this, and other favorable circumstances to which I have no time to allude, will continue. Any considerable change in the money market, or any disturbing cause, would bring about a reduction in price; and in this connection I will read an extract from the London Economist of November 6, 1880, the highest English financial authority, upon the probable course of the market:

Yet we venture to doubt whether the present price (of consols) will be maintained long. It is really abnormally high. It has been produced partly by circumstances which may be called almost accidental. The moment trade really revives the money employed in this manner will be wanted elsewhere, and will move accordingly.

This shows what the best opinion of England is on the subject of the continuance of present market rates of securities, and this opinion is concurred in, I believe, by a large majority of the best financiers in this country.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. Mr. Chairman, I am decidedly in favor of a 3 per cent. bond, and optional after a short term, if any at all. From the facts that have been clearly stated by gentlemen familiar with these matters on this floor, it is evident that such a bond can be floated at par. But suppose it could not be floated at par, let us see for a moment what great disasters would come if the debt remain as it is, to be paid out of the surplus revenues of the Government.

If this bill becomes law, it will cost the people to pay a debt of $637,350,600 the enormous sum, in principal and interest, of $1,019,-

The Comptroller of the Currency, in his annual report for 1880,

Were the entire tax upon banks and bankers of the country, including the two-cent-check tax, (which is not likely,) as well as the tax upon matches and patent medicines removed, the amount of revenue received by the Government from the tax on spirits, beer, and tobacco and from customs duties would alone be sufficient to meet the expenses and reduce the public debt at the rate of at least seventy million dollars annually.

If the nation retains the option to pay the debt, even with the present rate of interest, by paying $70,000,000 a year, it will be paid in less than nine years. On the plan of the bill, the simple interest will be $382,410,360. On the plan of paying at the rate of $70,000,000 per year, even with interest unchanged, it will amount to only $164,473,489, saving $217,936,871.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in his annual report for 1880, page, estimates that the surplus revenue to be applied to the payment of the public debt over the amount required to meet all other de-mands for the year 1881 will be $00,000,000. A similar estimate on pages 8 and 7, for the year 1882, places the surplus revenue to be applied to payment of the public debt at $90,085.717.

If the surplus revenue should continue to be $90,000,000, the debt $756,928,912, principal and interest. That would be a saving over the scheme of the bill of $262,832,048.

Again, on pages 4 and 5 of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, he informs us that:

Compared with the previous fiscal year, the receipts for 1880 have increased $62,620,438.23, giving a net increase from all sources for the year of $59,699,426.52.

By this statement we see that the net increase of surplus revenue in one year has been $59,699,426.52. Those interested in the passage of this bill assure us that we have entered upon a career of unparalleled prosperity; that our financial system is nearly perfect, and that only some providential calamity can check this marvelous prosperity. I think on their views of the situation we can safely depend upon average surplus revenue of $100,000,000 a year for the next six years. With the interest remaining at present rates, that will enable us to pay the debt within five and a-half years. The total amount we should have to pay would be $747,105,270, principal and interest. This would be a saving of $272,655,690 over the plan which the bill proposes.

But, Mr. Chairman, I declare with utmost emphasis that there is still a far better plan. By using $150,000,000 of the idle cash in the Treasury we can reduce the debt to $487,350,600. Then, by substituting Treasury notes for national-bank currency, the amount could be reduced to $133,516,493.

If any of the holders of the bonds demand coin, silver could be pur chased sufficient to meet the requirements of those foolish enough to prefer the silver dollar of 412½ grains to Treasury notes. The remainder could be paid out of the surplus revenues within two years, draining out of our overtaxed people less than seven millions of dollars of interest. By this last plan the power to regulate the volume of our currency will be taken from the national banking association and restored to the Government, "where," in the language of Thomas Jefferson, "it belongs."

The President-elect, Mr. Garfield, declared in his place on this floor that "the power to regulate the volume of the currency made its possessor absolute dictator of the financial and business affairs of the That power is now in the hands of the national banking association. sountry." That power is now in the hands of the national banking association. How it is used is intimated by the Treasurer of the United States in his report, pages 19, 20, 21, and 22. He says:

Attention is invited to the practical bearing on the question of bank note redemption of the construction heretofore placed by the Department on the various provisions of law authorizing the reduction and increase of the circulation of national hanks. The fourth section of the act approved June 20, 1874, 168 Statutes, 124), anthorizes any national bank desiring to withdraw its circulating notes to take up the bonds deposited for the security of such notes, upon the deposit of lawfall money with the Treasurer of the United States, and provides that an equal amount of the outstanding notes of the bank shall be redeemed at the Treasury of the United States. The banks have availed themselves of the privilege accorded by this provision to a very large extent, more than eighty-five million dollars of circulation having been surrendered in the manner prescribed, and nearly seventy-one million dollars having been redeemed at this office. The notes are received at the Treasury mixed with other bank-notes, and if they come from assistant treasurers, or in packages marked "unit," the express charges on them are defrayed out of the 5 per cent. redemption fund. They necessarily pass through the various stages of counting and assorting before they can be separated from the other notes, so that almost the entire expense of the redemption of the whole $1,000,000 has been borne by the other national banks, there being no means of charging the "reducing" banks with the expenses of redeeming their notes until their deposits of legal-tendr notes are exhausted.

This provision was adopted in the expectation that it would act as a regulator of the volume of the bank circulation. It was expected that when the circulation became redundant the surplus would be retired, and that when a demand for more direction was made solely to enable the bank the other banks, and issuing others, also at its own expense, whenever called upon by them.

An example will better illustrate these operations. In January and February, 1875, a certain bank reduced its circulation from $308,490 to $45,000 by deposits of legal-tender notes. Between September 26, 1876, and May 26, 1877, and before that deposit was exhausted it increased its circulation to $45,000. Between August 14 and September 10, 1877, it again reduced its circulation to $45,000. On September 19, 1877, nine days after completing the deposits for this reduction, it again began to take out additional circulation, although $402,550 of prior deposits remained in the Treasury, and by the $26th of that month its circulation had again been increased to $450,000. July 22, 1878, it, for the third time, reduced its circulation to $45,000, and in Angust and September, 1879, again increased it to $450,000, at which it now remains, the balance of its former legal-tender deposit then in the Treasury being $112,615. From January 13, 1875, to the date of this report. $772,275 of its notes have been redeemed, of which only $40,700 were redeemed at the expense of the bank, although during more than one-third of that period it had outstanding and was deriving the benefit from the full amount of circulation which its capital authorized. The only assessments which have been made on the bank for the expenses of redeeming its notes were $24.74 in 1875, and $1.39 in 1878. At one time there were in actual circulation $852,500 of its notes, although the highest amount ever bo no on its books was $450,000.

Other banks have reduced and forthwith increased their circulation to its former amount with the avowed object of relieving themselves from the trouble and expense of redeeming their notes through the 5 per cent. redemption fund. For example, a bank deposited $15,000 in legal-tender notes for the reduction of its circulation on April 3, 1878, and on April 5, 1878, two days afterward, without having touched the bonds deposited as sec

In like manner, on July 11, 1879, it deposited $9,000 for the same purpose, and on the very same day, without disturbing its bonds, it took out $9,000 of additional circulation.

It is plain that such transactions as these are not within the spirit of the act of June 20, 1874. That act authorizes the deposit of legal-tender notes by any national bank "desiring to withdraw its circulation in whole or in part." A wish to surrender circulation with the reserved intention of taking out more at once, or as soon as a fall in the price of bonds shall make the transaction profitable, is not, it is submitted, such a desire to withdraw circulation as the law contemplates. The reduction of circulation therein authorized is a bran fide reduction, based on a well-settled intentio of the bank to curtall its note issues. It could neither have been intended nor expected that the law would become the means of enabling banks to operate in the securities of the Government deposited to secure the redemption of their notes or to throw upon the United States or the other banks of the country the expense of redeeming their notes while maintaining and enjoying the full circulation to which the law entitles them.

Such a construction utterly perverts the original intention of the act. Instead of the volume of the circulation being regulated by the business needs of the country, it is governed by the price of United States bonds. The price of bonds may be such as to induce banks to surrender their circulation at the very time when there is a legitimate demand for more circulation. The profit to be derived from taking up and selling their bonds may be greater than that derivable from their circulation. Within the last year a large reduction of bank circulation has taken place in the face of an active demand for more, simply because a good profit could be made by withdrawing and selling the four percents deposited as security for circulation. Nearly twenty-five million dollars in 4 per cent bonds were thus withdrawing up and selling the f

The leading editorial of the New York Times of the 10th instant, complains as bitterly of the management of the "absolute dictatorship of the financial and business affairs of the country" by national bankers as the Treasurer. These complaints come, not from greenbackers, but from the most ardent supporters of the national-banking scheme of issuing the currency. It has been affirmed in this debate by the friends of the national banks that if an attempt is made to force upon the bankers a 3 per cent. bond they would retire their notes rather than submit, and by contracting the currency bring disaster upon the business interests of the country.

We are not in favor of substituting the old, corrupt State-banking system, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Frye] has just intimated, for the national system. We are in favor of the people, through their Government, issuing all currency needed and regulating its volume.

Government, issuing all currency needed and regulating its volume. By doing so they can fund this interest-bearing debt in non-interest-bearing notes to be used as currency instead of the national-bank notes, based on interest-bearing bonds, and at the same time take from private and irresponsible corporations the power to wreck the business interests of the country by changing the volume of currency, as the Treasurer and the New York Times affirm they have done, and as their supporters on this floor threaten they will do, if we dare attempt to require them to accept 3 per cent. on the bonds which form the basis of their notes. How long will an intelligent and liberty-loving people endure the absolute dictatorship of their finances and loving people endure the absolute dictatorship of their finances and business by this association?

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this 3 per cent. bond. I take it that two important errors have crept into the calculation of the gentlemen who favor such a loan. The first is the fact that they quote a 4 per cent. bond at its long time, and fail to say anything about the limit of time which is applied to it, and becomes an important element in fixing its value.

The second error is that they quote the current price of the 4 per cent. bonds as they are now held in the market as indicating for how much the Government could place a new loan based upon the precise rate per cent. that these 4 per cent. bonds command in the market. Both of these positions are in my judgment erroneous. It is one thing to quote a bond held by the bondholders, by the moneyed men of the country, by the bankers and capitalists in the market, and one in which they are vitally interested; but it is quite another thing for the Government to put a new loan on the market at a rate of interest at which it is problematical, to say the least, it can be floated at all, and authorized by statutes not well understood, making a new and to an extent an unknown security.

a new and to an extent an unknown security.

Again, it has been hinted here by several gentlemen, and ably replied to by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. Frye,] that we have a market for about four hundred millions of bonds of this character. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] in his able argument undertook to say that Congress had power over the national Admitting the declaration of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if Congress so ordered they could make a great many of the banks take these bonds and hold them as security for their issues, I deny that western banks are of that number. I deny the whole proposition that they could be floated at the rate per cent. specified, and an attempt to compel the banks to take them would drive them out of attempt to compel the banks to take them would drive them out of charter. One great question, then, at issue, great to western men at least, is this: Whether or not Congress will drive out of existence every national bank in the West. Does any western man, be he democrat, greenbacker, or republican, dare to stand upon this floor and in his own judgment say that any western bank at all events can continue business on the basis of a 3 per cent. bond?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] said they could.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I can show to the gentleman from Kansas letters from presidents of national banks in a half dozen western cities, which are now lying upon my desk, wherein they say that ern cities, which are now lying upon my desk, wherein they say that they would gladly accept such a bond.

Mr. HASKELL. That statement has been made here over and over

Mr. HASKELL. That statement has been made here over and over again, and I do not question it; I believe it to be true. But it has been repeated always coupled with a provision that the bond shall be a long bond, or one running for a considerable length of time, which I object to; and also coupled with the repeal of the national-bank tax, which cannot be done in the present temper of the House. Both of these conditions are important elements that enter into the value of the bond to the banks. It may be entirely possible for a bank in Paris, in London, or New York to do business upon a 3 per cent. bond, but I doubt it; for the world never saw a 3 per cent. bond at par. The British consols sold at a premium were sold with accruing interest, and they never reached over ninety-nine and a fraction at the best rate upon which they have ever been sold.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to a point of order or to read a rule; but if I should I will read it fairly, though it be against me. [Laughter.]

During the present year about six hundred and seventy million of the bonds of the Government become payable at the option of the Government. This amount is more than one-third of the whole in-the bonds of the Government become payable at the option of the Government. This amount is more than one-third of the whole interest-bearing indebtedness of the United States. The question presents itself, What is best to be done under all the circumstances—best for the Government and best for the people? The bill under consideration proposes to refund this sum at a low rate of interest, the principal not payable until the expiration of twenty years. If the Government were wholly unable to meet its obligations and pay that large sum within a reasonable time, it would certainly be a wise stroke of governmental policy to adont the bill of the committee and stroke of governmental policy to adopt the bill of the committee and thus save to the Government 3 per cent. interest, equal to about twenty million dollars per annum. But if the Government is able to pay the debt, it must be admitted that it would be equally as unwise to create a new bond at long date at any rate of interest, however low.

Then let us look to the facts as they exist and stare us in the face.

The Secretary of the Treasury reports that the surplus in the Treasury for the next fiscal year will be $90,000,000. During the last six months from the 1st of July to the 1st of January, there was a surplus of $43,000,000, which was wisely applied to the payment of the public debt.

Then we have a surplus of one hundred and forty millions for redemption of the local tenders. Fifty millions of this might well be snared. tion of the legal-tenders. Fifty millions of this might well be spared tion of the legal-tenders. Fifty millions of this might well be spared toward the extinguishment of our national obligations. These figures show, and they are not imaginary figures, that the whole debt falling due this year can be paid in a less period than seven years. Assuming these facts to be true, and they cannot be controverted, the question then arises, as I said before, What is best for the Government, and what is best for the people? My answer is, Pay off the debt as rapidly as possible. Why? If we authorize the funding of this large sum in bonds not payable for twenty years, even at 3 per cent., that would amount to a much larger sum than the present rate of interest to be extinguished within the period I have named.

It requires no great amount of financial ability to ascertain that 3 per cent. for twenty years on $670,000,000 gets a larger sum than the present rate of interest would on the same sum for seven years, espeper cent. for twenty years on $670,000,000 gets a larger sum than the present rate of interest would on the same sum for seven years, especially as that sum, if not funded, will be reduced at the rate of eighty or ninety millions a year, thus pro tanto reducing the interest each year. Hence it is manifestly to the interest of the Government to pay. But it is suggested our revenues may not be so large hereafter. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." However, if that should occur, there is no danger that any creditor would want his money, and if he did the Government would still have the option of paying or not. Then, as now proposed, pass a funding bill and give the creditor than Then, as now proposed, pass a funding bill and give the creditor the option of his money or a long bond at low interest. Again, I may add, an additional reason why it is to the interest of the Government to pay, and not refund, is the fact that the Government will have no other debts to which to apply this large surplus of ninety millions a year. Governments, like individuals, when they have a larger income than can be applied to legitimate objects, fall into extravagance, profligacy, and corruption, and thus this excess tends to demoralization in the very fountain and source of our political liberty. I think I have sufficiently shown it is to the interest of the Government to pay, and not fund at long dates. Let us see for a moment how the other propo-

If the holders of these bonds cannot find other similar securities in which to invest their money as they are paid, they must make some other disposition of it. Except the bonds falling due this year, there are no Government bonds other than the four and four-and-a half percents which are now in the hands of private owners. These bear interest at such rates that capitalists cannot afford to pay the price which they command. Therefore they must seek other channels of which they command. Therefore they must seek other channels of investment. The money will then go to the country to be used in mines, furnaces, factories, in farms, and in fact in all the great rural interests. It will thus operate directly on the people and for the people; will open mines now slumbering for the want of capital; will give employment and high wages to thousands of hands now idle. Yes, Mr. Chairman, diffuse $670,000,000 in seven years among the people, and we will witness a state of prosperity never before known or felt by our country. This can be done without the expansion of our currency or doing any man injustice. But issue new bonds at long dates, and you will find money seeking them as an investment, and thus becoming dead capital, of no service to any human being save the bondholder as he clips his coupons and collects his gold interest. I have no prejudice against the capitalist, if by his superior save the conditioner as he clips his coupons and contects his gold interest. I have no prejudice against the capitalist, if by his superior skill, perhaps economy, he has amassed a fortune. I appreciate his ability and respect his rights; but at the same time I shall never consent to legislate for him, in his interest and for his interest, against the people.

It is said by some, give the long-date bond, force a larger surplus in the Treasury, and this will lead to a reduction in the tariff and internal-revenue tax. As to the tariff, it has not been materially changed for sixteen years, and I have no idea it will be for years to come. As to the internal revenue, I think it likely it would lead to a reduction, but not on the articles of tobacco and other subjects in which my State is interested. When I came here, in 1871, we found the tax on tobacco thirty-two cents per pound; ardent spirits $1 per gallon. After repeated and severe struggles we reduced the tax on the former to sixteen cents per pound and on the latter to ninety cents per gallon.

I know these two articles are the last from which the internal revenue will be taken, or on which it will be lessened, unless it becomes manifest that a lower rate of tax will produce a greater revenue, as experience has shown to be the case.

For these reasons I shall vote against any long-date bonds.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in adocacy of the report of the Committee on Ways and Means in reference to the question of interest. I regard this question, the rate of interest.

question of interest. I regard this question—the rate of interest—as the most important and vital element which enters into this whole bill. My conviction is unalterable that the Government of the United States can negotiate this loan at 3 per cent. and float it at par as it States can negotiate this loan at 3 per cent. and float it at par as it negotiated the previous loan at 4 per cent. which now commands so large a premium. I am in favor of making the rate of interest 3 per cent. as much for the purpose of saving the revenues of the Government as for the sake of administering relief to the industrial, the enterprising, and the debtor classes of this country. It has been well ascertained that as the Government reduces the rate of interest it has to pay upon its obligations so the rate of interest becomes reduced measurably on all other obligations taken as investments by the lenders of money. It is time that the Government of the United States lenders of money. It is time that the Government of the United States should dictate to the lenders of capital, and not that the lenders of capital should dictate to the Government.

I cherish the most profound confidence that if this bill is passed with the rate of interest fixed at 3 per cent., in less than thirty days after advertisement by the Secretary of the Treasury syndicates will be formed in New York or elsewhere to take up the entire loan, or the people themselves will subscribe and take it. At this moment Wall street and the operators on Change are watching our deliberations and are anxious to know the fate of the measure. For the last thirty days they have been rigging the stock and money market, seeking to make money tight, and running the rate of interest beyond 6 per cent. on call, to create the impression that money was hard to borrow and lenders stiff, and I believe for no other object than to influence the representatives of the people in Congress and force them to legislate a higher rate of interest than 3 per cent.

Why, Mr. Chairman, how can any man doubt the feasibility of our floating a 3 per cent. Government loan, when one citizen of the Republic holds to-day and owns one-thirtieth of the entire capitalized debt of the nation? Even in my own State, impoverished as South Carolina has been, there are those who are anxious to invest a part of their capital in Government securities, regarding them as the summum bonum, the choice of all investments; and there is hardly a pru-dent man in America who accumulates wealth and is adding to his capital who is not desirous of placing some portion of it at least in that highest, safest, and cheapest security the world now affords—a United States bond.

Mr. WARNER. I concede that the figures given by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, so far as they apply to the bonds held by the national banks and other banks, show quite con-clusively that we could float a 3 per cent. bond to the extent of say one-half or something more than one-half of the amount it is proposed to issue, or say from $325,000,000 to $350,000,000. The banks would doubtless be compelled to substitute a 3 per cent. bond for the bonds they now hold; at least to a large extent. But they might surrender circulation, and probably would to some extent, but to what extent would depend on demand for currency and the rate of interest they can command. But the proposition to limit the rate of interest on the bonds to 3 per cent is, it would seem, coupled with a purpose to take the tax off of deposits or circulation as compensation. Now, I do not propose to discuss here the question as to whether bank taxes should be reduced or not. That is a matter that should stand upon its own bottom. But if we grant that compensation to the banks, remember that no such compensation is given to the public; no such inducement is held out to the people.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I place a very different value, a very much higher value, upon the right of redemption than does the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, or my friend from Virginia, [Mr. Tucker.] The rate of interest alone, it should be understood, does not determine premium, not a bit more than the rental of a vacant lot flanking this Capitol determines the value of that lot. If that lot is in a position where somebody must have it, or where the Government must have it somer or later, the price that will have to be paid for it will be governed by other considerations than the actual rental of the lot. Suppose there were no other Government bonds outstanding but the seven hundred and thirty-eight millions of four percents, and that the Government had not the right, as it has not, to pay them for twenty-seven years; then if it was understood that they would be allowed to run the twenty-seven years, their value would be what they would bring as an investment, and the rate of interest in that case would alone determine their selling price in the market. But, on the other hand, suppose the Government was compelled to buy $60,000,000 or $100,000,000 a year of such bonds as a sinking fund, or under any other law, what then would be their price? A different law, or another law, would operate then—the law of supply and demand. There would be a certain, a compulsory demand on the one hand and an absolute limitation on the other.

Under such conditions, I say, there is no telling where the price would go or what the premium would be. Now that is just the conwould go or what the premium would be. Now that is just the condition we are likely at no distant day to have; and if we go on paying our debt, as I hope we shall, till all the bonds are paid off but the four percents, and then we go to buying them in, you will, as I predict, see the premium go to 25 per cent. or more. If I mistake not, under just such circumstances, this Government did at one time pay as high as a hundred and thirty for its bonds, or 30 per cent. premium.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) If they go to 25 per cent. will not the three percents. be at par?

Mr. WARNER. Hence I place the right of redemption above any other consideration. Controllability is first, and the rate of interest.

other consideration. Controllability is first and the rate of interest other consideration. Controllability is first and the rate of interest second with me. I would announce to the country and the world our determination to pay off our debt. Next to a large standing army a perpetual debt is the worst thing a country can be saddled with. It would be to-day equal to an advantage of 30 per cent. in the race of the world to stand beside the nations of Europe free from debt, while they remain saddled as they are with the double burden of armies and debt. But if, reserving the option to pay at any time, a 3 per cent. bond can be sold at par, as so many gentlemen here think it can be, I shall not contend against that. But there, except as to the exchange of bonds with the banks, I have still my doubts.

Mr. McLANE. I suppose the committee understand very well we are all after the lowest possible rate of interest; and it would be a are all after the lowest possible rate of interest; and it would be a very great delusion for any man to suppose that in advocating a 3 per cent. bond he has any advantage over the Secretary of the Treasury for the Secretary of the Treasury has fully committed himself to an opinion in favor of a 3 per cent. bond, and furthermore to an opinion that he thinks he can place these bonds if the time thereof is properly adjusted. Under such circumstances he believes he can place them in this country at 3 per cent. But the Secretary of the Treasury, like a far-seeing financier, has asked himself the question as to what he will do and where he will stand if he has not placed this 3 per cent, bond; and he understands very well that if he fails in propertiating a 3 per cent bond that the fails in negotiating a 3 per cent. bond, then this country will stand liable for the interest on a 5 and a 6 per cent. bond, which the Government for the interest on a 5 and a 6 per cent. bond, which the Government will have the option to pay or not. And he understands very well that he will have a surplus of one hundred millions a year, and no legal and compulsory obligation to lay aside more than half of it—so that Congress will have fifty millions or more surplus money to expend. It will be entirely optional with the Government whether it will take any of this surplus beyond the sinking fund for the redemption of the 5 and 6 per cent. bonds. That is the real financial volcano over which we stand; and the democracy of this country and the democratic side of this House ought not to make any mistake on that question. If you pass a law to-day limiting—absolutely limiting—the Secretary of the Treasury to a 3 per cent. bond, and if he fails in that negotiation, you stand liable for the payment of interest on a 5 and 6 per cent. bond, besides which you have a surplus revenue of over fifty million dollars above your sinking fund, which is to go in a wasteful and extravagant expenditure of the public revenue, which they, the democracy, will have no power to reduce.

Mr. WRIGHT rose.

Mr. GILLETTE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT] yields to me for a question. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLane.] the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE.] and other gentlemen who have occupied the floor in a discussion as to whether we shall pay 3 or 3½ per cent. interest and who all claim that they desire the lowest possible rate of interest, I desire to ask them what excuse this Government has for issuing a 3½ or even a 3 per cent. bond or Treasury note when it is known to all that our noninterest-bearing Treasury notes now command a premium in coin not only in this country but all over the world?

Mr. McLANE. That, in my opinion, is an absolute delusion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Allow me to ask the gentleman from Maryland this question: If the Secretary of the Treasury is unable to float a 3 per cent. bond, can we not amend it in the next

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND]

knows very well—

Mr. WRIGHT. Whose time is this coming out of?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then I do not propose to yield any more of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor and will proceed.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have but few words with which to trouble this House. As I regard this question, it is not one of 2 per cent. or 3 per cent., or 3½ or 4 per cent.; that is not the principal question which we are to determine. The question is, whether you will pay the debt when you have the money to pay it with. That is the question. We are informed that with the money now in the Treasury, and the money that will come into the Treasury during the next five years, all the bonds can be paid which become redeemable in 1831. It seems to me, therefore, that the proposed legislation on this subject is altogether premature.

There is not a bondholder who will not be willing to wait for the rate of interest he is now receiving until the Government shall pay his bond. It is a poor policy for the Government to exchange new bonds for old bonds, because they can do so at a lower rate of interest, when by so doing they will eventually draw more money from the Treasury.

If we have not now the means on hand to pay these bonds we have it within our power to obtain the means. A tax upon incomes, which the House will not agree to touch, is good for a hundred million a year. Why? Because it affects the money interests of the country. Substituting Treasury notes for bank-notes the House will not resort to; you have not the courage to do it, because you are afraid of the power of the banks. You fear the banks and the men of capital, and vill not tax incomes nor put Treasury notes in place of the banking circulation of the country. I say it is not the question of percentage, but a question of payment. Pay your debt like men. You have the money to do it and you can do it. Assert your courage. This is all that is necessary. Shall banks and capital rule, or will you allow that is necessary. Shall banks and capital rule, or will you allow the people to have a voice? A tax on income, substitution of Treasury notes for bank-notes, and paying out the money you have on hand in the Treasury as surplus revenue, and you have more than enough to pay the maturing bonds of 1881. And why, in the name of Heaven, will you not do it? Simply because banks and capital say that it shall not be done. You obey the decree.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARD. I desire to have read, as a part of my remarks, certain amendments which I propose to move when section 5 of this bill shall have been reached.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all acts and parts of acts imposing taxation upon the capital and deposits of savings-banks, national banks, State banks, and private bankers are hereby repealed.

peased.

That all acts and parts of acts imposing faxation upon the circulating notes of national banks issued upon the bonds authorized by this act are hereby repealed.

That all acts and parts of acts imposing tax or stamp duties on checks are hereby

Mr. WARD. I propose to move the amendments which have just been read, because I think the first two are simply matters of justice. The amendment proposing the repeal of the stamp duty on checks needs no comment or argument. If it is proper to move it on this bill, it is certainly a measure that will commend itself to the business interest of the country.

I am in favor of dealing with national banks on strictly just and equitable principles. If I would reduce the earning power of the bank, if I would force it to take some security bearing a lower rate of interest, then I would be willing to relieve it proportionately from of interest, then I would be willing to relieve it proportionately from some of the burdens that now rest upon it.

I agree with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] that our national banking system is the best banking system that the world has ever known. In contrast to all former systems that have existed in this country it needs no eulogy. We have now a banking system that makes its notes par from one end of the country to the other, because those notes are based, in the first instance, upon the security of the Government; and, in addition to that, a very large security in the shape of the individual liability of the stockholders of the

In the hour of the country's financial need these banks came to its relief, and they have faithfully fulfilled every obligation imposed upon them. They have become interwoven with the business interests in every section, and now number 2,495, and are to be found in every State of the Union except Mississippi, and in every Territory except Arizona.

The arguments of the opponents of the national banking system assume that the banks are mammoth corporations, dealing in immense amounts, realizing enormous profits, and their stock owned by wealthy capitalists. In the discussion of a question like this, I assume every member of the House is anxious to proceed on reliable information to correct conclusions.

A carefully-prepared calculation shows the profit on bank circula-lation, based on a bond at 6 per cent. interest, is $1.23 per cent.; on a 7 per cent. bond, $1.085 per cent., and on a 3 per cent., .94 per cent. The last report of the Comptroller of the Currency gives the following statement of profits for the year 1880:

Geographical divisions.	Dividends to capital.	Dividends to capital and surplus.	Earnings to capital and surplus.
New England States	Per cent. 6, 8 8, 4 7, 8 9, 5	Per cent. 5.5 6.5 6.7 7.6	Per cent. 6.4 8.6 7.6 9.3
United States	8.0	6.4	7.9

It may be that in large cities, where large business interests are conregated and the demands for money are constant and great, bank profits may be large; but it must be remembered that the majority of the national banks are in the country, removed from these influences that give continual employment and large and rapid gains for capital, and this hostile legislation has direct injurious effect upon the country banks country banks.

Another fact found in the same report will show that it is the small tradesman that is most dependent upon the banks for accommodation.

The number of pieces of paper discounted was 808,269, and the average of each discount, $1,082.59. If the average time of these bills was sixty days, and the banks held continually the same amount, the number of discounts made during the year would be nearly five millions, (4,849,614,) the total discounts more than five thousand millions, (5,250,000,000,) which would be equal to a discount of $700 annually for each voter, or $500 for each family in the country. The number of notes and bills of $100 each, or less, at the date named was 251,345, or nearly one-third of the whole; the number of bills of less than $500 each was 547,385, or considerably more than two-thirds of the whole; while the number of bills of less than $1,000 each was 642,765, which was more than three-fourths of the whole number.

I appeal to the intelligence of this House, that it would be unjust and unwise to the intenigence or this House, that it would be unjust and unwise to legislate so as to cripple this great instrumentality of business convenience and prosperity, or to drive them out of existence. It may be argued that such will not be the effect; but let me remind gentlemen that the national banking system is not increasing commensurately with the growth of the country, and I believe the fear of hostile congressional legislation and burdensome taxation has already begun its work.

The Computables states in his report.

The Comptroller states in his report :

The increase in the issue of circulating notes during the present year has been but $6,783,864, of which more than one-half was issued to banks recently organized. The profit upon circulation does not exceed 1½ per cent. per annum, and many banks have reduced their bonds, thus retiring a part of their circulation, in order to avail themselves of the existing high rates of premium, which premium is now equal to the profits upon circulation for six years. While the present small profit upon circulation continues, but little elasticity in the currency can be expected.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us see whether the millionaires or the poorer classes are to be most affected by diminishing the earning capacity of national banks. The finance report of 1876—the last on the subject—gives these curious figures as to the distribution of national-bank stock in round figures. There were—

Holders less than ten shares	100,000
Holders between ten and twenty shares	39,000
Holders between twenty and thirty shares	18,000
Holders between thirty and forty shares
Holders between forty and fifty shares	9,000
Holders between fifty and one hundred shares	15,000
Holders between one hundred and five hundred shares	10,000
Holders over five hundred shares	767

It is the small holders, who have taken this stock as an investment, and depend upon its dividends for maintenance, that will feel most keenly the operations of the bill before us. I repeat, with the banks forced to take a less interest-bearing bond, it is but just that they should be afforded equitable relief from the 1 per cent. tax on circulation and the one-half per cent. on capital and deposits; or that, to some extent, at least, these rates should be modified.

Mr. Chairman, the question of refunding the present maturing Government indebtedness must command careful attention. The bonds which mature are:

 May 1, 1881, five percents
 $469, 651, 050

 July 1, 1881, six percents
 294, 285, 550

Total to be provided for.....

Of this tremendous amount of bonds it is estimated that $470,000,000 are held by individuals and the balance by the banks. The proposi-tion to reduce the interest one-third on this heavy amount of capital is one which involves the well-being of every monetary interest in

The condition of the revenues of the country indicate a capacity to pay a large amount of this indebtedness during the next few years.

The following comparative statement of receipts from customs, internal revenue, and miscellaneous sources, during the years 1879 and 1880, has been prepared at the Treasury Department:

Showing an estimated annual surplus revenue of from $75,000,000 to $90,000,000. With this debt to pay, prudence and good financiering would dictate that we should not "tie our hands" by long-time bonds; but rather that we should reserve to ourselves the right to pay ing would dictate that we should reserve to ourselves the right to pay the principal, even if we should pay a higher rate of interest for a few years to come. The proper rate of interest can be best ascertained by reference to the experience of other nations.

English conols, which are considered the best investment attainable by many persons, bear 3 per cent. interest. They have never been above par since 1852 until during the past six weeks. On November 4 and 5 and from November 19 to December 1 inclusive, consols sold above 100. On November 26 they reached the highest price, 100½, but the accrued interest was nearly 1½ per cent. This loan was first made by the British Government in 1822, when the five percents were funded into four percents; in 1830 the rate of interest was reduced to 3½ per cent.; in 1844 to 3½ per cent., and in 1854 to 3 per cent. The only time since 1822 when the consols brought par was in June and December, 1852, and in March, 1853, and during November and December this year, as mentioned above. The United States four percents sold as high a 113½ on December 9, at which time there was accrued three-quarters of 1 per cent. interest, so that the actual price was less than 113. The bonds therefore returned 3.54 per cent. yearly on its cost that day. At 118.42 the four percents would yield 3 per cent. is a serious one.

My independ yearly would be in four of such a rate of interest. I thisle serious one.

My judgment would be in favor of such a rate of interest, I think now 3½ per cent., as would insure the success of the loan at once in the financial markets of the world, with such an option as would secure to the Government full power to use its surplus revenues in payment.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) In this discussion I have made no attack upon the national-banking system, as has been alleged by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. Frye;] nor have I thrown out any warning to the democracy of this House. I have as an American Representative advocated the 3 per cent. bond, knowing that to the honor of our people a 3 per cent. bond can be negotiated.

In answer to the appeal to the democracy, or rather the warning of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLane,] I want to ask, is it democracy to force this Government to borrow money at 3½ per cent. when, according to figures which I have here, the present loans of 4½ and 4 per cent. realize to their investors but 3.12 and 3.27 per cent. I ask to have read the telegram I send to the Clerk's desk, as a complete refutation of the warning of the gentleman from Maryland. plete refutation of the warning of the gentleman from Maryland.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., January 12, 1881.

Hon. Samuel J. Randall, Speaker:

The rate of interest realized to investors on a 4½ per cent. bond at a "flat" premium of 12½, and on a 4 per cent. bond at a "flat" premium of 12½, and on a 4 per cent. bond at a "flat" premium of 13, present quotations is 3.12, the per cent. for the former, and 3.27, the per cent. for the latter.

E. B. ELLIOTT.

Mr. FORT. Let me remind my friend that the democratic party never borrowed a dollar at less than 6 per cent.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I have one word to say on that point. When the democratic party came into power in this House it was charged that they meant to repudiate the public debt. Thank God, there is not a syllable of truth in that allegation or expectation.

Mr. FORT. The democratic party are not able to borrow money including the discount at less than 10 or 11 per cent.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I will tell the gentleman the difference. When we came into power in this House money was perhaps at 7.30 per cent—

Mr. FORT. By reason of the policy of the republican party we have been enabled to borrow money at less than 6 per cent.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Never mind; I am not talking about parties. When we came into power and entered upon this refunding, we found money was borrowed at 7.30, that rate being based perhaps on the supposition that only one party meant to pay the public debt. But we have demonstrated that the democratic party mean to pay the public debt as honestly as any other party. What is the consequence? You can to-day borrow at 3 per cent. upon the credit of a nation, instead of upon the credit of a particular party that may be administering the Government.

Mr. FORT (addressing Mr. RANDALL) made an inaudible remark.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) No, sir; I want to keep them right

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) No, sir; I want to keep them right on the same path.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the prior order of the House, discussion upon the pending amendment is ended. [Criesof "Regular order!"]

Mr. REED. After the fight is over the democratic party always comes in and brags about what has been done.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman never foundme—
The CHAIRMAN. This discussion is out of order.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Chairman, the time allotted by the House for the discussion of the pending amendment having expired, I now call for the reading of the amendment, that the committee may

I now call for the reading of the amendment, that the committee may proceed to vote upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that his time under the five-minute rule has expired.

Pennsylvania that his time under the five-minute rule has expired.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I want this dispatch from the Treasury Department read again, to show that 3.12 per cent. and 3.27 per cent. are the rates which the 4½ per cent. and 4 per cent. bonds yield at the present premium.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the reading of a paper.

Mr. CALKINS. I object, unless the debate is extended.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) You ought not to object. This is a short telegram from your own Department.

Mr. CALKINS. I do not care whether it is short or long. Unless we can have further debate, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for debate having expired, a vote will now be taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for debate having expired, a vote will now be taken on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] on behalf of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I ask for a division of the question on this amendment, so that a separate vote shall first be taken on that part which proposes to substitute 3 for 3½ per cent. as the rate of interest on the bonds; and another vote can then be taken on the second division, which proposes to fix 3 per cent. instead of 3½ as the rate of interest upon the Treasury notes. I think that under clause 6 of Rule XVI, which I ask the Clerk to read, I am entitled to demand this division of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the rule on the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

On the demand of any member before the question is put, the question shall be divided if it include propositions so distinct in substance that one being taken away a substantive proposition shall remain.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the amendment be read. The Clerk read as follows:

In line 17, strike out the words "three and one-half" and insert "three." In line 22, strike out the words "three and one-half" and insert "three."

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Although the amendment offered by myself under the instruction of the Committee on Ways and Means applies, as its language indicates, both to the bonds and to the certificates, I shall make no objection to the proposition of my friend from Michigan, [Mr. Newberry,] provided the order of the House limiting debate and bringing the committee to a vote shall be regarded as applicable to the latter branch of the amendment as well as the as applicable to the latter branch of the amendment as well as the former. I understand the gentleman from Michigan to desire a vote upon the amendment applicable to the bonds—

Mr. NEWBERRY. Precisely.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. And then the gentleman proposes to have a subsequent vote upon the provision applicable to the certificates. I see no possible objection to that course, and shall make no opposition to the course, and shall make no opposition to the course. tion to it

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman from Michigan has a right under the rules to make the demand which he does. The Clerk will report the first branch of the amendment, on which a vote will be taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 17, strike out the words "three and one-half" and insert "three."

The question being taken, there were—ayes 132, noes 92. Mr. KEIFER called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the first division of the amendment was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the second branch of the amendment, which the Clerk will read.
The Clerk read as follows:

In line 22, strike out "three and one-half" and insert "three" per cent.; so that it will read:

"And also notes in the amount of $200,000,000, bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after two years, and payable in ten years from the date of issue."

Mr. ANDERSON. Is it in order to offer an amendment to that?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not now in order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLANE. I withdraw my formal amendment.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. There are now no other amendments offered to the first section, because, so far as the discussion and votes have applied to the first section, the Committee on Ways and Means have no other amendment to offer to that amendment. I therefore suggest that the committee proceed to the consideration of the two remaining questions pertinent to the section: the length of time the bonds and certificates may have to run, and the relative proportion of the bonds to the certificates. Those are the only two remaining important portions of the bill, and as they are all embodied in the first section, I propose to confine the discussion to that section until they have been determined.

have been determined.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to suggest to the gentleman from New York that he is advised the gentleman from Alabama rises to offer an amendment in the nature of an amendment to the text of the bill, and, if that be so, the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama is in order.

Mr. WEAVER. I also wish to offer an amendment to the text of the bill.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. But no amendment can be in order that will interfere with the rate of interest, that having already been determined, and consequently no amendment can be in order to that section which interferes with the question of time and the question

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will direct the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama to be read.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry before that is

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON. I wish to know when a substitute is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest a substitute would be in order after the text of the section has been perfected.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I think the whole of the first section is subject to amendment, except so far as the rate of interest is

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That is so.
Mr. ANDERSON. The substitute changes that rate of interest.
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The House has voted on the rate

Mr. BUCKNER. We can offer an amendment to the whole section in the nature of a substitute, and let them amend the section to suit themselves

Mr. SAMFORD. My amendment is in the nature of a proviso to Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The section has not yet been passed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Alabama, the Chair will hold his amendment is not in order at this time. The purpose of the committee is to perfect the text of the section.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What is the proposition to be voted on? Let it be read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no proposition before the House.

Mr. SAMFORD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, and it is this: my amendment goes to the whole section. It is a proviso to the whole section, and it seems to me the amendment goes to the perfection of the text of the section. That I understand to be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. If that he so, the gentleman's amendment is in

The CHAIRMAN. If that be so, the gentleman's amendment is in order.

Mr. CALKINS. It is impossible to hear the ruling of the Chair, and I therefore rise to ask whether the Chair has ruled that any further amendment with reference to the rate of interest is in order to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has made no such ruling.
Mr. CALKINS. I so understood the Chair.
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The Chair does not rule until the

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The Chair does not rule until the issue arises.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. There can be no possible question that the committee has concluded on the question of interest.

Mr. CALKINS. But suppose an amendment were offered which affected the rate of interest or the length of time?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Length of time would be in order, and the House only can change the action of the committee on the question of interest. The committee has already determined it.

Mr. CALKINS. The committee is only concluded where that comes as a substantive proposition, but another proposition coupled with the rate of interest is in order.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from New York offered an amendment striking out 3½ per cent., and fixing the rate at 3 per cent. There were several amendments at one time or another offered to that. While they were pending I offered a substitute putting the rate of interest, not to exceed 3½ per cent., at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. There was then a pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey, which was subsequently withdrawn. The vote was taken upon the amendment of the gentlemen from New York as an amendment to the text of the bill so as to perfect it, on motion of the committee. Now, my inquiry is, whether the question before the committee is on the substitute to the amendment voted upon fixing the rate at 3 per cent.?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will repeat to the gentleman from

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will repeat to the gentleman from Kansas what he intimated a few minutes ago, that the substitute of the gentleman from Kansas would be now properly before the committee and in order, provided the amendment sought to be introduced by the gentleman from Alabama is not a proper amendment to be re-ceived at this time. And the Chair has requested the Clerk to report the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, to the end that the Chair might be informed as to its character.

Mr. ANDERSON. Then I understand that if the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama is voted down it does not waive or prevent a vote upon my substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course not.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That depends upon what the substitute is.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from Alabama simply desiring to correct the text of the bill, it will not be in order until the section is disposed of to offer his amendment, as I understand?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Illinois that the Chair is not informed or instructed as to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But the gentleman himself says it is for the purpose of correcting the text.

Mr. SAMFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I said it was for the purpose of perfecting the text, not for correcting it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I misunderstood the gentleman, then.

then.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. The text of the bill has been corrected or perfected already fixing the rate at 3 per cent. Now, the question of 3½ per cent. has been voted upon by the committee. I understand my colleague's substitute provides for a rate of 3½ per cent.; is it competent for the committee to vote upon that proposition?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) "Sufficient unto the day."

Mr. ANDERSON. Ah, but, Mr. Speaker, we want to know when that day is that day is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 1 of the bill the following:
"Provided, further, That before any of the bonds or notes authorized by this act are issued it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay on the bonds accruing during the year 1881 all the silver dollars of 4122 grains and all the gold over and above fifty millions of dollars now held in the Treasury for redemption

Mr. SAMFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because I think it ought to be adopted, and that I may have an opportunity to challenge the statement, made by the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane], during the progress of this debate. That I may make no mistake, I quote his language:

Although the Government has the power to pay this debt either in gold or silver—and I have no doubt it has that power—yet when it had in the Treasury all the gold necessary to pay the debt, if it should take silver at a depreciation of 8 or 10 or 12 per cent. and pay the debt, I should consider it a fraud on the creditor. I think any individual or government that did such a thing as that would lose its credit in the world.

If this were the individual opinion only, of the gentleman from Maryland, it would still demand serious consideration, emanating from so distinguished a source. But when it is the deliberate, and determined position, taken by the representatives of a billion and a half of bonds, it should be met and settled forever.

These bonds bear on their face the agreement, the promise, the contract of the Government to pay them in coin, and the law of their issuance says, of the standard weight at that time. Is the contract to pay them in gold? No. In silver? No. In greenbacks? No. The contract says coin. What is coin of the standard weight of that year? It is a gold dollar of $25^{}_{}0^{}_{}$ grains, and a silver dollar of 412^{}_{} grains. The contract is legally and equitably met by the payment of either gold or silver. If the contract is performed according to its express stipulations, by what authority or right can any man dare to charge fraud on the Government? Whoever heard, since Abraham honestly paid Ephron, the Hittite, four hundred shekels of silver for the cave of Macpelah, down to this day, that a debtor was guilty of fraud, in paying his debt in silver when his contract so allowed? The honorable gentleman admits, that it is lawful to pay either in gold or silver. paying his debt in silver when his contract so allowed? The honorable gentleman admits, that it is lawful to pay either in gold or silver, but, he says, if the Government has gold it is a fraud to take that gold, and buy silver, with which to pay, if silver is at a discount. What is honest in an individual, is honest in a government. Suppose the gentleman owed his neighbor a thousand dollars, payable in coin. what is nonest in an individual, is nonest in a government. Suppose the gentleman owed his neighbor a thousand dollars, payable in coin. When due, his creditor demands payment. He has a thousand gold dollars on hand, but no silver; yet he can turn to a friend standing by, and with nine hundred gold dollars, he can buy a thousand silver dollars, and save a hundred. Would he do it? If not, why not? If there is any sense or logic in his paying the gold, with all deference to the gentleman, a plain man cannot see it.

It is a principle of commercial economy, as old as civilization, as just as Divine judgment, and as moral as the Decalogue, that the debtor has the right to pay, in the cheapest commodity, according to the contract. It is a right always exercised, and never questioned between individuals. If I give my note payable six months hence in grain, and could find a creditor to take it on those terms, and six months hence wheat is worth a dollar per bushel, and corn one-half that amount, do I perpetrate a fraud in paying in corn?

No, sir, the illogical and groundless claim that we cannot pay these bonds in silver, is an audacious and avaricious demand by the bond-holder, whose injustice I shall forever denounce. I concede that honorable gentlemen on this floor disinterestedly, and honestly, differ with me, because they say so. There exists in this House a powerful sentiment, so wedded to the aggrandizement of the bond-holding interest, that every effort in behalf of the tax-paying people, is met with derision or censure.

If silver to-day were of more value than gold, the bondholder would demand silver. These bonds are not payable in greenbacks, and yet they are readily taken in payment for bonds because they are as good as gold. The bondholder clamored for these coin bonds. He got them. He then had silver, which was as valuable as gold, demonetized. He now tries to get above, outside of, and beyond his contract by demanding a special kind of coin. It needs no special financial wisdom to understand this matter. It is simply a question of right, which every honest man can understand at a glance; and for one I shall not be terrorized by the sentiment which pervades this House in the interest of the bondholder, to surrender the right of the tax-payer, to pay this claim, in silver or gold, as may be most to his interest.

pay this claim, in silver or gold, as may be most to his interest.

The amendment I have offered asserts the right, and makes it the duty, of the Secretary to pay silver dollars as long as he has them.

Again, the measure before the House is to provide payment for over Again, the measure before the House is to provide payment for over six hundred millions of bonds accruing during the present year. They bear 5 and 6 per cent. It is conceded on all hands that the Government can borrow money sufficient to pay them at 3 or 3½ per cent. It is a plain business proposition. By borrowing money at 3 per cent. and paying off a 6 per cent. bond one-half the interest is saved. By such a transaction, in this case, the Government can save many million dollars interest annually. A wise man, of course, will do this; but no wise man will borrow money at any per cent. if he has the money on hand to pay without borrowing.

but no wise man will borrow money at any per cent. if he has the money on hand to pay without borrowing.

There are in the Treasury $150,000,000 held for resumption purposes. If my amendment should prevail one hundred million dollars at least of this vast sum would not only be made useful in paying that amount of bonds—an annual saving of interest, at 6 per cent., of $6,000,000—but it would be sent forth, into the arteries of commerce and enterprise upon a mission of great usefulness.

Ah, but they say this would hazard resumption. This is not so. It is simply a very of moneyed men to reduce the values of commerce.

this is miply a cry of moneyed men, to reduce the volume of currency that much, in order that money may be of more value. Resumption has come to us, in times of peace, and prosperity, to stay while peace remains. How can it affect resumption? The man who takes a tenremains. How can it affect resumption? The man who takes a tendollar greenback bill for ten dollars' worth of property does so, not because there are four dollars in specie in the Treasury, to redeem it, but because he has confidence in the ability of the Government to pay. He knows that the fifty million restless, active, working people of this country, with their empire of fertile valleys and mountains of minerals and coal, are able to pay ten times the amount of greenbacks in circulation. If the Government takes $100,000,000 of specie, now lying and rusting in idleness, and pays that amount of its indebtedness bearing interest, how can that depreciate its obligations? As an economic truth, it becomes more able to pay. If $50,000,000 are kept in the vaults of the Treasury, it is nonsense to say, that it will be insufficient for resumption, when it is supplemented by a daily stream of a half million of coin from customs duties, and a statute on the books, authorizing the Secretary to issue 5 per cent. bonds if necesbooks, authorizing the Secretary to issue 5 per cent. bonds if necessary, to get coin to redeem greenbacks. He could sell $100,000,000 of such bonds any day at par.

Sir, it is a pretense to say this sum should lie idle while we are pay-Sir, it is a pretense to say this sum should lie idle while we are paying percents to borrow more money. This money was raised by the sale of 4 per cent. bonds. It is held there to make money scarce, in the interest of annuitants and those who have fixed incomes, in order that their money may have a larger purchasing capacity. They pay no taxes, and hence they care not how heavy the burden may be on those who do. And yet we sit here, professing to represent the masses, who pay all the taxes, and are subdued by the audacity, or sophistries, of the moneyed few. Such a payment as this will save, at 3 per cent., $3,000,000 a year, which in ten years will be $30,000,000.

It has been argued in the course of this debate, the longer the bond the cheaper the rate of interest will be. That is the argument of a perpetual debt. If we had other bonds falling due in the next ten years at a higher rate than 3 or 3½ per cent., I would favor extending the

at a higher rate than 3 or 3½ per cent., I would favor extending the lower rate bond, and paying the higher rate, but no others fall due until 1891; and it has been demonstrated that all those maturing this year can be paid off before then. For that reason I shall vote for the propcan be paid off before then. For that reason I shall vote for the proposition which matures them within ten years, instead of a longer time, and I believe they can be paid in six years. But gentlemen say a short 3 per cent. bond cannot be placed at par. A United States bond or note is exempt from taxation. Federal, State, county, municipal, and special taxes will aggregate nearly, if not quite, 3 per cent. Therefore 3 per cent. on these bonds is equal to 6 per cent. interest. In the money centers to-day, money goes begging at 6 per cent. for three, six, and twelve months. Within the past ten days a private banker, in a small interior city of Alabama, told me he had just refused, a few days before, two offers to lend him $10,000 at 6 per cent. per annum.

The absolute security, therefore, of a Government bond will readily command all the surplus of the country. I therefore vote for a rate not exceeding 3 per cent. If the bankers and syndicates are not willing to take these bonds payable in from one to ten years, let them be issued in denominations from $10 to $100, bearing 3 per cent., and men of limited means, all over the country, will take them, and, if necessary, they can use them as currency, to relieve their necessities, in the mean time getting a small interest on them. Put this feature in this measure as an alternative, in the event the Secretary is embarrassed in their negotiation by the syndicates, and you need have no fears of a failure. If the moneyed men of this country, see that five hundred million little bonds start out into the channels of trade, and agriculture, to perform the functions of currency, they will trade, and agriculture, to perform the functions of currency, they will not stand on ceremony to stop them.

Sir, I do not wonder that national bankers favor a perpetuation of the public debt, and therefore favor a long-time bond, even at a low rate of interest, because the payment of the debt sounds the death-knell of the banks. When the bonds are paid their foundations are gone. But it is incomprehensible to my mind how the representatives of farmers, merchants, mechanics, and laboring men can hesitate a moment on this vital question. I can also understand why manufacturing monopolies lock shields with the bankers in these financial strungles for as navment of interest ceases, the necessity for high facturing monopolies lock shields with the bankers in these financial struggles, for as payment of interest ceases, the necessity for high tariffs passes away. The one takes the profit of toil in the shape of interest, the other plunders honest industry from behind the ramparts of high-tariff laws, and on the sweat of labor both revel in luxury, and dress in purple and fine linen, every day. "In its last analysis money is the blood of the poor." These two mighty powers own this Congress, own the Executive, own the judiciary, own all the departments of this Government. I see no escape for the people from slavery and serfdom for a generation to come. God only knows the fate which is in store for them. Between these upper and nether millstones they will be ground to powder. To these two classes the people pay annually a thousand million dollars; and you might as well attempt to jostle the earth in its orbit, as to loosen the grip they people pay annually a thousand million dollars; and you might as well attempt to jostle the earth in its orbit, as to loosen the grip they have on the industry of this land. Understand me, I recognize the inviolability of the public debt, but I recognize, too, the right of the people to pay according to contract. No man can give an honest reason why the amendment I have proposed should not pass, and yet I fear it will not. In advocating it, I have done my duty as I see it. Some gentlemen say fund the debt in fifty-year bonds, at a small interest, and let posterity help pay it. Aside from the wrong, of mortgaging the bright red blood of our children, for all time, to glut and fatten the diseased maw, of a corrupt and arrogant aristocraey, this would bring us no relief. If such a course would take off any of the 89 per cent. tax on blankets and wool hats; any of the 90 per cent, tax on the plows, the axes, the trace-chains, and the hoes which cent. tax on the plows, the axes, the trace-chains, and the hoes which the poor man uses to make bread—if any of these and such like taxes might be lessened, by extending the bonds, then I would consider it. But it will not do it, and if the taxes collected are not put on this debt they will be squandered in jobs, in subsidies, or in some way. There is no intention to lighten up on taxation. And there never will be, until the people arise in their might, and sweep from power. faithless officials who promise them one thing on the stump, and do another as soon as they get into power.

I know such language is distasteful to this House, and I regret to use it; but it is the truth, and I take whatever derision and censure it may bring. I know there are many gentlemen here who feel as I it may bring. I know there are many gentlemen here who feel as I do, but they are as powerless to bring relief. While we sit in the easy chairs and enjoy the imperial splendor, and royal luxury of this national Capitol, with troops of servants at high salaries, to anticipate every wish, we ought, in the name of honesty, justice, and a common humanity, to remember that our brethren and friends, who sent us here, are toiling in the sun and rain, and in many instances going to bed hungry, to pay for all this magnificence. They depend on us to stand between them and these great wrongs. Are we doing it? Let every man put the question to himself. I say no. The national bankers and moneyed monopolists control this Government, and will continue to do, so unless the people arise, and demand of existing parties regard for right, and if they fail to give it, then move forward in a solid people's party, demanding equal and exact justice, for all classes, for rich and poor alike. When they do I am ready to fight under that banner for right, for truth, and justice.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. There is some confusion with regard to the right to offer amendments to this section. I ask now for a decision of the mentary inquiry. There is some confusion with regard to the right to offer amendments to this section. I ask now for a decision of the Chair on the point whether it will be in order after the disposition of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama to move to strike out "twenty years" and insert "five."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no doubt of the right of any member of the committee to offer an amendment of that character.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, as a further reply to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. MCLANE,] I would state that the question as to whether those bonds were payable in silver dollars was a question discussed and determined when this silver law was passed. There never was a bond sold in this country at 4 per cent, interest, until after the was a bond sold in this country at 4 per cent. interest, until after the remonetization of silver, although it was urged at that time that to restore the standard silver dollar to the currency of this country would be a violation of public faith and would absolutely prevent the refunding of the public debt at a low rate of interest. Yet the effect of that legislation was to so improve the public credit that for the first time in the history of this Government we were able to refund at 4 per cent

Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment here to an amendment I have already offered to this bill, to which I desire to ask the attention of the committee for the purpose of showing those who oppose that amendment what currency the bonds should be paid in. There are some gentlemen here who are favorable to silver yet object to the amendment I introduced because they say it is a discrimination to declare that the bondholder shall receive the coin silver dollar at the Treasury. The amendment I propose is to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to coin an amount of silver bullion into standard silver dollars to pay the bonds as they mature. That unquestionably is lawful and is unquestionably the only mode that can meet the payment on these bonds that call for coin. For if any circumstances should come upon us that would cause a failure of the refunding operations for the want of proper coin in the Treasury, if our importa-erations for the want of proper coin in the Treasury, if our importations should become greater than our exports, or any other causes should operate to cause our paper money to sink below coin, then the bondholder would demand his coin and we would not have the coin to pay it unless some provision of this kind is made.

This amendment proposes to make provision for the payment of these bonds, according to law, in coin. If that is objected to by gentlemen because it discriminates in saying this debt shall be payable in coin, then let us say the coin shall be produced at the mint and paid for these bonds, or an equal amount of other revenues shall be paid. Amend it in that way, if you please. I care nothing for that.

The idea is to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to execute the law of the land in coining four millions of silver per month, to meet the demand for paying these bonds in coin; and if other revenues the demand for paying these bonds in coin; and if other revenues can be paid instead of the silver dollars there can be no objection to that. But let us proceed to provide for the coin to meet this demand, which is a coin demand. This is the only mode we have to provide the coin to meet it.

I declare here from my place in this House that this debt can be paid for a sum at least $30,000,000 less than the face of the bonds, by executing the law of Congress in the mode already provided for. [Here the hammer fell.] I ask unanimous consent to have printed, as part of my remarks, the amendment I have referred to.

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

That of the coin now in the Treasury the sum of $100,000,000 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated for the purpose of paying the interest-bearing debt of the United States payable in the years 1830 and 1831: And it is further provided, That the sum of $100,000,000 of revenue not otherwise appropriated be, and the same hereby is, appropriated for the purposes aforesaid: And it is further provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be coined the maximum amount of silver bullion into standard silver dollars in the manner now provided by law; and shall pay out such dollars, or an equal number of the same in other revenues, monthly in the redemption of said debt.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote will now be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Samford.]

The question being taken, the Chair stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Several members called for a division.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise again to inquire whether the vote does not now come on my substitute?

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman cannot make that inquiry while the committee is dividing.

The CHAIRMAN. The inquiry of the gentleman is not now in

The committee again divided; and there were-ayes 82, noes 25. So (further count not being called for) the amendment was

Mr. McMILLIN. I desire now to offer the amendment to which I called attention a short time ago. I ask the Clerk to read it. The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 1 the following:
"And provided further, That the bonds issued under this act shall be subject to taxation as any other property."

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to give notice I shall demand a separate vote in the House on the amendment which the Chair has just pronounced carried.

Mr. GILLETTE. Too late.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the right of the gentleman from New

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I repeat that, the amendment having been carried by one-third less than a quorum of the House, it is my prerogative, and I shall demand in the House a yea-and-nay vote on that amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated to the gentleman that that is his right.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I give notice in advance that it is my intention to do so.

Mr. GILLETTE. I ask that the pending amendment be reported.

The amendment offered by Mr. McMillin was again read.

The question being taken on Mr. McMillin's amendment; there were ayes 44.

[When the negative vote was called for there were cries of "Down!" Down!"]

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That is filibustering. The truth is the people get the taxation in the lower rate of interest.

The negative vote having been counted, there were noes 49.

Mr. KEIFER. A quorom has not voted, and I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. CARLISLE, and the gentleman from Tennessee,

Mr. McMillin.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 99.

noes 99.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the substitute submitted by the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. Anderson,] which the Clerk will now report.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I move to amend in the sixteenth line by striking out "$500,000,000" and inserting "$650,000,000." The effect of that will be to make this loan a 3 per cent. bond loan, and not a Treasury-note loan at all. That will have to be followed by an amendment to strike out the words an amendment to strike out the words-

And payable forty years And then the words-and also notes in the amount of \$200,000,000, bearing interest at the rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States, after two years, and payable in ten years from the date of issue; but not more than \$40,000,000 of said notes shall be redeemed in any one fiscal year, and the particular notes to be redeemed from time to time shall be determined by lot, under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

The effect of such amendment, as I said when I offered it first, is to make this substitution of indebtedness by name a bond loan exclu-

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. On what time?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The time I will have to offer to amend next, and I will reach it by another amendment hereafter. The issue involved in the amendment I have offered is to make this entire loan, to be negotiated by name, a bond-loan, as it were, and to strike out that portion of the committee's bill which relates to Treasury notes.

Mr. HAYES. Let me ask, will this make it impossible for us to pay any of our debt within the next ten years?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I have not reached that point. That will be a further amendment when the time is reached. This is merely to say that all this indebtedness shall consist, by designation, bonds, and shall be redeemable after one year or two years, as the House may hereafter decide.

Mr. HAYES. The whole amount?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The whole amount, of course, re-

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The whole amount, of course, redeemable after one year or two years, as the House may determine. But the present amendment is a selection in name between bonds and Treasury notes, and makes the entire amount consist, by designation, bonds, and not Treasury notes.

Mr. CALKINS. At what rate of interest?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That the House has already fixed. Mr. BUCKNER. What, then, would be the difference between a bond and a Treasury note?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) There is really no distinction at all. Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] to strike out the words "twenty years," in line 19, and insert the words "one year," so that the bonds shall be payable at any time from one year to forty years, at the option of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will first be upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I would like the gentleman to wait until my amendment has been acted upon; it will not preclude his amendment at all.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I will withdraw my amendment.

amendment at all.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I will withdraw my amendment

for the present.

Mr. WARNER. Let the section be read as it will stand if amended as proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all existing provisions of law authorizing the refunding of the national debt shall apply to any bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than 4½ per cent. per annum which may hereafter become redeemable: Provided, That in lieu of the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and the acts amendatory thereto, and the certificates authorized by the act of February 26, 1879, entitled "An act to authorize the issue of certificates of deposit in aid of the refunding of the public debt," the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds in the amount of not exceeding $650,000,000, which shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after —— years from the date of issue. The bonds and notes shall be, in all other respects, of like character and subject to the same provisions as the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and acts amendatory thereto: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize an increase of the public debt: And provided, That before any bonds or notes authorized by this act are issued it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay on the bonds accruing during the year 1881 all the silver dollars of 412½ grains and all the gold over and above fifty millions of dollars now held in the Treasury for redemption purposes.

Mr. RANDALLI, (the Speaker.) The effect of that amendment is

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The effect of that amendment is merely to change the designation of the indebtedness.

Mr. CALKINS. Is there now pending an amendment to the amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] proposed an amendment, but withdrew it.

Mr. CALKINS. Then I move to amend the amendment in the manner indicated by the proposition which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk reads as follows:

Which bonds shall bear interest at the rate of 34 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually at such places as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate.

Mr. CARLISLE. I make a point of order against that amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. CARLISLE. As I understand the situation, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has moved an amendment, which is equivalent to striking out the words "and notes" where they occur in the bill after the word "bonds." That is an amendment to the text of the bill. text of the bill.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Calkins] now moves an amendment, which, in substance, is not an amendment to that offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but is an amendment to that oliered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but is an amendment to a different part of the text. It is not, therefore, an amendment to the amendment, but an attempt on the part of the gentleman from Indiana to amend another portion of the text while there is pending one amendment to the text. It is therefore out of order on that ground, without saying anything whatever upon the question of the right of the gentle-ing anything whatever upon the question of the right of the gentleman to move an amendment changing the rate of interest which has been established by a vote of the committee.

Mr. CALKINS. I would like to have the gentleman designate the rule under which he makes his point of order. I do not know that I get the full scope of the point he has made.

Mr. CARLISLE. I suppose every gentleman here understands the rule of parliamentary law that when an amendment is pending it is in order to move an amendment to that amendment; but it is not in order to move another amendment to the text, except by way of substitute for it. stitute for it

Mr. CALKINS. But the pending amendment includes the rate of interest

Mr. CARLISLE. The amendment the gentleman from Pennsyl-Mr. CARLISLE. The amendment the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] offers has no reference whatever to the rate of interest, but simply proposes to strike out the words "and notes" where they occur after the word "bonds." Therefore, as I have already said, it is a proposition to amend a part of the text; and while that proposition is pending the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALK-INS] proposes to amend another portion of the text.

Mr. CALKINS. I now understand the gentleman.

Mr. CARLISLE. The proposition of the gentleman from Indiana might, perhaps, be in order hereafter if offered after the pending amendment shall have been disposed of. Perhaps the only question then to be made against it would be that it is an attempt to change the rate of interest which the committee has already established by its vote.

Mr. CALKINS. I think I now apprehend the position the gentleman takes, which is, in substance, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] simply changes the language of the original text.

Mr. CARLISLE. In another portion than where you propose to change it.

Mr. CALKINS. Yes; and for that reason he says my amendment is not in order.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Not as an amendment to my amendment

Mr. CALKINS. I take it that if the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is voted upon the bill it will be in the language in which he has offered it. Although it does not in effect change on which he has oftered it. Although it does not in effect change some portions of the pending section, yet the amendment must be considered as a whole, though it changes nothing in effect except the word "bonds" and the words "and notes." It is to be voted upon as a whole, and I think my amendment is germane and applicable both to the subject-matter of the section and to the amendment itself. As bearing upon the point of order, I ask the Clerk to read Enla XIX

Rule XIX.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a motion or proposition is under consideration, a motion to amend and a motion to amend that amendment shall be in order, and it shall also be in order to offer a further amendment by way of substitute, to which one amendment may be offered, but which shall not be voted on until the original matter is perfected, but either may be withdrawn before amendment or decision is had thereon.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire further to call attention to the fact that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania does more than the gentleman from Kentucky has suggested. It will be observed that it first strikes out "500" and inserts "600," and then strikes out all after "years" down to the word "prescribe" in line 28; so that it not only changes the words which the gentleman from Kentucky has suggested but changes the whole section as well. As suggested to me by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. CLAFLIN,] it increases the amount of the bonds or notes $150,000,000. But the point I urge is, that if this amendment goes in it goes in as an entirety, and therefore any part of it is amendable under the rule which has been read.

Mr. HASKELL. I wish to say a word on this question—merely to protest against such a construction of an amendment to an amendment as would be necessary if this point of order be decided well Mr. CALKINS. I desire further to call attention to the fact that protest against such a construction of an amendment to an amendment as would be necessary if this point of order be decided well taken. Such a restriction upon members of the House in matters of amendment would only add to the already tedious work of perfecting legislation on this floor. It might be possible that the text sought to be amended by the first amendment, if amended by the second amendment, would be favorably received by a large number of members, whereas the original amendment of the text might be faulty in the extreme. If the Chair should hold that a second amendment cannot touch the original text of the bill, it would deprive us of a forcible and effective manner of perfecting the preceding amendment. Such a decision would, in many cases, cut off from the second amendment nearly all its force and effect. I insist that, under the amendment nearly all its force and effect. I insist that, under the law as laid down in Cushing's large work on parliamentary practice, (and there is no rule of this House in contravention of that work, which is accepted as authority in most of our Legislatures,) two distinct amendments differing radically from each other may be pending at the same time. An amendment to an amendment may be totally foreign to the amendment, but it is held to be in order; and the two propositions must be voted upon. If the Chair holds that the point of order taken by the gentleman from Kentucky is good, then farewell to any possible advantage to be derived from the effort to amend an amendment. I trust that such will not be the ruling of the Chair. Suppose I move to amend the original text of the bill. Some other member desires to amend a few words just following or just preceding in the text. If this point of order is good, that would be out of order; and to reach the object we might be compelled to vote down the first amendment; whereas if the second and first amendments were considered together they would form an harmonious whole to which everybody would agree.

I do not care very much about this pending proposition; but I do desire to put myself upon record as protesting against a construction of parliamentary law not founded on our rules, and which is in direct conflict with the best authority in the world on parliamentary law—Cushing's Law and Practice of Parliamentary Assemblies.

Mr. CARLISLE. I have no disposition to prolong discussion on a mere point of order; but it seems to me that this question is a perfectly plain one. It is simply whether, while an amendment is pending to one part of the text and undisposed of, a member can offer an amendment to another part of the text and by this means displace the former amendment and secure a vote first upon his. If that can be done, it is, I confess, something which I have never known to be done heretofore. The only way in which a vote upon this amendment can be secured before the vote is taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is to propose it as an amendment to that amendment; and it must be in fact and in substance an amendment to that amendment, not an amendment to some other part of the text of the bill. If this be not so, then while one amendment is pending I may rise and offer another amendment to a different part of the bill, and so the proceeding may go on until every member on the floor—

Mr. REED. Oh, no; that would be an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; that would be an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. CARLISLE. This is not an amendment to an amendment. If it were, then the rule prohibiting an amendment beyond the second degree would apply; but instead of being an amendment to the amendment, it is a proposed amendment to the text; and the gentleman moving it seeks by putting it in this form to displace the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania so as to succeed in having a vote first upon this subsequent proposition. Now, I submit that according to the most familiar rules of parliamentary law that cannot be done.

law that cannot be done.

Mr. CALKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly.
Mr. CALKINS. Suppose the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania had contained "4 per cent." instead of "3 per cent.," as it does; would it have been in order to have offered my amendment it does; would it have been in order to have onered my amendment to change the rate to 3½ per cent.?

Mr. CARLISLE. I think that if the gentleman from Pennsylvania had moved to amend that part of the bill which relates to the rate of interest by proposing a different rate, and the gentleman from Indiana had then moved to amend the amendment by inserting another rate than that proposed in the amendment, the proposition would have been in order. But that is not the case here at all. The gentleman's amendment, as shown upon its face, proposes to amend the text of the bill; it does not propose to change anything which the tleman's amendment, as shown upon its face, proposes to amend the text of the bill; it does not propose to change anything which the gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to insert in the bill.

Mr. HASKELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly.

Mr. HASKELL. Does not the gentleman recollect in the practice of this House frequent cases when a motion has been made directing a certain disposition to be made of a bill, and when in the form of contracting the proposed to reverse. an amendment to an amendment it has been proposed to reverse directly that proposition?

Mr. CARLISLE. Of course.

Mr. HASKELL. And that is provided for expressly in all the larger works on parliamentary law.

Mr CARLISLE. Of course that is perfectly legitimate because

Mr CARLISLE. Or course that is perfectly legitimate because that is really an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HASKELL. No. It goes to the original subject-matter.

Mr. REED. I should like to make a suggestion. The gentleman from Kentucky is misleading himself by talking about an amendment to the text as if that were something different from an amendment to the section. The effect of striking out "five hundred" and inserting "six hundred" is to make a different section, and it may be that members of the House would be willing to vote for the substitution of six hundred for five hundred provided the rate of interest was changed from 3 per cent. to $3\frac{1}{2}$. Therefore the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not a proposition merely to amend the text, but it is a proposition to submit a different section, and that different section can be amended because thereby it might be made more acceptable to the House. This very fact is illustrated by the Clerk being called upon to read the section as it would be when amended. Any other view of it would be so narrow as to deprive this House of the limited right it has of an amendment to an amendment.

The proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky that gentlemen could go on and amend this part of the text and that part of the text until there were fifteen or twenty amendments before the House is amply answered by the provision of the rules which forbids going beyond an amendment to the amendment. The proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky is therefore a reductio ad absurdum.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I assume an amendment not in order in any one regard is not in order in any regard. If there is a portion of any proposition or amendment which within itself is not in order as an amendment, then the whole of the amendment without reference.

any proposition or amendment which within itself is not in order as an amendment, then the whole of the amendment without reference to the relation of the remaining parts, is also out of order.

Now, I make this point on the amendment offered by the geutleman from Indiana that it is physically and in every other sense impossible that that amendment can be ruled in order because it proposes absolutely to reverse the action of this House. It proposes to change the deliberate action of a very large majority of the committee upon a question which has been under consideration for two days and which has been finally submitted for determination and determined. Now, if under the pretext of an amendment, if under the guise of a substitute the decision of the House can be reversed at the instance of any gentleman who obtains the floor to offer an amendment, then all our decisions and all our rules upon questions of practical legislation fall decisions and all our rules upon questions of practical legislation fall to the ground. Consequently the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana proposes to change the rate of interest which this committee deliberately after discussion positively determined, and if he can reopen that question in that way, if he can send us out again into the open sea of speculation as to the rate of interest, we may go on until the 4th of March next offering amendments so as to defeat the will of the majority of this committee which has been so significantly expressed. Therefore I hold this amendment being out of order in that or the majority of this committees which has been eliminated by pressed. Therefore I hold this amendment being out of order in that one isolated regard fails in all respects.

Mr. CALKINS. One word. That whole question is answered by the fact that if this amendment is adopted as proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania there will be an entirely new section to the bill. Much of the section as now printed has been eliminated by the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The other proposition has been completely answered by the gentleman from Maine. The House may be willing to take $500,000,000 at 3 per cent., and at the same time be willing to change the $600,000,000 at 3 per cent. That is what this amendment proposes to do. The question is simply in a nutshell.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no desire to construe with undue strictness the rules applicable to this question. The situation, as the Chair understands it, is this. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment to the bill as reported by the Committee on Ways and Means. That amendment treated specifically certain definite things embraced in it. The gentleman from Indiana offered Ways and Means. That amendment treated specifically certain definite things embraced in it. The gentleman from Indiana offered something in the nature of an amendment to the amendment. The Chair understands the suggestion coming from that gentleman is that his amendment goes beyond the subject specifically treated of in the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The Chair feels strongly disposed to hold, and does hold, that when the amendment offered as an amendment to an amendment goes beyond the matter sought to be amended, the dividing line between an amendment and a substitute has been reached and crossed and that while the matter a substitute has been reached and crossed, and that while the matter a substitute has been reached and crossed, and that while the matter of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana may be in order at the proper time, and would be in order as a substitute, yet the Chair is constrained to hold, and does hold, that as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania it is not in order. He therefore rules the point of order to be well taken.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I would like that to be reported again. The amendment was again read.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Pennsylvania if a portion of that amendment which has been read Pennsylvania if a portion of that amendment which has been read relating to certain classes of bonds does not cover laws which provide for the syndicate and other objectionable features to which he alluded in his remarks a few days ago upon this question.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The Clerk will be kind enough to read the further proviso which covers that point. It is my intention, I will state to the gentleman from Texas, to offer, when I reach a point where it can be offered, an additional proviso which covers the point to which he now refers.

Mr. WARNER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. The law of 1870 provides that bonds of $50 may be issued—

be issued

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That comes in in the next section.
Mr. WARNER. Very well; I only wanted to call attention to it.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether that portion of what the Clerk has read relating to the payment of silver dollars is a portion of his amendment?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) It is not.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Then I desire to know why the Clerk reads it.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) It was simply read for the information of the committee in connection with my amendment, to show how it would stand if my amendment was adopted. The House put it in, and it is not again to be voted on with my amendment.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Then why require it to be reread if it is not to be acted upon. I want the gentleman from Pennsylvania to offer his amendment as an isolated proposition so that we can under-

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) It is being read simply to show how the section will read if my amendment is adopted. The Chair will notice that the gentleman from Texas has asked a question which makes it necessary that there shall be read a further proviso which I desire to offer when I have the opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read what the gentleman from Pennsylvania suggests

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further. That the interest of the 6 per cent. bonds hereby authorized to be refunded shall cease at the expiration of thirty days after notice that the same have been designated by the Secretary of the Treasury for redemption.

Mr. KEIFER. Is that pending now?
The CHAIRMAN. It is not.
Mr. CLAFLIN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he does not intend to have the bonds redeemable at any fixed time? Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That is another question, and will be hereafter provided for.

Mr. CLAFLIN. It does not appear to be provided for in the amendment in any shape.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I do not want it to have relation

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I do not want it to have relation to this amendment.

Mr. CLAFLIN. Then you strike out all that provides when the bonds shall be made payable.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I left that blank for future settlement by the committee.

Mr. CLAFLIN. But you strike out the date.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That will be amended afterward.

Mr. CLAFLIN. It is then your intention to fix some date?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) It is. That will be offered when I

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) It is. That will be offered when I get an opportunity, first disposing of my present amendment.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question touching this last amendment proposed by him.

In the original law providing for the sixes was there any provision touching the length of notice required before interest should cease?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) There was as to the fives, but not as to the six percents.

Mr. WARNER. That was three months.

Mr. FRYE. That is what I want to get at, and I want to call the attention of the committee to it, that there may be no violation of attention of the committee to it, that there may be no violation of the law in this respect.

Mr. CARLISLE. If the gentleman from Maine will look at the statute he will find it provided that when the bonds issued under that statute are to be redeemed, at the expiration of ten or fifteen years, as the case may be, the interest shall cease at the expiration of three months after they have been called by the Secretary of the Treasury. Now, the 5 per cent. bonds which it is proposed to refund under this act were a part of the bonds issued under that act of July 14, 1870, to which I refer, and therefore that provision applies to them. But the outstanding sixes were not issued under the act of 1870, and therefore that provision does not apply to them at all, and we and therefore that provision does not apply to them at all, and we now have control over them so far as to provide when the interest shall ceas 14, 1870.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) It will be remembered by the committee that I had occasion to make some remarks a short time ago in this connection upon the question of the payment by the Government this connection upon the question of the payment by the Government of double interest. I regard that as a very objectionable feature in the act of 1870, and one that should be guarded against in this bill. I see no reason in the world why the Government should pay double interest to the extent as has been conceded was paid upon this bond funding during 1879, to wit, on $740,000,000 of 4 per cent. bonds the double interest reached $7,400,000. That ought not to have been paid to the extent it was, because the four percents were taken by capitalists almost without any effort on the part of the Treasury, and, in fact, so readily that the Department did not avail itself even of the three months' notice in all instances. I think it would have been practicable for the Department to have disposed of them as readily, and allowed but fifteen days' interest, and without injury to the negotiation, instead of the three months. Now, this amendment, as far as I can provide, is intended to prevent this; to provide the lowest rate of interest, and at the same time prevent the double-interest arrangement.

Mr. WARNER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania another question, and it is an important one. The act of 1870 specifies that the bonds therein provided for—and the provisions of that act are extended to this bill—shall be redeemable in the coin of the present standard value. But the point to which I call attention specially is this: section 3511 of the Revised Statutes, passed after that date, provides that—

The gold coins of the United States shall be a one-dollar piece which at the standard weight of 25.8 grains shall be the unit of value, &c.

The gold coins of the United States shall be a one-dollar piece which at the standard weight of 25.8 grains shall be the unit of value, &c.

Now, my question is, does that act in any way change or affect the provisions of the act of 1870 to which I have referred?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I would not like to express, without careful examination, an opinion upon the effect of two acts supposed to conflict; but if they be conflicting, then I advise the gentleman himself to so amend this first section as to make it plain.

Mr. WARNER. I am in doubt upon that question. My judgment, however, is that section 3511 does not change the act of July 14, 1870.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Let it be made plain. But I would not undertake, without reading the acts, to express an opinion.

Mr. WARNER. I would like the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] to give an opinion upon that point.

Mr. CARLISLE. Of course I can only give an opinion, which may not be worth any more than that of the gentleman from Ohio himself. But it occurs to me there is nothing whatever in section 3511 of the Revised Statutes to change the method of the payment of these bonds. By the express provision of the act of July 14, 1870, they are made payable in coin of the then present standard value. Now the fact that Congress thought proper thereafter to make the gold dollar the unit of value, the dollar of account, cannot of course have the effect to change the rights of the Government in reference to the bonds issued under the act of 1870.

Mr. WARNER. In any lawful standard coin.

Mr. CARLISLE. In any lawful standard coin.

issued under the act of 1870.

Mr. WARNER. In any lawful standard coin.

Mr. CARLISLE. In any lawful coin, and of the standard value, as it existed July 14, 1870.

Mr. WARNER. The question is whether it would be required to pay them according to the gold standard; that is, to increase its value to what may be the value of gold as the unit. There is no question as to the right to pay in coin; but the question is as to the obligation to pay in that coin raised in value to the gold unit.

Mr. CARLISLE. The first section of this bill expressly provides that the bonds issued under it shall be subject to all the provisions contained in the act of July 14, 1870; and therefore they will stand legally upon precisely the same footing as if they were in fact issued under the act of July 14, 1870. This bill, if it becomes a law, will override, or rather reach beyond and behind, the section 3511 of the Revised Statutes, which can have no effect whatever upon these bonds in any way whatever.

override, or rather reach beyond and behind, the section 3511 of the Revised Statutes, which can have no effect whatever upon these bonds in any way whatever.

Mr. WARNER. I think that is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted. The vote will be now taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to address the committee, I would suggest we should have till to-morrow to read, consider, and digest the proposed amendment; and I shall move that the committee rise.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I have no objection to that.

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry as to a point of order before the committee rises. I think there, has been a misunderstanding as to part of the proceedings on this bill. The Chair very well knows I would be the last man to raise any question affecting in any way the ruling of the Chair; but I desire to make this inquiry now, that the Chair may look over the RECORD, and consider the point before the House shall again go into Committee of the Whole.

The gentleman from New York, as will be seen by reference to the fifth page of the RECORD of January 9, made a motion to strike out, in the seventeenth and eighteenth and twenty-second lines of the first section, the word "one-half." That was the gentleman's motion—a motion to strike out. There was subsequently a motion made pro forma by the gentleman from New York by inserting "two and one-half" instead of "three." The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEILEY] to strike out and insert "4 per cent." There were now two amendments pending. If the Chair will refer to page 7 of the RECORD of January 9 he will observe that at the conclusion of the speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KEILEY] it is stated that the hammer fell, and then the following proceedings occurred:

Mr. Bayre. I desire to offer a mendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is pending one amendment to the amendm

Not an amendment to the text of the bill, but a substitute for the pending amendment. I continue to read from the RECORD:

Mr. Bayre. I would like the privilege of offering a substitute.

The Chairman. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anderson] has been recognized.

Mr. Anderson. I move as a substitute to insert at the appropriate place in the section the words "at a rate not to exceed 3½ per cent., at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury."

After that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] offered an amendment to my substitute, inserting 3 instead of 3½ per cent.

Now, there was the state of the question. There were then pending

As will be seen upon page 8, Mr. McLane desired to offer an amendment, and the following statement was made by the Chair:

The amendment of the gentleman from New York has been amended by the amendment moved by the gentleman from Ohio, and to that a substitute has been offered by the gentleman from Chair.

It will be seen on page 9 that the vote was taken on Mr. Keifer's

I read from the RECORD:

Mr. KEIFER. I think the first question would be on the amendment to the substitute which is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio will be first voted upon, but the Chair will ask the Clerk to read the original amendment of the gentleman from New York, and also the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio.

Now that was done under Rule XIX, and was correctly done. That rule is as follows:

When a motion or proposition is under consideration, a motion to amend and a motion to amend that amendment shall be in order, and it shall also be in order to offer a further amendment by way of substitute, to which one amendment may be offered, but which shall not be voted on until the original matter is perfected.

Accordingly the Chair ruled that the vote was to be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER.] That was

When that was done the amendment of the gentleman from New When that was done the amendment of the gentleman from New York was again open to amendment and many were offered, some proforma and some of substance. This morning the vote was taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from New York. I think where the misunderstanding has arisen was in this: my amendment being spoken of as a substitute, the Chair naturally understood that it was a substitute for the section. It was not; it was a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from New York. The Chair will remember that once or twice I have inquired when the vote would come upon my substitute.

will remember that once or twice I have inquired when the vote would come upon my substitute.

I do not wish a decision upon the question now. I would like the Chair to look at the record in the case. I claim this: that at some point, and in my judgment immediately following the vote upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Kiefer,] the vote should have been taken upon my substitute, which was "at a rate not exceeding 3½ per cent. per annum at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury."

If I am right about that, and if through a misunderstanding both on my part and on the part of the Chair, whom I most thoroughly revere, honor, love, and respect in every way [laughter]—we are on the same committee and respect each other; it is the best committee of the House—if there has been any lapse of my rights in this case, I am perfectly certain that both the Chair and the Committee of the Whole will be willing that the error be corrected, and that a vote be taken to-morrow morning upon my substitute for the that a vote be taken to-morrow morning upon my substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The accommittee accordingly rose: and the Speaker having resumed.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COVERT reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, asked and obtained consent to have printed in the Record, as a portion of the debates of this House, some remarks prepared by him upon the funding bill pending in Committee of the Whole. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BELFORD. I move that the House now adjourn.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 5047) relating to the appointment of professors of mathematics in the Navy.

JOHN R. WALLACE.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to know from what committee the bill is reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. MORRILL. There are, or there have been heretofore, as many as four or five bills for assay offices referred to the Committee on Finance. I rather think that they all ought to be considered by one committee and that this bill should go to the Committee on Finance or the bills referred to that committee ought to be referred to some other committee. I suggest to the Senator who has this bill in charge whether it would not be well to have it referred to the Committee on Finance, which has heretofore had the whole subject under its on Finance, which has heretofore had the whole subject under its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Vermont to object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORRILL. Of course I do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill goes on the Calendar.

DAM AT LAKE WINNIBAGOSHISH.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

C. N. FELTON.

Mr. BOOTH. Yesterday, while I was unavoidably absent from the Senate, the bill (S. No. 1350) for the relief of C. N. Felton, late assistant treasurer of the United States at San Francisco, was indefinitely postponed on an adverse report. I move that the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed be reconsidered, in order that the bill may go on the Calendar.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to call up the joint resolution which was before the Senate yesterday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No further morning business being offered in the morning hour, the morning business is closed. The Senator from Illinois asks the Senate to consider at this time the joint resolution considered on yesterday. The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 140) in regard to the extension of the franking privilege.

ation of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 140) in regard to the extension of the franking privilege.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the motion to refer to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads by adding "with instructions to report the same back to the Senate on or before Thursday next."

Mr. WALLACE. While this matter is under consideration, as the subject of the abuse of the franking privilege has been referred to on the floor, I desire to say that a statement contained in the RECORD of vesterday as to a misuse or abuse of the franking privilege by of yesterday as to a misuse or abuse of the franking privilege by myself is without foundation. I have at no time used or authorized the use of my name upon any matter that was not frankable. I shall content myself to make this statement in my place as a refutation of content myself to make this statement in my place as a refutation of any charge of this character made against me.

Mr. LOGAN. I certainly made none.

Mr. WALLACE. Certainly not.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not wish to discuss the proposition further. I am ready to take a vote on the motion to refer. I should prefer that the main question be decided this morning either one way or the other. I think the restrictions in the joint resolution are sufficient, confining the privilege to official matter from the Departments. I do not think it can be misunderstood at all.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, I had the floor yesterday on the joint resolution at the expiration of the morning hour, and I desire to submit some reflections upon it, which I will do now.

So far as the principle of the resolution is concerned, as I under-to submit some reflections upon it, which I will do now.

So far as the principle of the resolution is concerned, as I understand it, I indorse it; for, in brief, I think that Senators and Representatives ought to be entitled to the franking privilege upon all official business sent through the mails by them. But this subject is like most other subjects, the more it is considered the larger it grows. I once heard a soldier say as to the beef they got in the Army, that the more they chewed it the thicker it got; so the more we masticate this subject the larger it seems to get.

The joint resolution proposes to make an addition to a regulation that already exists. It would necessarily form a portion, either by an addition or an amendment of some character, of the postal laws that now exist in the United States. I am in favor of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads taking the joint resolution and incor-on Post-Offices and Post-Roads taking the joint resolution and incorporating its theory in the present existing laws and modifying it further, and in their own good time reporting it back to the Senate. In the first place the existing law provides that—

Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, the Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House of Representatives may send and receive through the mail free all public documents printed by order of Congress; and the name of each Senator, Representative, Delegate, Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House shall be written thereon, with the proper designation of the office he holds, and the provisions of this section shall apply to each of the persons named herein until the first Monday of December following the expiration of their respective terms of office.

There is one provision in reference to congressional documents. Then there is a provision relating to the Agricultural Department, as to how Senators and Representatives may transmit seeds, &c., through the mails. Then we have the Congressional Record and extracts from that, which go free:

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or any part thereof, or speeches or reports therein contained, shall, under the frank of a member of Congress, or Delegete, to be written by himself, be carried in the mail free of postage under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe.

Postmaster-General. Now, we have gone further, and provided that letters, &c., on Government business may go free:

It shall be lawful to transmit through the mail, free of postage, any letters packages, or other matters relating exclusively to the business of the Government of the United States: Provided, That every such letter or package to entitle it to pass free shall bear over the words "official business" an indorsement showing also the name of the Department, and, if from a bureau or office, the names of the Department and bureau or office, as the case may be, whence transmitted.

What I have read embraces the features in reference to free postage. The difficulty in the proposition of the Senator from Illinois, it occurs to me, is that it is too loose, it is too liable to misconstrucit occurs to me, is that it is too loose, it is too liable to misconstruction; in other words, it is not sufficiently guarded in its language to make it safe. We have heard from several Senators who have been in the Senate longer than I have of abuses under these sections that I have just read as to letters, &c., on Government business. In order to make it, in common phrase, the more binding, the protection is to require an indorsement of the words "official business" upon the matter, and there it ends with the signature of the person or persons sending it or a stamp showing that. If all the abuses existed in reference to this feature that were indicated yesterday by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] and the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Edmunds,] what may we not expect under the utmost scrutiny in the way of abuses under this phraseology indicated by the Senator from Illinois. Illinois

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will allow me. He certainly misunder-stood the Senator from Ohio, who is not present. I did not under-stand him to refer to the law as it now exists, but to the old franking stand nim to refer to the law as it now exists, but to the old franking privilege which was allowed to members of Congress. It was the abuse of that which was referred to yesterday.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator may be correct. I understood the Senator from Ohio as referring to abuse under existing law.

Mr. LOGAN. No; it was in reference to the abuse of the franking privilege by members of Congress before the law was repealed, when they were permitted to frank all character of documents, no matter what.

what.

Mr. GARLAND. Very well; I suppose the Senator from Illinois is correct, but it has been stated, and we know as a matter of fact, that abuses under the guard and protection of allowing letters on Government business to go free have been committed and are being committed, I do not say intentionally, but we all know that we receive speeches not relating to any particular matter of legislation before Congress under one of these Government franks under this section of the postal laws. I do not know myself that the language used by the Senator from Illinois can be more explicit. It says "all official business"

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator from Arkansas mean to be understood that we receive under franks speeches not made in Congress?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes, speeches, and documents, and pampilets of Mr. BLAIR. Under the frank of members of Congress?

Mr. GARLAND. No, but under this section 249 from governmental officers. There is no one to determine whether the matter is "official business" or not, or what kind of official business it is. In the section which I have just read allowing the indorsement of the superscription "official business" upon official envelopes signed by the head of a Department, or a clerk in the office sending them, no one head of a Department, or a clerk in the office sending them, no one is provided to determine whether they are on "official business." This joint resolution in regard to Representatives or Senators uses the same words "official business." It is possible that neither the Senator from Illinois nor any other Senator could go into enacting a law so as to define specifically what is meant by "official business" and what particular letters would come under that characterization. To protect against that in the matter of the Record it is provided that that shall be sent under regulations prescribed by the Postmaster-General: but here this is left without any protection. It is not ter-General; but here this is left without any protection. It is not worth while for a Senator to say that we all know what "official business" is, because we know in the practice of the law that words very simple in every-day use and common acceptation, when they are to be interpreted in law sometimes mean very different things, and are sometimes construed to be very different from their plain mean-are sometimes construed to be very that the seen that it was once ing.

I recollect in the course of my reading to have seen that it was once a very grave question before one of the courts of England whether a turkey came within the designation of a bird, and after a long argument and long examination it was solemnly decided that a turkey came within the classification of the word "bird." It is possible some one might doubt as to whether, if I was writing to my constituents about a peck of oats, that could be deemed "official business." I might feel inclined, for the purpose of self-protection, to say it was official business, but the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from Tennessee might not think so.

Tennessee might not think so.

Now, let this measure be framed with some kind of guard around it as good if not better than that in the sections I have already read, and I do not think there will be much difficulty about its passage. I think we had better make this measure a part and parcel of the general laws, consistent and harmonious throughout; and with that view let us refer it to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or any part thereof, or speeches or reports therein mutained, shall, under the frank of a member of Congress, or Delegete, to be writing the most of the consider it in connection with the existing laws; let us not hasten them consider it in connection with the existing laws; let us not hasten them; let us not tell them they shall have only a certain ostmaster-General may prescribe.

That by the laws is put under regulations to be prescribed by the investigation, comparing this with the existing law, report this as an amendment to the existing law.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me to make an inquiry?

will the Senator allow he to make an induly! I came into the Senate, having been detained in committee, when he was concluding a statement about the sort of matter that goes now free in the mails. Am I right in supposing that he stated that speeches which are not a part of the Congressional Record, not made in Congress, go free through the mail?

Mr. GARLAND. I read section 249 of the collection of postal laws and regulations as to letters on Government business. That section

I will read again:

It shall be lawful to transmit through the mail, free of postage, any letters, packages, or other matters relating exclusively to the business of the Government of the United States: Provided. That every such letter or package to entitle it to pass free shall bear over the words "official business" an indorsement showing also the name of the Department, &c.

I say I have received under these superscriptions pamphlets of different kinds that it did not occur to me referred to any particular of-ficial business or any legislation in Congress or pending before either

Mr. CONKLING. But speeches?
Mr. GARLAND. Speeches.
Mr. CONKLING. Speeches not made in Congress?
Mr. GARLAND. Speeches not made in Congress, a speech made, for instance, before the Bankers' Association in New York.
Mr. ALLISON. Franked?
Mr. GARLAND. Under the superscription that I read from section

Mr. CONKLING. Coming from the Post-Office Department?

Mr. GARLAND. I do not know where it came from; I do not recollect as to that; but it was under that superscription "official business," not sent by any Senator or any member of Congress, but under this particular superscription.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator means that those speeches were sent by the executive department, I understand.

Mr. GARLAND. They came through the regular course of mail, as I understand.

Mr. CONKLING. If I shall not interrupt the Senator, I would like

Mr. CONKLING. If I shall not interrupt the Senator, I would like to make a remark upon this.

Mr. GARLAND. I shall be through in a few minutes.

Now, Mr. President, I say this subject should be taken and considered in connection with the postal system. It ought to be considered as a part of a great system, and the present system should be overhauled while we are considering this. Let the resolution go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, not under the spur of the Senate or any whip of the Senate, but let them take it up in their own time and consider it carefully and bring in such a bill as will cover the case and as will reach these matters throughout.

We have seen in the newspapers complaints as to the use of this

We have seen in the newspapers complaints as to the use of this franking privilege already. I am making no accusation myself. The committee should take this matter and make one general law amending the present law and incorporating this in it if they see proper and think right to do so, but without instructions from the Senate, and bring it here as one coherent whole, one system, and ask the Senate to dispose of it.

These are my views. I am in favor of the theory of the resolution; I am for what the Senator from Illinois wants; but I think it had better go to the committee without any instructions and let them consider the whole subject.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, if I understand the Senator from Arkansas aright, he says that he himself has received through the mail communications covered by the official frank of the executive officers of the Government, which communications contained no public or official business, but speeches made by somebody—I did not hear by whom—and not made in either House of Congress. Do I understand and report the Senator aright?

stand and report the Senator aright?

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from New York quotes me with literal correctness, with this exception: that so far as I could see they pertained to no official business and no matter of legislation pending in either House of Congress.

Mr. CONKLING. Were they speeches made except in the two Houses of Congress? Houses of Congress

Mr. GARLAND. They were not speeches made in either House of Mr. CONKLING. But they were speeches?

Mr. GARLAND. They were speeches.

Mr. CONKLING. Well, Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Arkansas abstains unnecessarily, and defers too much when he says of such a document that, as far as he could discover, it did not relate to official business. The law as it stands is too plain and palpable to confuse any mind upon such a question. The law, suggested I think chiefly by the honorable Senator from Ohio, not now in his seat, the senior Senator, covers in no event any speech made save only a speech delivered in one or the other of the two Houses of Congress and going into the Congressional Record; and therefore, speaking from recollection—I have not the act before me—I am quite sure that the words will be found "part of the Congressional Record," from which it has been inferred or held in practice that if a reprint takes place in any pamphlet form, a portion of the Congressional Record is printed, then that pamphlet speech may go without at the same time sending all the other leaves and pages of the RECORD in which that speech originally appeared; but all the time manifestly, conclusively, too clearly for any lawyer or layman to doubt, the one single speech which lawfully may be sent through the mails under the frank of a Senator or Representative is a speech delivered in the Senate or in the House and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Inasmuch as the Executive Departments are not seminaries for oratory or societies for debate and will not be in any form until the bill of my honorable friend the junior Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON,] shall become a law; inasmuch as they are Executive Departments, there is no provision in any law under which any head of a ments, there is no provision in any law under which any head of a Department, except in plain, flat, unmistakable violation of the statutes, can send through the mail such mail matter as the Senator from Arkansas says he has received under the executive frank.

Mr. President, if a stinging commentary, if a sharp and thorough criticism upon the absurdity of the law as it now stands were needed or possible, the Senator from Arkansas has pronounced that commentary. Here are provisions under which any and every clerk in the Post-Office Department and in every other Department; every postmaster, every deputy postmaster, every postmistress, every deputy postmistress, every deputy postmistress, every deputy postmistress, every man, woman, and child, as far as I know, engaged in conducting the public business, may determine each by himself or herself at the time that it is "official business" place upon mail matter self at the time that it is "official business" place upon mail matter a frank which exempts it from postage and carries it free through the mail wherever the mail goes on land or sea, or inland on water or on horse, wagon, or stage-coach. How is this done? Not by the signmanual of the person, not as the honorable Senator from Illinois is compelled to frank, what he is not privileged to frank, but compelled to frank in the course of his duty, by putting his name broadly upon it and the title of his office, so that everybody may know exactly the individual from whom that frank comes, but by placing upon it a printed stamp as good in the hands of one man as in the hands of another, a stamp which like money has no color, and leaves no track and no trace. and no trace.

The honorable Senator from Arkansas receives some communication

The honorable Senator from Arkansas receives some communication or dissertation addressed to a bankers' association. It has the official stamp upon it. Who sends it? The honorable Senator from Arkansas says he does not know. Of course he does not. Anybody, trespasser, outsider, insider, whoever can possess himself of these stamps and affix them either in a Department of the Government inside the building or anywhere in Washington or anywhere in all the realm, by affixing the stamp gives the same validity to it as if the head of a Department lawfully affixed it to lawfully free matter.

I believe the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Edmunds] said yesterday that the men who make the laws are picked out as the only public servants unsafe to be trusted with franking official matter; and they whose business is, not even to interpret the laws but only to execute them, and that not only in the highest but in the most paltry function, they en masse, not some of them, but all of them without exception, are denoted by the law as safe and proper trustees and custodians of this franking power. And then, as if to cap the climax of absurdity, they are to do it, not by making a mark, not by putting an initial, not by signing a name, not by leaving a track or trace by which they can be known, but by an anonymous printed stamp, which one man's hands as well as another's can affix to a document. Thus you have it said that a Senator or Representative is not fit, although he signs it said that a Senator or Representative is not fit, although he signs his name, to exert this power, and that any and every other officer of the Government is fit without any sort of responsibility connected with the act or any mode of identifying him, and thus, as might not unnaturally be supposed, although I should like to know, if I could without prying into it unduly, from which Department such a speech as the Senator refers to came, and who was the author of that speech, it turns out that speeches oratorical, political, didactic discourses made by we know not whom, whether as electioneering documents for a party or electioneering documents for an individual, are sent out, not I infer in an exceptional case to the Senator from Arkansas, but sent out generally. It is possible that the Senator from Arkansas, ardent and well known as he is as a supporter of the present Administration. ministration, may have been selected from pure favoritism and a little compliment and decoration sent to him, a speech with an official frank, perhaps intended to make the Senator from Arkansas feel good, to let him understand that he was on a footing with "the most favored nations," that compliments and attentions were paid to him such as are withheld not only from the rest of his fellow-citizens but even from his brother Senators. But making all allowance for the distinction of the Senator, making deduction for his intimate relations with those who wield this franking privilege, I take it that the result of his statement is that generally and at large this particular mail matter to which he has referred was transmitted through the mail.

Mr. President, I submit that if a condition of things could exist which would show plainly and clearly the peremptory and urgent duty of changing this condition of the statute, here it is. If any Senator will affirm by a bill that the franking privilege should be cut off altogether, that there shall be a special account of postage in every Department, that each shall pay its postage and have it charged to ministration, may have been selected from pure favoritism and a little off altogether, that there shall be a special account of postage in every Department, that each shall pay its postage and have it charged to that fund, so be it. I will not say I will vote for it, but I say it will be respectable comparatively; but to leave the law to stand as it does now, to leave the Senator from Illinois to be mulcted because he happens to come from a large and populous State and because he happens to have been a distinguished military officer which leads pensioners naturally to resort to him over the country—to leave him to be mulcted at the rate of $10 a week to pay out of his own pocket, not his own but official postage, while every head of a Department is furnished with official stamps under which editions of speeches may be sent out and all manner of other matter, is I humbly submit an absurdity so gross and an injustice so indecent that it rightfully appeals to the self-respect of every Senator and of every Representative, and it also appeals to the regard that they have for the interest of the cripples, the mourners, the orphans, the pensioners of this country who I think have quite as much right to receive hear of ways events. the orphans, the pensioners of this country who I think have quite as much right to receive, being exempted from the three or twelve cents it would cost to pay the postage on them, their pension papers as any Cabinet minister has when he is moved to utter his voice to his countrymen to command the means out of the public purse to send out an edition to fall like a snow storm from the mail over the whole country.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, when I made the statement a few moments ago in reference to receiving documents of this character from the Departments, I had no idea of exciting the jealousy of the Senator from New York to such an extent as he has manifested here from any idea of my intimacy with the Administration.

Senator from New York to such an extent as he has manifested here from any idea of my intimacy with the Administration.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish the Senator to understand that I did feel it very keenly that the Senator from Arkansas should be thus preferred over the rest of us and especially over me.

Mr. GARLAND. I was satisfied that the Senator was rather jealous in that regard. But, Mr. President, aside from all this, let us now come to the real question. I stated that I had received one or two, I will now say from recollection several, documents from the Department's here under the frank specified in section 249 of the compile. come to the real question. I stated that I had received one or two, I will now say from recollection several, documents from the Departments here under the frank specified in section 249 of the compilation of the postal laws, which in my judgment did not refer to official business in any sense of the term, and were not connected with official business. I was not making a charge against the Departments; I was not making a charge against any person; but I cited it as an illustration of the indefiniteness of the term "official." That is all. The Department might have considered these things in the light of official business while they did not strike me as such. One pamphlet I recollect distinctly in reference to some addresses delivered before a bankers' association in New York. They were not official documents according to my interpretation, and yet the persons who sent them may have thought so. That makes a difference of opinion, and I was anxious that the resolution of the Senator from Illinois should guard against abuses under the expression "official" contained in it. That was all; nothing more, nothing less than that. I say now, that with this broad expression in this resolution we shall be subjected to the same things that have transpired on the part of persons who send matter under section 249, which I read. The Senator from New York was not present at the beginning of my remarks. I alluded to that exemption so far as speeches printed in the Congressional. Record were concerned, and Senators will see that that was put under regulations to be prescribed by the Postmaster-General, while the Department frank is simply a stamp upon the communication. RECORD were concerned, and Senators will see that that was put under regulations to be prescribed by the Postmaster-General, while the Department frank is simply a stamp upon the communication, and nothing else is to be used. So it leaves a wide margin. This resolution says "official business" generally, and leaves it to no one to determine. Thus we have three parts of the one system. I say let the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads take the entire subject and bring in a harmonious and consistent bill relative to the whole system, including this.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas is not alone in the experience he has had in regard to the reception of what he believes and what I believe to be unfrankable matter through the mails under executive envelopes. During the past three months I have received two communications from the Treasury Department and one communication from the Interior Department, which con-have received two communications from the Treasury Department and one communication from the Interior Department, which consisted of speeches delivered by officers of those Departments, forwarded in envelopes that were furnished merely for official business, directed in the handwriting of clerks that were employed by the Government and paid by the Government, the envelopes themselves I believe being furnished without cost to the parties using them. As the Senator from Arkansas has said, that is one illustration of the unspeakable absurdity of the present system.

Having been identified for the past eight years with the Committee on Pensions and for two Congresses its chairman, I can speak with lively interest and feeling upon this subject, for I venture to say that during the past four years for every letter of a friendly or social or family description that I have sent or received, I have received and sent at least fifty that I never should have sent or received if I had not been a member of this body and connected with the Committee on Pensions.

Another singular absurdity about the business is apparent in this, that having received communications from pensioners in every State in the Union, which I have forwarded to the Department for answer, the reply would be received in an official envelope, coming without postage through the mail, unpaid for by the officer using it, and when I opened it and took out the communication and forwarded it to the person for whom it was intended, I was obliged to pay three, six, or nine cents, as the weight of the communication might be.

Now, sir, it appears to me, as has often been said in this debate, that there can be no question whatever about the propriety of the resolution offered by the Senator from Illinois. We have proceeded with this matter, tinkering from time to time as if we were afraid of it, and all for fear of some great overshed wing rubble conjuing. it, and all for fear of some great overshadowing public opinion. I have said in similar debates heretofore on this floor, and I repeat it, that franking never was a privilege. It is wrongly called a privilege. that tranking never was a privilege. It is wrongly called a privilege. It is a burden; for it does impose upon those who enjoy it far greater burdens than they receive benefits from it. But we are now authorized to send pumpkin seeds and seed-wheat and grain and cuttings and vines and public documents and speeches and everything printed in the RECORD through the mail; and the only question is whether we shall be authorized to send what is more important than any of these and than all these—communications that we receive and send by virtue of the single fact that we are members of this body and transacting public business.

Franking never was abolished in obedience to any public demand. It was abolished in obedience to the dictates of a machine politician who happened to be at the head of one of the Departments and who who happened to be at the head of one of the Departments and who sent out thousands upon thousands of printed petitions to every officer who was under his control, directing and requesting that they should be signed and sent back for the purpose of creating the impression that there was some tremendous public opposition to franking. And that cry was taken up and re-echoed by a few members of the metropolitan press; and yielding a weak and pusillanimous response to that, Congress finally passed the act abolishing franking.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to ask whether there was not a pledge or declaration in a platform made in the city of Philadelphia that the franking privilege ought to be abolished?

Mr. INGALLS. I dare say there was. I am not here for the pur-

Mr. INGALLS. I dare say there was. I am not here for the purpose of discussing political platforms; I care nothing about them. I am discussing a great question of public interest that affects us alike as democrats and republicans, and affects every citizen of the Republic.

Now, I believe that franking in its entirety ought to be restored. Now, I believe that franking in its entirety ought to be restored. I am willing to take whatever of responsibility or odium there may be in its restoration, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] has prepared an amendment, he having been unavoidably called away from the Chamber, which expresses my views and which he asked me, if he did not return in season, to offer. If the resolution submitted by the Senator from Illinois is in a condition where it is subject to amendment, I move to amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not now in that condition.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I will read what at the proper parliamentary period I shall propose to offer:

ary period I shall propose to offer:

That each member of the Senate, each member of the House of Representatives, and each Delegate from a Territory of the United States, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Clerk of the House of Representatives may send and receive through the mail free of postage any letter, newspaper, or packet not exceeding two ounces in weight; and all postage charged upon any letters, petitions, and memorials received during any session of Congress by any such Senator, Member, or Delegate touching his official or legislative duties by reason of any excess of weight above two ounces of the matter so received shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of which the person receiving the same may be a member. Matter sent by any Senator, Member, or Delegate under the authority of this resolution shall be identified by the autograph of such Senator, Member, or Delegate, as the case may be.

I would state that the two first clauses of this proposed amendment are an exact adaptation of the law as it stood before the abolition of franking; and it has been thought advisable, to avoid what has been unquestionably one of the evils of franking, that the package or letter sent shall be identified by the autograph of the person sending it. The Senator from Ohio yesterday adverted to the great abuses that had heretofore existed. My impression is that those abuses existed, not in consequence of the use or abuse of the franking privilege by any person entitled to it; but that in consequence of the use of autographic stamps and dies and by the delegation of the authority to graphic stamps and dies and by the delegation of the authority to amanuenses and clerks matter was sent through the mails that ought not to have been so forwarded free of postage. The autograph signature is required in order to guard against that difficulty, and not because I believe or ever did believe that the stories about the members of Congress sending their washing home to their laundresses, or franking portable saw-mills or cook-stoves through the mail, were ever true to any considerable extent, but for the purpose of guarding this privilege so that it shell be the personal preportation and fran this privilege so that it shall be the personal prerogative and franchise of the person entitled to it by the law.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire just to say one word in reply to the Senator from Arkansas, who read from the law which authorized the frankfrom Arkansas, who read from the law which authorized the franking of documents by the heads of Departments, heads of bureaus, &c. The word "official" is used in that law just as it is in this resolution, and I use the word "official" in this resolution so as to put Senators and members of Congress upon an equality with the clerks in the Departments. That is the object of the resolution, and I suppose no Senator would be afraid to put himself upon an equality of that kind as far as the rights enjoyed by them are concerned. This resolution uses the word "official" just as it is in that law, and gives the privilege to workers of Congress: that is all. If there has been an abuse uses the word "official" just as it is in that law, and gives the privilege to members of Congress; that is all. If there has been an abuse of that law as it exists now, as stated by the Senator from Arkansas, it only shows that there are individuals who will abuse any kind of a law, and you cannot help it, perhaps. There is a punishment prescribed for violations of that law; but as long as the penal provisions of the law are not enforced it is like any other law to a certain extent; it may be abused. Nearly all laws are to some extent liable to abuse; but I thought at the time this resolution was drafted that it at least gave the same privilege to members of Congress and it at least gave the same privilege to members of Congress and Delegates that is enjoyed now under law by clerks; and certainly more necessity for it exists applicable to them than to clerks in Departments, to whom it extends practically instead of being confined to heads of Departments.

So far as envelopes with the words "official business" on them are concerned, I went myself to two of the Departments and insisted that those envelopes should be sent with the packages where they were intended for constituents of Senators and members, so that they might enclose them in these envelopes and send them free as from the Departments. One of the Departments did consent to that, and for a enclose them in these envelopes and send them free as from the Departments. One of the Departments did consent to that, and for a very short time it was done, but all at once it dropped off and it now stands just as it did before. That was done at my solicitation. I was induced to offer this resolution because they discontinued it. That only applied to one of the Departments. The other Departments refused to do it; I will not say because they desired that this privilege should only be extended to them; I will not say because they were afraid to trust members of Congress; but I will say that a member of Congress can be trusted just as well as the head of a Department, and members are just as honorable, just as honest, and the people of this country do trust them and the people will trust them just as soon as they will the head of a Department.

Now, sir, I desire that this resolution shall be passed. Of course, if the Senate desire that the law shall be perfected, they will refer the measure; but I have no idea that will be done because this attempt has been made several times, and we always find the Senate ready to do this thing but it always gets into the hands of a committee for the purpose of perfecting the law and that is the last that is heard of it. That has been its fate for several sessions of Congress, and in my judgment will be its fate again; not that the committee would not report it, but that they cannot agree on a law. This right, as I claim it as belonging to the people, has been defeated in this way every time it has been proposed in Congress; and that is the reason why I suggested that the word "official" be inserted in the law as applicable to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates the same as to heads of Departments, so that they may all be put on an equality. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I believe the first question is on the instructions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think this discussion has shown plainly that the resolution ought to go to the committee. I think the Departments ought to have an opportunity to be heard if they wish to say anything, and I hope that the Senate will send the resolution to the committee without instructions. I think the committee is competent to decide without being instructed by the Senate, and it is a very unusual thing for the Senate to instruct a committee.

Mr. HOAR. The question is whether the Senate is competent to decide without the instruction of the committee, I think.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the motion to refer to add:

With instructions to report the same back to the Senate on or before Thursday.

With instructions to report the same back to the Senate on or before Thursday

The amendment was rejected.
Mr. INGALLS. Is my amendment now in order?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not. The joint resolution is not before the Senate for any question now except reference. The question is on the motion to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to know if it is not in order to move now instructions such as the Senator from Kansas read as an amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to commit the joint resolution with instructions to the committee to report in a particular form is in order Mr. INGALLS. The Chair is right. The motion to commit is in order and takes precedence of a motion to amend. I did not think of that when I asked the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is in order to move to commit with instructions

Mr. INGALLS. I do not want the resolution committed. I want action upon this amendment to the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to refer this joint resolution to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll,
Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. BUTLER.] If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALLACE, (when his name was called.) This subject having taken a political view, as I am paired with my colleague [Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania] on all political questions, I decline to vote. I would vote "yea" if he were present.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 27, nays 23; as follows:

	YE	YEAS-27.
Beck, Call.	Ferry, Garland,	Kernan, McPherson,	Vance, Vest.
Cockrell,	Groome,	Morgan,	Voorhees
Coke, Davis of W. Va.,	Hampton, Harris,	Pendleton, Randolph,	Walker, Windom,
Eaton,	Johnston,	Ransom,	Withers.

	NA	XS-23,
Allison, Anthony, Blair, Brown, Burnside, Carpenter,	Conkling, Davis of Illinois, Dawes, Edmunds, Hoar, Ingalls,	Jonas, Kellogg, Lamar, Logan, Morrill, Platt,	Pugh, Rollins, Saunders, Slater, Williams.
	ABS	ENT-26.
Bailey, Baldwin, Bayard, Blaine, Booth, Bruce, Butler,	Cameron of Pa., Cameron of Wis., Grover, Hamlin, Hereford, Hill of Colorado, Hill of Georgia,	Jones of Nevada, Kirkwood, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Paddock, Plumb,	Sharon, Teller, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte.

So the motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President of the United States had on the 7th instant approved and signed the act (S. No. 54) to enable the Secretary of War to purchase land to enlarge and protect the San Antonio arsenal; and on the 12th instant the act (S. No. 549) for the relief of Samuel I. Gustin.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate proceeds to the consideration of its unfinished business, being the bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben. Holladay. Mr. WITHERS. Mr. WITHERS. When the Senate adjourned they were consider-ing an amendment perfecting a paragraph in the Army appropriation from line 200 to 204.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Holladay bill was called up.
Mr. WITHERS. I beg pardon, I thought the Army bill was up.
Mr. VOORHEES. I am willing that the regular order shall be laid aside for the consideration of the Army bill.

Mr. WITHERS. I submit that motion.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish the Chair would announce that the unfinished business is informally laid aside for the consideration of the

Mr. WITHERS. That is the motion I submit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Cockrell in the chair,) The Chair presumed the announcement made yesterday, as a matter of course, would hold, that the regular order was informally laid aside for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. INGALLS. But that announcement should be renewed at the commencement of every legislative day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The announcement is then repeated that the bill for the relief of Ben. Holladay is laid aside for the con-

Mr. VOORHEES. Informally?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Informally, without prejudice. It will be the unfinished business when the Army appropriation bill is disposed of.

Mr. FARLEY. I ask the Senate to postpone all prior orders in order to take up the bill (S. No. 1210) for the relief of certain officers of the Navy. It will not take five minutes.

Mr. WITHERS. I must decline to give way.

Mr. FARLEY. It is the bill I endeavored to get up this morning. It is a very important bill and has been considered thoroughly by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WITHERS. I hope the Senator will not insist on that. I shall have to resist, on behalf of the Appropriations Committee, the effort to lay aside appropriation bills for any other business.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the bill proposed by the Senator from California will create no discussion.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the bill proposed by the Senator from California will create no discussion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ANTHONY. The bill proposed by the Senator from California will create no discussion at all; it has passed the Senate once.

Mr. WITHERS. That nobody can foresee.

Mr. ANTHONY. It will be in the power of the Senator from Virginia to call for the results order at any time.

ginia to call for the regular order at any time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is before the Senate. The Chair understands that the Senator from California is about to make a motion to lay it aside. He has not formally submitted his motion.

Mr. FARLEY. I only make that motion for the purpose of consid-Mr. FARLEI. I only make that motion for the purpose of considering this bill which will require no discussion. It has been thoroughly examined by the Committee on Naval Affairs and has once passed the Senate during this Congress. It has been twice examined by the committee and been reported unanimously. It is Senate bill No. 1210 in reference to carrying out the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy in regard to three or four gentlemen whose cases have been acted on by a board of naval officers. I make the motion

Mr. WITHERS. I am impelled to resist the motion, for the reason that there are probably one hundred bills on the Calendar similarly situated, and I must insist that the Senate shall proceed with the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. That bill need not be laid aside by a formal vote.

I et it be laid aside informally; and if the other bill creates any discussion the Senator from Virginia can call for the regular order.

Mr. WITHERS. There is already one bill laid aside.

Mr. ANTHONY. We can lay two bills aside.

Mr. WITHERS. I do not suppose that the bill of the Senator from California will be prejudiced by waiting until we get through with the Army appropriation bill. Consequently I must ask the Senate to continue its consideration. continue its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves that the Senate lay aside the pending order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You must postpone. There is no motion to lay

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves to postpone the pending order for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the bill that he has named.

consideration of the bill that he has named.

Mr. CONKLING. It is not the habit of the Senator from California to trouble the Senate with many requests. I do not know what the bill is that the Senator from California wants to take up; but I venture to suggest that if it be a bill in which he feels some personal interest, he might be allowed by consent on both sides to take it up, and as the Senator from Rhode Island says, subject all the time to a call for the regular order. If he is to be driven to his motion to postpone the present and all prior orders, that brings up a collision between these bills. Here is the Holladay bill pending as the unfinished business. I think it ought to be disposed of as against anything but an appropriation bill. I cannot for one consent that it be displaced by a motion.

Mr. FARLEY. This is a bill in which I have no special interest, but it is one the Committee on Naval Affairs has passed upon. It has passed this body at one time, been reconsidered, referred, and reported

Mr. CONKLING. And the Senator wants it taken up now?
Mr. FARLEY. We are anxious to have it taken up. I made the effort to get it up yesterday morning. It will not take five minutes to pass it, in my opinion.
Mr. CONKLING. Let me ask the Senator from Virginia, who is very properly diligent about his appropriation bill, is there any objection to letting it lie aside informally for a few minutes? Let the Senator from California try his bill, and if it turns out that it shall take time, at any moment the Senator from Virginia may demand the regular order.

regular order.

Mr. WITHERS. No one knows better than the Senator from New York that there are probably one hundred bills on the Calendar in regard to which the same request could be made, and if I yield to this I cannot conscientiously refuse to yield to others.

Mr. CONKLING. I agree with the Senator in that respect. I have a bill myself which I want exceedingly to find a time to take up, a short time, although I have no interest in it except a wish that the people concerned may get a hearing; but this motion is now made. That makes it an exceptional case, and the Senator may say he will allow the regular order to lie aside temporarily for this one bill and no other, and then there is no danger of my teasing him or another Senator teasing him with a like request.

Mr. WITHERS. I decline to yield. The Senate will take such order as it deems proper.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I hope that the Senator from California will not press his motion now, which will lead to a jangle, a call of will not press his motion how, which will lead to a jangle, a call of the yeas and nays, and a frittering of more time than it will take to pass the appropriation bill.

Mr. FARLEY. As a matter of course I had no desire to retard legislation in reference to the appropriation bills, and I withdraw my motion.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6719) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. ALLISON, to strike out, in lines 200 and 201, the words "what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them," and insert "the amount audited and approved by the Quartermaster-General," so as to make the clause read: clause read amount shall be accepted as in full of all demands for said services.

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of the amount audited and approved by the Quartermaster-General for transportation, $125,000: Provided, That such amount shall be accepted as in full of all demands for said services.

Mr. WITHERS. I have diligently labored to secure such phraseology of the paragraph which was so much debated yesterday, with such outside assistance as I could receive from the Departments and lawyers and judges, that at last, on the part of the committee, I am authorized to offer the following substitute for the paragraph:

To pay land-grant railroads on which the United States is entitled to transportation of troops and supplies free of charge, for transportation for the Quartermaster's Department, $125,000: Provided, That such railroads be paid only 50 per cent.
of their schedule rates, and that said 50 per cent. if accepted by any railroad shall be in full of all its demands for said services. And the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized to settle with said railroads in accordance with the provisions of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia in behalf of the Committee on Appropriations offers a substitute for that portion of the bill between line 200 and line 204, inclusive.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, unless he withdraws it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is true, but the Senator from Virginia offers this, and it will be read to the Senate for informa-

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, yes, it may be read for information.
The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. WITHERS.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Now let the amendment of the Senator from Iowa that we are to vote upon be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the text, and it will be first

Mr. WITHERS. I suppose the Senator from Iowa will withdraw his amendment in view of this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, and he cannot withdraw except by unanimous consent. That amendment will

The Secretary. In lines 200 and 201 it is proposed to strike out "what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them" and insert "the amount audited and approved by the Quartermaster-General."

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Iowa with respect to the full intent of his amendment. Does it not empower the Quartermaster-General to fix the sum without any restriction? Does it not leave it entirely with the Quartermaster-General to fix the amount due, without any limit whatever except the 50 per cent.?

Mr. ALLISON. The Quartermaster-General audits the accounts of Mr. ALLISON. The Quartermaster-General audits the accounts of these railways for transportation, whether that transportation be at the regular schedule rates or whether it be under a special contract made in advance by the Quartermaster-General either privately or upon public letting. He audits that sum, and when so audited 50 per cent. is to be paid. The Court of Claims have decided that these land-grant railroads are only entitled to 50 per cent. on the amount of service rendered by them, on account of the provisions in the statutes which said they should transport free of toll or other charge.

Mr. McPHERSON. I still am in doubt as to the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. I find that the complaint is made by the honorable Senator from New York that the Supreme Court has not decided what is claimed by the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

the honorable Senator from New York that the Supreme Court has not decided what is claimed by the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. He says he understands they have decided "as far as they have said anything" that "one-half the current rate" is the proper allowance. That Senator knows very well that "the current rate" is the public rate of a railway company, and it is charged that there is a great deal of difference between that and the actual rate charged in many deal of difference between that and the actual rate charged in many cases. The advertised current rate of a railway for transportation is one thing; the rate charged to the public by reason of special agreements is another. I think I speak truthfully when I say that mine-tenths of the freight transported over railways is carried under special contracts for special rates. So under that rule of proceeding the Government would be required to pay certainly almost the full rate (without deducting the 50 per cent.) that is now charged to the public. Is not that true? If this allowance is to be made upon the basis of the current price supposed to be charged by railway companies, the companies will practically make no reduction whatever by the 50 per cent. deduction.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from New Jersey I think misapprehends what is the rule of the Quartermaster-General's Department. The rule of the Quartermaster-General accepted by the railways is that when troops are moved by rail they are moved at the rate of two cents per mile, and that is considered a fair and equitable rate for the movement of troops. When supplies are to be transported by railway, the transportation is let at public lettings in most cases, and different railways bid for the service, land-grant railways and other railway, the transportation is let at public lettings in most cases, and different railways bid for the service, land-grant railways and other railways, and the Quartermaster-General is in the habit of settling with these contractors for the whole service. When their accounts come here they are audited. If they are land-grant railways they get 50 per cent. of the sum charged, if they are willing to take that. It is a regular proceeding which has been going on for years, and about which there is no difficulty whatever.

Mr. McPHERSON. The difficulty with me arises from the fact that I cannot understand that the courts have decided anything except that the charge shall be made upon the basis of the railways' current rates. It is so stated by the Senator from New York. The current rate on many railroads in the western country is four cents a mile per passenger; they have the right in their charter to charge four cents passenger; they have the right in their charter to charge four cents per mile for passenger fare. The honorable Senator from Iowa says that the Department have decided that two cents a mile is a fair and equitable charge. Under the amendment proposed by the honorable Senator from lowa, I take it, if I understand the purport, the Quartermaster-General is to base his estimate upon the current rate, which may be four cents per mile, and upon that basis he is to make a deduction of 50 per cent.

It is impossible, I suppose, to arrive at a fair and correct estimate in the Quartermaster's Department of the amount which should be allowed to railway companies by reason of the transportation of passengers and freight. The compensation for passenger travel is largely controlled by competition; but there are occasionally roads upon which there is not competition and they are permitted to charge any price that their charter gives the right to charge. Now, suppose they charge four cents a mile, which would ordinarily be considered exorbitant. If I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, they would get from the Government 50 per cent. on their schedule rate, which would be four cents a mile, whereas as I understand the amendment reported by the Senator from Virginia that gives the Government the right of demanding what would be an equitable rate and from that to deduct 50 per cent. because of the contract between the Government and the railway companies when they received land grants.

Mr. CARPENTER.
Mr. McPHERSON. received land grants.

Mr. CARPENTER. What is the meaning of "current rate?"

Mr. McPHERSON. The advertised rate. The honorable Senator knows very well, or, if he does not, I can inform him by reason of a somewhat large experience in the matter, that the "current rate" is the advertised rate for freight transportation.

Mr. CARPENTER. This does not say "current advertised rate."
I suppose "current rate" is the rate commonly charged, not that it is the advertised rate or the rate that the company is authorized to charge.

Mr. McPHERSON. The "current rate," in railroad parlance, is always understood to be the advertised rate. They advertise that they will receive and transport freight over a certain line of railroad between given points at so much for a certain distance. A current rate and an advertised rate, as I understand it, are one and the same thing; but if the honorable Senator had a large amount of freight to transport between given points and if he would make it appear to the railroad company that he wished to transport an amount far in excess of what was generally transported, no doubt they would give him a rate far less than their current advertised rate, and still it might be a very fair remuperative rate to the railroad company. If it is the a very fair remunerative rate to the railroad company. If it is the intention of the amendment to give the railway companies a full right to charge a sum equivalent to their schedule rates, it would make a vast difference to the Government in the amount paid for this trans-

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I noticed this debate yesterday while it was going on. If I understand this matter, the point is this: each of the railroads in question was constructed partly by aid furnished by the Government of the United States, and the Government provided that the company should transport its freights over the railroad free of charge on account of the aid it gave to the road in its construction. The question then went to the Supreme Court as to what was the meaning of the right to transport supplies and troops without toll or charge, and the court held, as I understand, that that only authorized the Government of the United States to transport its freight over the road-bed, furnishing its own labor and the material of transportation, and that 50 per cent. would be about the fair allowance for the United States to pay to the company for furnishing the means of transportation.

Now, if I understand the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, Now, if I inderstand the amendment of the Senator from lows, it is that this 50 per cent. is to be paid upon the account as audited in the Quartermaster-General's Department. My friend from New Jersey says that the rate there fixed is the current rate. Having had some experience in railroading, I understand something about that question, and it seems to me that there is no difficulty in the way of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa upon that point. The published rate, the current rate, is that charged to everybody. Frequently lower rates are allowed for particular transportation; sometimes lower rates are allowed for particular transportation; sometimes the rate is reduced for the purpose of attracting particular traffic. All that is wrong as a general rule unless there is a general reduction. If there was no agreement for a reduction, the current rate would be charged and the Government would settle by paying 50 per cent. on that current rate. It is common where large quantities of Government supplies are transported between competitive points to let out the service to bidders, or for the Quartermaster to call on the different companies competing to say at what rates they will carry these freights. The different companies bid. Now, suppose the current rate to be two cents per ton per mile for freight and four cents per head per mile for passengers. The Quartermaster examines the bids, and if he gets the service for less the Government has certainly lost nothing. It only pays 50 per cent. on the reduced rate it gets by reason of the competition of the roads. If the Quartermaster makes no special contract he would pay 50 per cent. of the current rate. reason of the competition of the roads. If the Quartermaster makes no special contract he would pay 50 per cent. of the current rate. The Quartermaster is not bound, I suppose, to call for bids in such cases, but he usually does for the benefit of the Government where there are competing roads between different points, and he gets the benefit of reduced rates by calling for this competition, and then under this provision the Government pays but one-half of that.

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia a question that the contraction of the current pays and the contraction of the contraction of the current pays and the contraction of the current pays and the contraction of the current pays and the current pays and the current pays and the current pays are contracted to the current pays and the current pays and the current pays are contracted to the current pays and the current pays are current pays are current pays are current pays are current pays and the current pays are cu

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia a question, or rather to make a suggestion. Suppose there are no competing roads, and the road over which it is necessary to transport both the troops and freight of the Government is a land-grant road without any competition whatever, in that case, as I understand his argument, that railroad is permitted to plunder the Government to any extent that they might advertise their schedule rates.

Mr. BROWN. No. There are very few routes in the United States where there are not competing railroads. There is no competitive road from the Missouri River to the Pacific, but there is scarcely any other route you can mention where there are not two routes or competing lines; but suppose you take the case of a company that has no competitor, then if it does not charge above its chartered rates it has the power and right to charge those rates allowed by its charter, and then it is no plundering of the Government to say it shall get 50 per cent.

of those rates. In this case the Government is bound to pay but half rates. The Government pays only 50 per cent. of what the citizen pays. Of course where there is no competing line the Government pays. Of course where there is no competing line the Government will not get much rebate from the regular charges; the company will likely charge as much as it finds it can charge under its charter. It is only required that the Government should have the same benefit of reduction in that case. I do not see the injustice the Senator from New Jersey thinks exists. I favor the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, and think no difficulty will grow out of it.

Mr. McPHERSON. As I read the bill reported from the committee it is:

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them for transportation, $125,000.

For what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them. Provided, That such payment shall be accepted as in full of all demands for said

The amendment of the honorable Senator from Iowa authorizes and directs the Quartermaster-General to estimate upon the schedule rates adopted by the railway companies.

Mr. ALLISON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I do not so understand the amendment

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to have the amendment reported. really have not read it carefully.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is not a word about schedule rates in the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Not a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa will be read for information.

The Secretary. After the word "of," in line 200, it is proposed to strike out the words "what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them" and to insert "the amount audited and approved by the Quartermaster-General;" so that the clause will read:

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of the amount audited and approved by the Quartermaster-General for transportation, $125,000.

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of the amount audited and approved by the Quartermaster-General for transportation, $125,000.

Mr. McPHERSON. That certainly is not the amendment which was shown me when I stepped to the Secretary's desk.

Mr. WITHERS. It is the substitute offered by the committee that contains the provision in regard to schedule rates.

Mr. McPHERSON. I was misled. Still at the same time I wish to go on and make another statement in connection with this matter, and that is with respect to the schedule rates. The honorable Senator from Georgia, who has had a good deal of experience in railroad matters, speaks of the schedule or advertised rates of the railroads. I think I can say without successful contradiction that where one ton of freight is conveyed over almost any line of railroad in this country at the rate advertised and known as the schedule rate there are one hundred tons of freight conveyed over the road at rates far less than the advertised schedule rates. Ninety-nine per cent. of the freight transported over the majority of railroads in this country is carried not at the schedule or advertised rate but at a less rate.

Mr. BROWN. I must be permitted here to state that that is not our practice in railroading in the South. As to the Western Atlantic Railroad (I know the management of that, having been president of it for ten years) I can say to the Senator that of all the freight that passes over it there is not one ton in a thousand which is carried below the schedule rate or at anything else but the schedule rate. I desire to state to the Senator that we have but one rate for the publication.

low the schedule rate or at anything else but the schedule rate. I desire to state to the Senator that we have but one rate for the public and but one rate for everybody. Many of our roads in the South do not adhere to it probably, but the great mass of them have but one rate. The road I mentioned does not allow freight to be carried at a lower rate at all unless it is a case where it is very necessary that an exception should be made. We charge everybody alike one rate.

Mr. INGALLS. One of these land-grant railroads, the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé, has brought suit in the Court of Claims for the recovery of what it claims to be due for transportation of troops the recovery of what it claims to be due for transportation of troops and munitions of war under contract with the Quartermaster-General. A decision has been rendered by the Court of Claims, as I understand, holding that the act of March 3, 1879, is a legislative construction and determination of the amount that is to be paid them under those contracts, to wit, 50 per cent. The railroad company have appealed to the Supreme Court, and the United States have taken a cross-appeal, so that the case is pending upon an appeal of both parties as to the fact whether or not the law of 1879 was a legislative construction of the contract made between the Government and these construction of the contract made between the Government and these parties

I mention that as an illustration for the purpose of showing the necessity of special scrutiny of the language of the act we propose to pass to-day, because if in the language of the bill as reported from the Committee on Appropriations we say that there shall be paid to these railroad companies 50 per cent. of the amount allowed by the Quartermaster-General, and that this shall be accepted as in full payment of the entire claim they have on the Government, we are applying a rule that would not be applied in any case of contract or of litigation between two private parties.

I suppose that what the Senate desires to do is to pay these railroad corporations the amount that is justly due them, not 50 per cent. of it. If they are entitled to 50 per cent. of their schedule rates or of their regular charges, that is the amount justly due them, and there is no reason for dividing that into pieces and giving them half of that. Therefore, there can be no question that the language of I mention that as an illustration for the purpose of showing the the bill as reported by the committee is essentially defective and faulty. I suppose we have all agreed upon that. The question is which of the various amendments submitted is the better one to express the true intention of the Senate. It appears to me that the language of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa is betlanguage of the amendment offered by the Senator from lowa is better, always provided that the amendment reported by the committee can be rejected, which declares in terms that the amount received by the companies shall be in full of any amount they may be entitled to receive, debarring them from the right which they had under the law of 1879 of going to the Court of Claims. I should be in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa if that objection could be received. could be removed.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia is defective The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia is detective in two particulars. In the first place it proposes to pay 50 per cent. of the amount earned under the schedule rates of the corporation. That is unjust to the Government, because in the West, where these land-grant railroads are operated, we all know very well what "schedule rates" means. It is a very elastic term; it is an adjustable term. It is intended to cover the whole system of rebates and drawbacks in favor of individuals for the warese of enforcing a larger rate against the intended to cover the whole system of rebates and drawbacks in favor of individuals for the purpose of enforcing a larger rate against the Government. Therefore I should be opposed to the insertion of the term "schedule rate;" and I should be opposed still further, as an act of injustice to the corporations, to the language of the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia to the effect that this amount shall be accepted in full of the claim of the railroad corporations against the Government. They have a right to receive whatever the Government sees fit to pay, but because they do receive that they ought not to be precluded from a right to go into court and ascertain whether that was in full or not.

Until there can be some further amendment suggested, that I frankly confess I am unable to frame myself, I should be disposed to think that the language employed by the Senator from Iowa is better calculated to save the rights both of the Government and of the corporations than any other that has been suggested.

Mr. DAWES. I have understood in this discussion all through that it was not designed at all to interfere with the claim of any railroad it was not designed at all to interfere with the claim of any railroad company that was not willing, voluntarily, to accept the 50 per cent. in full. If it is liable to the construction suggested by the Senator from Kansas, I should be opposed to forcing any railroad company now in court in pursuance of law to take 50 per cent. or nothing.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator will allow me one moment right there. Where is the justice, when the courts have said that they are entitled to the 50 per cent., of withholding that? There is no question that they are entitled to the 50 per cent. Why should we withhold

Mr. DAWES. I am ascertaining what is the full scope and meaning of this clause. I agree with the Senator from Kansas in this matter; but up to this moment the discussion has proceeded upon the ground that this was an appropriation to meet such as voluntarily, without compromising the rights of others, preferred to accept the 50 per cent. in full. I should like to have it made clear on that point. Mr. INGALLS. As a further contribution to the literature of this subject, I have before me the Book of Estimates sent down from the Secretary of the Tressury for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, in which I find the following:

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them for transportation, and for which $300,000, for previous services, was appropriated by act of March 3, 1879, $125,000.

That is accompanied by a foot-note (this is a polyglot edition) which reads as follows:

NOTE.—This estimate is submitted for the reason that the Government is now running into debt to these railroads, which, in the mean time, have been and are faithfully performing important service for the War Department in the transportation of troops and supplies.

The committee adopted the language of the Book of Estimates; and the note that is furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury shows that it is unjust in its terms and that there is no reason for the limand the note that is furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury shows that it is unjust in its terms and that there is no reason for the limitation that is proposed to be put by the Government upon the right of these parties to sue if they do not see fit to accept the 50 per cent.

Mr. PLUMB. In 1874 in an appropriation bill it was provided that these land-grant railroads should have no pay until further action by Congress, but that they might bring suit in the Court of Claims to determine as to whether they had a right to receive anything at all for transporting Government supplies. The company named by my colleague and one other company did bring suit, and the Court of Claims, and subsequently the Supreme Court also, decided that the railroad company was entitled to payment, substantially as stated by the Senator from Georgia, for all except for the use of the track, which was laid upon the land grant made by Congress. The question as to what amount the railroad company should be entitled to receive for the use of its cars, its employés, and the oil, coal, and other necessaries for the operation of its locomotives and trains, was a matter that was not decided then; but the court did decide that an adjustment which had been made by the Quartermaster-General, in which he had allowed to the railroad companies 66% per cent., (not necessarily the amount they charged, but the amount which he had determined to be the proper amount in gross to be received by the railroad companies,) was proper to be allowed in that case, because the contract had substantially been entered into before that time by the Quartermaster-General. An appropriation was subsequently made to pay the judgment that was rendered in that case. After that time the Government went on getting in debt to these railroad companies and making no appropriation whatever for payment to them until this indebtedness amounted to about a million dollars.

this indebtedness amounted to about a million dollars.

Last year, I think on my motion, a paragraph was inserted in the Army appropriation bill which provided for paying the railroad companies 50 per cent. of the amount that had been adjusted by the Quartermaster-General as due them in gross. That payment was not intended to be in full of any service rendered by them, but was to be a payment on account, other payments, if any, to be made whenever a payment on account, other payments, if any, to be made whenever the question as to what they were entitled to receive should have been decided by the courts, proceedings then as now being pending the question as to what they were entitled to receive should have been decided by the courts, proceedings then as now being pending for that purpose.

After the passage of the Army bill last year, attention having been called to the fact that no provision was made for the payment of current transportation, the Secretary of War decided that it was proper that he should recommend to the Secretary of the Treasury to submit an estimate for this transportation, and in order that it might avoid legislation previously had and might be entirely safe so far as the Government was concerned, he decided to recommend substantially what appears in this bill, to wit, the appropriation of $125,000 to be paid to the railroad companies in the proportion of 50 per cent. of the amount which had been determined to be due them in gross. As my colleague has said, the question as to what they are ultimately entitled to receive is still pending; but I submit that the entire question is not pending. What might be proper for one railroad company might be entirely improper for another. The proper proportion between the use of the track and the use of the rolling-stock, employés, &c., of a railroad to a company doing a very large business might be one sum, and to a company doing a very small business it might be another sum. It is not at all, as I conceive, a legislative question, nor can it be made one, because we cannot establish a rule here which will be applicable to all these companies, unless it is upon some sliding scale, to do justice to all equally.

Another thing which it might be proper for Congress to take into consideration in the settlement of this question is the amount of land which has been received by the companies. For instance, some companies received their full grant, while other companies received only which has been received by the companies. For instance, some companies received their full grant, while other companies received only a small percentage of their grant. That is one of those things which might well be taken into consideration by Congress in determining the amount which any company may be entitled to receive, or which it ought in equity to receive.

The purpose of the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, as I understand it, is simply that such adjustment as the Quartermaster-General has heretofore made of the amount due these railroad companies may be the adjustment upon which this payment is to be made. The Quartermaster-General does not necessarily take schedule rates. He deals with these, no doubt, (in fact I have it from him that he does,) the same as he deals with other railroad companies. If a certain amount the same as he deals with other railroad companies. If a certain amount of goods has to be transported the question is where does the interest of the Government require it to be transported and at what price. The railroad company which he selects to do that business transports the goods, and he adjusts the account according to a scale which he believes to be fair to the Government and the railroad company. He issues to them certificates showing that he has made such adjustment, and, according to that transaction, there is so much due to the railroad company. When it comes to issuing certificates to land-grant companies, of course he is forbidden to pay them; and the question now is whether, when an adjustment of that kind shall have been made, Congress will make payment, or whether it intends by the phraseology in the original bill to require some new adjustment.

I understand that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is

I understand that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is intended to take the adjustment which the Quartermaster-General has heretofore made as the basis for the payment of 50 per cent. There is no reason why the Quartermaster-General should not as well There is no reason why the Quartermaster-General should not as well adjust the payments to land-grant companies as to any other railway companies. We appropriate here a million or more every year for the transportation of the Army, its baggage, supplies, &c. We leave to the Quartermaster-General the entire question as to the line of route to be used in the transportation, as to the prices to be paid, and it is only when we come to deal with these land-grant railroad companies that it seems that we seek to have a different rule applied from what is applied generally as to all the railroads of the country having occasion to do Government business. I therefore think the amendment of the Senator from Iowa should be adopted.

But this paragraph in the bill ought to be rid of its ambiguity in amendment of the Senator from Iowa should be adopted.

But this paragraph in the bill ought to be rid of its ambiguity in another respect. The appropriation is intended, as I understand it, to pay for current transportation—that is, transportation for the fiscal year commencing the 1st day of July next. The Government owes to these railway companies at least a million dollars. Supposing the proper adjustment of that to be the payment of 50 per cent., it would leave a half million dollars' balance due them. This clause would seem to imply that the $125,000 appropriated is to be in satisfaction of all sums due them, and that when they take this 50 per cent. they are required to receipt for everything that the Government owes them. The companies ought to be relieved from that exaction.

Mr. CARPENTER. The proviso says it shall be "accepted as in full of all demands for said services."

Mr. PLUMB. It is true, as the Senator from Wisconsin calls my

Mr. PLUMB. It is true, as the Senator from Wisconsin calls my attention to the phraseology, it requires them to receipt "in full of all demands for said services." Two years ago, when the appropriation of $300,000 was made to pay them, I thought the intention was amply manifest; but it seems the court has decided that that was a legislative declaration that 50 per cent. ought to be the proportion of what they were entitled to receive. I want to avoid anything of that kind in future, and I think, therefore, that at the proper time the question ought to be made perfectly plain.

Mr. CARPENTER. I understand that the proviso in lines 203 and 204 is one of the amendments reported by the Appropriation Committee of the Senate. Is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa is the pending amendment.

Mr. CARPENTER. But I inquire about the text of the bill on page 9. As I understand from the print, lines 203 and 204 form an amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is an amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, and not yet acted upon.

Mr. CARPENTER. That is what I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa is to the text in lines 200 and 201.

Mr. CARPENTER. I ask the Secretary to read from line 200 to line 204, inclusive, the language of the original text as the Committee on Appropriations propose to amend it. on Appropriations propose to amend it.

The Secretary read as follows:

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them for transportation, $125,000: Provided, That such payment shall be accepted as in full of all demands for said services.

Mr. CARPENTER. I take it that no Senator stopping to reflect a coment on the effect of this provision will vote for it. Not merely moment on the effect of this provision will vote for it. Not merely leaving ourselves open to criticism and historical review and all that, but putting ourselves in the statutes of the land as providing for paying half of what is justly due, is a thing I take it that no Senator will do.

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them for transportation, $125,000: Provided, That such payment shall be accepted as in full of all demands for said services.

shall be accepted as in full of all demands for said services.

That is to say, what is ascertained by the Quartermaster's Department to be justly due shall not be paid; only one-half of it shall be paid; and then parties receiving that shall receipt for that half as in full for the entire services. Of course nobody will vote for that. I do not believe any Senator, if he comes to see the exact bearing of the language, which is that the amount justly due is to be ascertained and then one-half of that is to be paid, and the company is compelled, in order to get one-half of what is justly due, to discharge the whole—

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he has read the RECORD published this morning?

Mr. CARPENTER. I have not.

Mr. HOAR. I will take the liberty of informing the Senator that the Senate debated that matter three hours yesterday. The committee who reported that provision agreed that the language did not mean what it ought and abandoned it. Not one of about thirty Senators who spoke on the subject favored the language as it stands.

Mr. CARPENTER. I was confined to my room yesterday by sickness, and not being in the Senate at all was not aware of what debate had taken place.

had taken place.

Mr. HOAR. I thought that the honorable Senator, whose words never fall to the ground, and who never discusses anything that the Senate is not glad to hear discussed, might like to be informed that the committee kave abandoned it and substituted a new phrase.

Mr. CARPENTER. I am very much obliged to the Senator, for I certainly should not have made such a remark had I been aware of what took place; but I was confined to my room yesterday by sick-what the Senator is criticising.

Mr. CARPENTER. Thereupon I apologized to the Senate.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to say this much, as the committee of which I have the honor to be a member reported the bill—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. CARPENTER. Certainly.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to say that upon a division nineteen Senators voted against the substitution of the language offered by the Senator from Iowa and fifteen for it, when a call was made for the Senator from Iowa and fifteen for it, when a call was made for the yeas and nays, pending which call the Senate adjourned. I hope the Senator will bear with me one moment while I state that in the opinion of the members of the Appropriations Committee (some of them at least, certainly of myself) the language is not fairly susceptible to the criticism which the Senator himself makes, or which was made against it yesterday, because we conceive that the phrase "justly due" is designed to refer to the earnings of the railroad companies. They are entitled to certain amounts for the transportation of tonnage over are entitled to certain amounts for the transportation of tonnage over their roads, but owing to the peculiar relations existing between certain companies and the Government in consequence of the aid furnished in the construction of their roads, we provide that 50 per cent. only of what they have justly earned and which is justly due them under their regular rates shall be paid them, because of the peculiar relations in which they stand to the Government.

Mr. CARPENTER. Now the Senator changes the phraseology of the bill in his statement, and that change is a very material one.

Mr. WITHERS. I endeavored to quote the language of the bill, which provides for the payment of what is justly due, and I mentioned the other phrase in explanation of what might be considered justly due.

justly due.

justly due.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator used both phrases, what they have justly earned and what is justly due them. Those are very different things. What is justly earned may be one sum; half of it may have been paid and therefore only half of it is justly due; but the bill provides for ascertaining what is justly due, which of course brings into consideration all previous transactions between the companies and the Government. The granting of lands upon conditions, their contract not to charge for the transportation and all that are proper elements entering into an ascertainment of what is justly due. After all those things have been done, and it is ascertained that they are all those things have been done, and it is ascertained that they are entitled to only 50 per cent. of what they would be entitled to receive if they had done the same service for an individual, in consequence of the provisions of the land grant or any other transactions between them and the Government that ascertains the amount justly due, then the bill takes it up and says that of that amount justly due 50 per cent. only shall be paid, but that they shall receipt and discharge for the whole amount.

There can be, it seems to me, no doubt whatever that that is the provision of the bill as it stands. If the language had been as the Senator quoted it once, the sum they had justly earned, it would make all the difference in the world, because it is claimed here that by virtue of the transactions between the companies and the Government, the granting of lands, &c., they had stipulated to receive only 50 per cent. of what they justly earned for that purpose. You ascertain what they have justly earned first, then you take up their contract and deduct half of it; and then you provide that one-half of that sum which is justly due, after making the proper deduction for the land-grant provisions and all that, shall be paid, but they shall be required to discharge from the whole.

Mr. McPHERSON. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question?

tion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. CARPENTER. Certainly; I yield to everbody, Mr. President. Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to inquire whether if a railway company should charge A seventy cents a hundred for delivering freight between two given points, say for the delivery of one ton of freight, seventy cents being the advertised schedule rate of the road which it charges to individuals, and if it should contract with B to deliver one hundred tons of freight between the same given points at thirty cents per hundred, how much, in the Senator's estimation, would be justly due the railway company as the sum upon which the would be justly due the railway company as the sum upon which the Quartermaster General could base his estimate?

Mr. CARPENTER. That is putting to me a conundrum that I do not want to decide in advance for the benefit of the the Quartermaster-General. The Quartermaster-General is supposed to be able to decide the questions that the law sends to him for decision. It is a complicated question of railroad management that I do not quite see complicated question of railroad management that I do not quite see through from merely listening to the debate here in the confusion of the Chamber. But I do know this, I think, if I know anything, and I think I do know a few things, that taking into account the land grant and the provisions of the act, and all the transactions between the Government and the company prior to doing the service, after thus ascertaining the amount justly due to that company, it is repudiation for this Government to say "we will pay you half of it, but you shall discharge the whole."

Mr. McPHERSON. Again, if you please, as I understand the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, it proposes to leave with the Quartermaster-General the decision of the question as to how much is justly due. That is the whole point of the controversy so far as I am concerned.

justly due. That is the whole point of the controversy so far as I am concerned.

Mr. CARPENTER. That, it seems to me, leaves the difficulty exactly where it is. I suppose the text leaves it to the Quartermaster-General. It says, "to pay to land-grant railroads, 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them." The text leaves it there. The amendment does not change the bill in that respect at all, and still leaves it to be ascertained, as I understand the amendment, by the Quartermaster's Department what is justly due. I conceive, and it must be conceded by everybody, that in ascertaining that sum all these other questions are to be taken into account.

Mr. EATON. If my friend will permit me, I think perhaps the words "justly due" are unfortunate words to be used in this connection, but I will state what has been the custom of the Department. There is a railroad, we will suppose, of which my friend from Wisconsin is president. The company have become entitled justly according to their ordinary charges for freight to $100,000. Under the arrangement made between Congress and these roads, the Department say, that having ascertained that to be a fair rate of charge for A, B, C, or D, they will allow 50 per cent. as a fair and just amount to be paid to this road, 66 per cent. to another road, 40 per cent. to another road, so that really the Department in finding what they call "justly due" do not mean the full force of the language. They mean what the just amount would be for hauling so many car-loads of freight for A, B, and C, and then pay 50 per cent. of that. The Court of Claims has said again and again in adjudicating the matter that it should be in one instance 50 per cent. and in another 66 per cent., not 66 per cent. of what they have justly earned, but 66 per cent. of what would be a just claim against other parties than the Government; and that in consideration of the grants of the Government to these roads the amount should be reduced to 50 per cent., or 40 per cent., or 66 per cent. That is the meaning of the term "justly due," as I understand.

Mr. CARPENTER. That may be all very well, but there is one rule that ought always to be adhered to, which is, that in making laws you ought to say what you mean. No uninstructed man like myself would ever have spelled any such thing out of this language.

Mr. EATON. I should not, only I heard it explained by the Quarters Caracal.

termaster-General.

Mr. CARPENTER. A construction which confuses the Senator from Connecticut as badly as it does me, and which can only be clarified by the Quartermaster-General, is not a provision of law that I will vote for. I shall not vote for any bill that I cannot understand myself or that the Senator from Connecticut cannot understand. If neither of us can understand it, we are as bad off as they were said to be in the State of Iowa when they passed a measure for codifying the law and bringing it down to the understanding of common men. the law and bringing it down to the understanding of common men. The governor appointed a lawyer and a layman, and when called upon to explain why he did it he said the law required that the code should bring the matter down to the comprehension of common men; that he expected the lawyer to do the work, and if the other fellow could comprehend it the statute was satisfied. Now, I shall never vote for a law unless I think, when expounded by the Senator from Connecticut as a lawyer, I can understand it as a layman. From this language in the bill I never should spell out any such thing. It is perfectly evident that that provision has got to be substantially remodeled. I am not proposing to remodel it myself, so that I shall not criticise it any further until I find out how it is to be done.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator from Wisconsin will pardon me, does the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa contain the word "justly?" I thought it avoided the words "justly due."

Mr. CARPENTER. I have not that amendment before me. What is the precise language?

is the precise language?

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to make the clause read:

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of the amount audited and approved by the Quartermaster-General, $125,000.

Mr. CARPENTER. To answer the Senator, I think that leaves the difficulty precisely where it was. We are not going to charge the Quartermaster-General with ascertaining the amount upon anything except the basis of justice. The amount ascertained and approved by him is of course to be the amount they are justly entitled to receive, and then we are to pay half of it; so that although the phraseology is changed in the amendment of the Senator from Iowa I do not see that the principle is changed at all. Under the text here he is to ascertain what is justly due and then pay of what is due half of it; and to ascertain what is justly due you have got to go through the previous history of land-grant legislation; but when you have ascertained what is justly due, taking those things into account, we are to pay half of it. Under the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, when the Quartermaster-General has done his full duty in the matter, which requires him of course to go into the contracts between the Government and the companies to ascertain what he does approve of, then we are to pay half of that.

then we are to pay half of that.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator omits the fact that there has been judicial interpretation of the rights of the companies under the land-

Mr. CARPENTER. That I understand not to be true except in the case of one or two roads.

Mr. INGALLS. At least it is the judicial interpretation which has been given and which the Quartermaster-General takes as the basis of his decision.

of his decision.

Mr. CARPENTER. Of course in either instance, whether the Quartermaster-General proceeds under the text of the bill or under the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, if anything has been settled by decisions that are conclusive upon him he takes it into account just as much in auditing and approving what there is due as in ascertaining the amount that they are justly entitled to receive. Except in phraseology, what is the difference in the meaning?

Mr. INGALLS. The difference, as I understand, is that the court has already decided, in a case brought by one of the companies against the Government, that the measure of compensation is 50 per cent. of the amount that would be charged to other consignees than the Government.

Mr. CARPENTER. Then will not the Quartermaster-General audit under that rule !

Mr. INGALLS. I suppose he will.
Mr. CARPENTER. Whether he audits under the amendment of the Senator from Iowa or the text of the bill, equally in one case as in the other, what is the substantial difference between the amendment and the text?

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator will allow me, I will point out what I understand to be the difference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Wisconsin

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. CARPENTER. I am through.

Mr. BROWN. The language as reported by the committee, as I understand it, is that the Quartermaster-General shall ascertain what is justly due, and pay the company 50 per cent. upon it. It does not seem to be a fair way of meeting a payment to say that we will audit the account and see what is justly due, and then pay half of that sum; nor is there under the decision of the Supreme Court due the company more than 50 per cent. The whole amount of the transportation is not justly due. The railroad company charges either its usual schedule price or it charges a contract price for carrying freights. If it be the schedule price, then, as I understand it, the court has decided in such a case that there is justly due the company 50 per cent. upon the schedule price; if there be a contract price, then 50 per cent. of that contract price is due.

Where are these accounts to be audited? In the Quartermaster's Department. The report as made by the committee is that the accounts are to be audited and the companies paid 50 per per cent. upon what is justly due them. That is not proper language, I think, in this case. My friend from Iowa then proposes to amend it and say that they shall be paid 50 per cent. upon what is audited and approved by the Quartermaster-General. That is correct. An account comes up from the railroad company to the Quartermaster's Department to be audited. The Quartermaster-General takes it up and audits the account for the whole amount. If it be under the schedule rates, he then audits the whole amount under the schedule as published; if it be under a special contract, the whole amount as per contract. Then he takes 50 per cent. upon that and audits and allows rates, he then audits the whole amount under the schedule as published; if it be under a special contract, the whole amount as per contract. Then he takes 50 per cent. upon that and audits and allows it, and that pays what is justly due. In this case the Government having aided in the building of the roads, and it having been held by the court that when one of these companies transports freight for the Government the company is entitled to 50 per cent. for the cost of transportation, it comes back to the point that 50 per cent. is what is legally and justly due the railway company. Then the way to get it is for the Quartermaster-General to audit it and report upon it, and when he reports and allows that amount as a whole then to pay and when he reports and allows that amount as a whole then to pay 50 per cent. of that. In that case the railroad company is settled with upon just principles.

Mr. CARPENTER. That would be so, provided the bill read in

To pay the land-grant railroad companies 50 per cent. of what the Quartermas-ter-General finds would have been a just charge against any private individual.

Amending the clause in that way would do what the Senator wants to have done

Mr. BROWN. No, if the Senator will allow me, that would not be

Mr. BROWN. No, if the Senator will allow me, that would not be right.

Mr. CARPENTER. It would be right.

Mr. BROWN. It would not, because frequently railroad companies make contracts for the transportation of large numbers of troops at lower rates than they would make to an individual, and there the question is, "at what rate did you agree to carry?" The company agreed to carry at a cent a ton per mile, say, for freight, and three cents a mile for passengers. Whatever they agreed thon is the price, and then 50 per cent, upon that is the amount to be paid.

Mr. CARPENTER. That is only using other language for this idea: the Quartermaster-General would have to ascertain, in the first place, what would be a proper charge against an individual. That would take into account all the contracts between individuals and the company and all provisions of law applicable to the subject.

Mr. BROWN. The Quartermaster-General, I respectfully submit, would have only to take into account and audit what would have been the amount to be paid under its bid, if the road got full price. If it bid so much per mile per head for troops, and the road takes them at that rate, then 50 per cent. of the amount justly due paid to the company.

Mr. CARPENTER. It is not 50 per cent. of the amount justly due them at that rate, then 50 per cent. of that sum is the amount to be paid to the company.

Mr. CARPENTER. It is not 50 per cent. of the amount justly due them; it is the whole amount justly due them.

Mr. BROWN. Fifty per cent. on the cost of carriage, or the amount the railroad company charges for carriage, is all that is justly due under the contract, according to the decision of the court.

Mr. CARPENTER. Therefore 50 per cent. of what would be justly due to the other man is what is justly due to that company.

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. CARPENTER. And the clause provides that we shall pay them only half of that.

Mr. BROWN. Only half of 50 per cent.? I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. CARPENTER. Look at the clause and see.

Mr. BROWN. It provides for paying them 50 per cent. upon the

Mr. CARPENTER. Justly due.

Mr. BROWN. Of the whole transportation.
Mr. CARPENTER. But the amount justly due is one-half of what would be justly due another man.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, the amount justly due the company is one-half of the charge that the railroad company would have made to anybody of the charge that the railroad company would have made to any body else for the transportation.

Mr. CARPENTER. Exactly, and you pay them one-half of that.

Mr. BROWN. Then you pay them one-half of that.

Mr. CARPENTER. That is a quarter of what is justly due?

Mr. BROWN. That is a quarter of what is justly due.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, if that is in order—I believe it is—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So as to make the clause read this way, and I was the column of the senator of it.

expect to get a unanimous vote in favor of it:

For the payment for Army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds, to be adjusted by the proper accounting officers in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts, but in no case shall more than 50 per cent. of the full amount of the service be paid until a final judicial decision shall be had in respect of each case in dispute.

Mr. BROWN. I think that covers the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont offers an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa will be reported first.

The SECRETARY. After the word "of," in line 200, it is proposed to strike out the words "what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them" and to insert "the amount audited and approved by the Quartermaster-General;" so as to read:

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of the amount audited and approved by the Quartermaster-General for transportation, $125,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment will be reported.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is in lieu of what is offered by the Senator from Iowa. That is the only way I can move it. Then, if agreed to, we can strike out the rest.

can strike out the rest.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. EDMUNDS.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON †]
The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. WITHERS. As a point of order, the yeas and nays having been ordered upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, I wish to inquire whether it was competent, pending the call for the

I wish to inquire whether it was competent, pending the call for the yeas and nays, under the order that they be taken, to offer an amendment to the proposition?

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no doubt about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will decide that the amendment is in order, notwithstanding the yeas and nays may have been ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. On what have the yeas and nays been ordered? The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the amendment of the Senator from Iowa amended?

Mr. CONKLING. The question now is on the amendment as amended?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly.
Mr. WITHERS. I want to ask whether the call for the yeas and nays is applicable now to the amendment as amended?
Mr. EDMUNDS. It is.
Mr. CARPENTER. Certainly.
Mr. WITHERS. There is another point upon which I wish to inquire simply—I am not contesting the point; but when I offered a substitute by way of amendment for the pending amendment it was ruled out of order. This is practically a substitute precisely to the same extent—same extent——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Virginia withhold until the Chair explains that his substitute was not ruled out of order, but precedence was given to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the text? His substitute will be in order when the amendments have all been acted on.

Mr. WITHERS. The substitute was offered as an amendment, and

Mr. WITHERS. The substitute was offered as an amendment, and it was to perfect the text precisely for the same purpose and object as the amendment which has just been voted on. So far as the effect of it is concerned it perfected the text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute offered by the Senator from Virginia was offered in lieu of the entire portion of the bill between lines 200 and 204, inclusive, and was not an amendment to any portion of it.

to any portion of it.

Mr. WITHERS. And so has the amendment just voted on.

Mr. EDMUNDS. By no means. The difference between the amendment of the Senator from Virginia and my motion is that he moved a substitute for the whole paragraph. I moved an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, to strike out the words that amendment of the Senator from lowa, to strike out the words that he proposed and insert others.

Mr. WITHERS. Is there any portion of the paragraph which is left if the amendment be adopted which has just been voted on?

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is, and if it be finally agreed to that portion will have to be stricken out, because it makes a repetition of words.

Mr. CARPENTER. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa being in order, it was certainly in order to move to amend his amendment. That is what the Senator from Vermont did. The Senator from Vermont has had his amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa adopted, and the pending question is, shall the amend-ator from lowa adopted, and the pending question is, shall the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa as amended be adopted †

Mr. WITHERS. I understand that.

Mr. CARPENTER. If it be adopted, then any other amendment will be made that is necessary to harmonize it to the bill.

Mr. WITHERS. I understand the effect of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands, the Senator from Virginia did not offer his substitute as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. The Chair, then, necessarily had to act mon the amendments perfecting the fact hefore the the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. The Chair, then, necessarily had to act upon the amendments perfecting the text before the substitute could be considered. While the amendment of the Senator from Iowa was pending, the Senator from Vermont offered an amendment to that amendment, and not a substitute for the whole. The Chair cannot say whether that amendment covers the whole question or not. That is for the Senate to determine. The Senate has adopted that amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, and the question now pending before the Senate is, will the Senate agree to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa as amended by the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont and adopted by the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont and adopted by the Senate?

Mr. WITHERS. The Chair is perfectly correct, no doubt.

Mr. WITHERS. The Chair is perfectly correct, no doubt.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. If that amendment is agreed to, the question as to whether the whole clause means anything or not will be for the Senate to determine.

be for the Senate to determine.

Mr. ALLISON. In that view, I ask that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Vermont be now read, and then that the text be read in connection with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa will now be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. for the payment for Army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds, to be adjusted by the proper accounting officers in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts; but in no case shall more than, 50 per cent. of the full amount of the service be paid until a final judicial decision shall be had in respect of each case in dispute, for transportation, $125,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the amendment as amended is agreed to, then we should want to strike out the words "to pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them for transportation," and then it will read all straight.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask the Secretary to read the substitute which I offered in behalf of the committee for the paragraph, because, to my mind, it is preferable to the other, both in phraseology and substance.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute offered by the Senator from Virginia will be reported. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To pay land-grant railroads on which the United States is entitled to transportation of troops and supplies free of charge, for transportation for the Quartermaster's Department, $125,000: Provided, That said railroads be puid only 50 per cent. of their schedule rates, and that said 50 per cent., if accepted by any railroad, shall be in full of all its demands for said services. And the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized to settle the accounts of said railroads in accordance with the provisions of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa as amended, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 23, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS-23. Cameron of Wis., Carpenter, Conkling, Dawes, Edmunds, Allison, Anthony, Blair, Booth, Brown, Burnside, Platt, Rollins, Saunders, Slater, Windom. Hill of Colorado, Hoar, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Morrill, Harris, NAYS-18. McPherson, Morgan, Pugh, Saulsbury, Voorhees, Walker, Williams, Withers. Groome, Hampton, Jonas, Kernan, Coke, Davis of W. Va., Eaton, Garland, ABSENT-35. Davis of Illinois,

Jones of Nevada, Kellogg, Kirkwood, McDonald, Maxey, Paddock, Pendleton, Plumb, Randolph, Bailey, Baldwin, Bayard, Blaine, Davis of Himos, Ferry, Farley, Grover, Hamlin, Hereford, Hill of Georgia, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Sharon, Teller, Thurman, Vance, Bruce, Butler, Call, Camero Vest, Wallace, Whyte. Cameron of Pa., Cockrell,

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Now to make the reading right I move to strike out all in print in the paragraph that precedes the words "one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars."
Mr. WITHERS. What is the amendment?
Mr. EDMUNDS. It is to strike out the two lines from the original text of print, so as to make it read straight, all there is in the paragraph before the words "one hundred and twenty-five thousand dol-lars."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words to be stricken out by the Senator from Vermont will be reported.

The Secretary read as follows:

To pay land-grant railroads 50 per cent. of what the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due them for transportation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question now is on the proviso proposed by the committee. I hope that will be disagreed to, as what the Senate has agreed to settles the whole question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be reported.

The SECRETARY. The committee propose to insert the following proviso after the word "dollars," in line 202:

Provided That such payment shall be accounted as in full of all demands for said.

Provided, That such payment shall be accepted as in full of all demands for said

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for action on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations 7 [Putting the question.] The Chair is uncertain. Those favoring the amendment will please rise and stand till counted.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask the Chair to state the question again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee will be reported for information.

The provise was again read.

The proviso was again read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the provision already inserted be read in that connection, so that I think Senators will see that there is no need of the proviso

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I rose for the same purpose. I ask that the amendment adopted be read, so that we can see what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as agreed to will be reported.

The Secretary read as follows:

For the payment for Armytransportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds, to be adjusted by the proper accounting officers in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts; but in no case shall more than 50 per cent. of the full amount of the service be paid until a a final judicial decision shall be had in respect of each case in dispute, $125,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now let the Secretary read what the committee propose to add to that.

The SECRETARY. The committee propose to add after the word "dollars," in line 202, the following proviso:

Provided, That such payment shall be accepted as in full of all demands for said

Mr. EDMUNDS. You do not want that under existing circum-

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The question I rose to ask was whether there is a limit to the parties receiving the pay, whether it will be considered in full, whether or not they can continue their case in court and come to the Department again for additional payment? Mr. EDMUNDS. The very provision that the Senate has agreed to here and that everybody agreed to in the act of 1879, in the very same words, provided that in respect of those cases that were in dispute words, provided that in respect of those cases that were in dispute and under judicial consideration, 50 per cent. might be paid, not more than that; leaving it until a final decision for the payment of any balance that the courts might hold was due, and if they found a still further balance due, then the act of 1879 allowed it to be paid out of the $300,000. Now we say, in substance, carrying the same scheme—or a majority of the Senate have said—we will allow these payments to go on in the same way; but this proviso, if now adopted, would declare that, although we allowed them to have a lawsuit with us on a matter of contract, as we are bound in justice to do I think, yet if they take anything on account pending the lawsuit they shall take it in full. I do not think that is just.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As I understand it, the option with those entitled to the 50 per cent. is to take it or not. There may be railroad companies that are willing to take it and close the account on that; but as I understand the amendment of the Senator from Vermont it will not close their accounts, it will continue them, and if the decision should be in favor of the claimants, although they have taken their 50 per cent., they can still go on and take whatever may be awarded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend from West Virginia is mistaken. If ing suits pending come forward and take this 50 per cent.; and yet when the suit is decided, if they are awarded more, they will take it under the Senator's view; but if it is less, what will be the result? They will have what the Government has paid them and the Government will not get it back probably. If they take the 50 per cent., I think the account had better be squared as far as they are concerned. Mr. HOAR. I voted for the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, but I am afraid that I did not understand its meaning as he does, and if I now understand his statement of its meaning, I shall certainly for one vote to reconsider the motion adopting it. As I understand it, there is a question between the United States and cercertainly for one vote to reconsider the motion adopting it. As I understand it, there is a question between the United States and certain railroad companies growing out of the fact that the United States granted them the land over which the railroads are built, and certain grants of land outside of their right of way in aid of the construction of their roads, and stipulated in return that it should have free transportation over the road for its troops and other matters to be transported. When the roads were completed and in operation, the United States demanded such free transportation, and thereupon the railroads replied. "You were entitled to the free use of our roadthe railroads replied, "You were entitled to the free use of our road-bed, but you were not entitled to the free use of our cars and loco-motives and railroad servants and other means and appliances;" and the court sustained that view of the railroads, and said the United States was to have free only such portion of the ordinary price of transportation as should amount to giving it free the use of the road, but was not entitled to have free the use of the cars and the services of various kinds. Now the railroads and the United States want to of various kinds. Now the railroads and the United States want to settle that question, and some of the railroads say that you ought to pay 75 per cent. of what would be to any other party than to the United States, or to the United States if it had not this right, a fair price for transportation. Others say, "You ought to pay us 66 per cent.;" and others say, "We are willing to settle with you and take 50 per cent., not 50 per cent. of our claim but 50 per cent. of what would be our claim if we were not obliged to furnish anything free to the Government." Now the Senator from Vermont offers an amendment, which the Senate has adopted, in which he says the roads are to receive 50 per cent. of the price of the service, and thereupon they may still go on and make their claim for as much more as they can may still go on and make their claim for as much more as they can get

That is what it is.

Mr. HOAR. If that is what it means, I did not understand its meaning when I voted for it; for certainly if the railroad and the Government both are willing to settle this matter, and say that 50 per cent. of the whole price is a fair allowance for the right of the United States to have the road free, why should we not let them, and why should the Senator from Vermont propose to pay these roads on account the sum which they have manifested a willingness to take in full without any constraint, the courts being open to them all the time, and still have them go on and get as much as they can?

If the Senator from Vermont means to take away the power of authorizing a settlement with these roads on this 50 per cent. basis, then I hope somebody will move to reconsider the vote adopting his amendment and that the Senate will reject it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I agree to every word that my friend from Massachusetts has stated; and if he will do me the honor to take what the Senate has adopted and read it himself, I am sure he will agree with me that what he has said does not come in conflict with what this amendment is.

I will begin again as we seem to misunderstand each other all around about this—

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator before he proceeds permit me to say that I understood when I voted for the amendment that it allowed this power of settlement; but I understand the last statement made this power of settlement; but I understand the last statement made by the Senator from Vermont, in reply to the Senator from Virginia or the Senator from West Virginia, would put another interpretation on his own amendment. It was that which left me in doubt.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then my friend from Massachusetts misunderstood my meaning. If I know my language, what I said or meant to say was that in a case where they could not settle and where there was still a contest we would not allow beyond 50 per cent. to be paid until that contest was finally determined; and that I understand to be in entire conformity with what the Senator from Massachusetts desires.

Mr. HOAR. Then how do they get anything on account to use the Vermont it will not close their accounts, it will continue them, and if the decision should be in favor of the claimants, although they have taken their 50 per cent., they can still go on and take whatever may be awarded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend from West Virginia is mistaken. If there is any company that is willing to settle for 50 per cent. and call it a settlement, the Government has a perfect right to make that settlement with it, and then it is a settlement, and that ends the law-suit and the claims; but here comes this proviso of the committee, which declares that, whether the companies are willing or not, if they take one-half it may be of what they are entitled to, they shall take it in full.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is at their option whether they take or not. As I understand the amendment, it appears to me it will be a still further protection to the Government, and my desire is if a party volunteers to take the 50 per cent. as I understand there are parties willing to do and not insist on their suit, but willing to settle their accounts with the Government by taking the 50 per cent.

Am. HOAR. Then how do they get anything on account, to use the language which the Senator himself used just now, and by which I may have been misled? If they get that 50 per cent. under his amendment as a full settlement of this controversy, that is not a payment on account, that it was not just to pay these men 50 per cent. on account, and that it was not just to pay these men 50 per cent. on account, that it was not just to pay these men 50 per cent. on account, that it was not just to pay these men 50 per cent. on account, that it was not just to pay these men 50 per cent. on account, that it was not just to pay these men 50 per cent. on account, that it was not just to pay these men 50 per cent. on account, that it was not just to pay these men 50 per cent. on account, that it was not just to pay these men 50 per cent. on account, that it was not just to pay these men 50 per cent. on account, was the full set decided by the Supreme Court of the United States and on their remand by the Court of Claims. These cases are out of dispute. Other cases have been disposed of administratively that clearly fall within the same principle, the language of the granting acts being the same, (as it is not in all cases,) and the comparative expense of keeping up the road and keeping up its motive power being analogous; the parties have composed their disputes on that basis. So, then, in a majority of the instances now there is no dispute at all. There are some remaining, in which there is still a dispute, in which the companies insist upon it that the sum settled by the courts is not enough, and some in which the department insist that the sum settled by the courts, as applied to their case, is too much. Now what do we want to do? It seems to me that we all want to do just what we did in 1879, and that is provide the money for paying for these services according to the prinprovide the money for paying for these services according to the principles of the decisions of the last tribunal of the land, and where these decisions do not apply, or where the parties are in a dispute as to the quantum that is to be paid, to leave them just as private persons are left, one making a tender of what he thinks is due and the other taking it and suing for the balance, if he want to, or if they are satisfied to settle, they have a right to do so, and let the creditor take it in full rather than go through a suit. Now I will read the language:

For the payment for Army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds, to be adjusted by the proper accounting officers in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts; but in no case shall more than 50 per cent. of the full amount of the service be paid until a final decision shall be had in respect of each case in dispute. case in dispute.

Those that are left uncomposed either by judicial decision or by the business and analogous administration of the Department and the railroads are left in such condition that the Department can pay up to 50 per cent. of the full amount of the service to the parties entitled to receive it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I would like to ask the Senator from Vermont in that connection, what propriety there is in our making an appropriation until there is some determination, unless it be in settlement of the claims? Why should we make any appropriation at all for those cases which are not to be settled by the appropriation?

Mr. EDMUNDS. For this simple reason, that I think applies every-

Mr. EDMUNDS. For this simple reason, that I think applies everywhere between man and man: in all the cases that this appropriation refers to at all, it is admitted by the United States, and it is plain on the face of the statutes, that we owe something; and it is a mere question of how much we owe; that is to say, what is the proportion that the service bears to the track and to the road. We owe them something. We say we owe them 40 per cent. on what the total service would be. They say we owe them 60 per cent. Now, we are ready to pay our 40 and they are entitled to have it. We admit they are entitled to have that. They say they are entitled to 20 per cent. more, and we say they are not. Now why should we refuse to pay what we owe because they refuse to take that in full settlement?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the Senator further, whether the natural effect of such an appropriation will not be to continue litigation that would expire if the appropriation was made as a settlement?

As I understand the case there is a general pro vision of law which forbids the settlement of any of the claims of the railroads of the class described until the amounts due them should have been adjudicated by the courts. Such adjudication has been had by the Court of Claims, and 50 per cent. in two or three cases which came before them was fixed upon as the amount due under the arrangement made with the Government; but that is not a final adjudication of the claim. It was the impression of the House at the time this bill passed the House that the conditions of the law had been complied with and the amount of compensation to which these roads were justly entitled had been ascertained by judicial determination; but it seems that the decision of the Court of Claims is not final, because it has been appealed from both by the Government and by the roads. Now I ask the attention of the Senator from Vermont, to whom I am particularly addressing myself in this portion of my remarks. Under the provisions of the general law these roads can have nothing because their cases have not received a final adjudication, the Government having appealed to the Supreme Court from the decision of the Court of Claims on the ground that 50 per cent. was too great an allowance, and the railroads having appealed on the ground that it was not a sufficient allowance. That is the status of the claims at present before the judicial tribunal which has yet to determine them.

The appropriation which is provided in this bill is designed to some extent to relieve the railroads from the delay of three or four years which must necessarily be incurred before they can receive a hearing which must necessarily be incurred before they can receive a hearing in the Supreme Court, and also to protect the Government. One point is secured by making a provision that these roads shall not receive more than 50 per cent., which is the amount ascertained by the Court of Claims, and the other to protect the Government is found in the proviso which it is proposed shall now be stricken out, that this sum shall be received only by those roads who are willing to accept it as in full of all their demands against the Government, not to pay 50 per cent. to all roads that have claims against the Government on account merely and still leave them their right to prosecute to a final judgment in the Supreme Court the very claims upon which we have paid 50 per cent. That proviso in my opinion is necessary as an act of protection and justice to the Government. It necessary as an act of protection and justice to the Government. It is optional with the roads to accept the 50 per cent. or not. Without the provise, however, it is as certain almost as any future event can be that any road which has any claim against the Government for transportation will take the 50 per cent. and continue to prosecute its claim legally in order to take the chances of receiving a judicial determination that it shall have more.

Mr. CARPENTER. Let me state to my friend what is the objective of the control of tion to it. Why should we, because we are a Government and can oppress our contractor or creditor by compelling him in a way that we never allow one citizen to compel another, take that advantage? A company say, "we are entitled to $50,000." We concede that they are entitled to $25,000. There is $25,000 in dispute between us, and are entitled to $25,000. There is $25,000 in dispute between us, and only $25,000. Now we can by withholding that $25,000 ruin that company. Is it right for us, because we have got the power, is it right for us because we are a Government and the other party is not, to say "we will pay you what we deem you are entitled to, but we will not do that unless you renounce what you think is due you." In other words, is the Government justified in using that tremendous power against any citizen? power against any citizen?

Mr. WITHERS. If it be not justified, it certainly has acted most

mr. WITHERS. It to be not justified, it certainly has acted most unjustly in hundreds and thousands of cases.

Mr. CARPENTER. Of course it has.

Mr. WITHERS. Every claim pending before the Government stands precisely on the same basis. Is it right for the Government to require every claimant to prove every jot and tittle of his claim before he can receive anything when the refusal to pay the money may be ruinous to that man?

Mr. CARPENTER. No; of course it is not.
Mr. WITHERS. That is precisely the same thing in principle.
Mr. CARPENTER. Precisely; yes, sir.
Mr. WITHERS. Every individual does the same thing. These railroads have nothing to do but to determine for themselves whether it is more to their interest to receive 50 per cent, and give a receipt in full, or to continue the prosecution of their claims before the Supreme Court. There is no compulsion about it. They have entire option to exercise their own discretion. It does seem to me that if we open wide the gates, break down the barriers erected by the satutory provisions the gates, break down the barriers erected by the satutory provisions prohibiting payment until the amount due shall be ascertained by judicial determination, and say "you can come in and get 50 per cent.," it ought to be coupled with the proviso that that payment shall be in full of all demands against the Government.

Mr. McPherson. May I ask the Senator from Vermont a question with respect to the amendment, which I fail to understand? I tried very hard to vote for it, but I found in the phraseology of the amendment something that did not exactly please me. He orders in his amendment the proper officer of the Government to audit and allow an amount legally due. Now, will the honorable Senator tell me how you are going to determine an amount legally due? As to some of the roads, I understand the amount has been determined by the decision of the courts; as to other roads, there has been no dethe decision of the courts; as to other roads, there has been no decision touching their case. When the accounting officer of the Government undertakes to ascertain what is legallly due, where will he go for information and instruction except to the charters themselves of the corporations that the Government employed to do this work? We will suppose that the charter of the corporation empowered it to We will suppose that the charter of the corporation empowered it to charge a given sum which was double the amount, four times the amount, that a competing road would have charged if there had been a competing road. In what way, then, under that provision, is the Government to receive its 50 per cent., or any amount whatever? You speak of the amount legally due. How are you to determine what is leavely due? what is legally due?

Then in addition to that, while I am on my feet, I wish to go a little further. It is left, as the Senator from Virginia says, after that an open question still for the courts to decide whether after the 50 per cent. has been deducted from the amount, which may be an extravagant sum but which their charters would permit them to charge, they can then go into the courts and get an additional sum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think I can explain to the satisfaction of my friend from New Jersey on both those points. The language of the amendment adopted by the Senate is "to pay the amount lawfully due." I do not criticise the use of the word "legally," they usually amount to the same thing. How is that to be ascertained? That is the pertinent inquiry. I reply it is to be ascertained exactly as if we were to appropriate, as we shall in a few days if we have not already, a sum of money to pay for clearing the snow off the sidewalks about the avenues to the Capitol. The proper officer of the United States has employed day laborers; to some he has agreed to give so much; to others he has said, "Go to work, I will give you give so much; to others he has said, "Go to work, I will give you what it is worth," or "as much as you can earn." How do you ascertain it? Just as you do between man and man everywhere. You ascertain it by a mutual agreement. If you mutually agree what the service is lawfully worth; how much the man is lawfully entitled to, you pay it. If you cannot agree, then this act as applied to these roads provides in that case that this money shall not be paid out beyond a certain percentage of the total amount of the service. So the provision for paying what is lawfully due as it is stated there, to my mind is precisely like—hundreds of others I was going to say—a great many other items in this bill and in every other bill where we provide money for the administrative departments of the Government to fulfill the obligations of the Government. How are they to be ascertained? Sometimes they are fixed by law, as a salary; sometimes they are fixed by agreement beforehand by contract; sometimes they are fixed according to the value of the service, as very often they are in carrying mails where contracts run out, the contract does not bind any longer, yet the railroad has lawfully earned the money; it is a mere quantum meruit how much it is. We leave it to the administrative department of the Government that can settle much better than we can, how much in each case is a just and lawful sum.

In the next place my friend says the charter of the company may provide for altogether an excessive rate. I respectfully reply that the acts of Congress making these land grants are not affected at all by anything that is in the charter as to the rates; but the land grants as to some of the roads are that the road shall be a free, public highway where the United States shall have a right to transport its troops and supplies. Under those acts the courts have held, and rightfully I think that they do not include the furnishing of core accessive courts have held, and rightfully I think, that they do not include the furnishing of cars and locomotives, but the United States have the right to furnish their own cars and locomotives and run them over the road. But they have not done it; they have made use of the cars and locomotives of the railroad it; they have made use of the cars and locomotives of the railroad companies themselves just as they would if there had not been any such provision in the land grants at all. Then we owe them something in those cases; how much is a mere question of fact to be determined on comparing the proportion that the United States is entitled to the benefit of in the right to go over the road.

There are other roads as to which the phraseology is that the road shall transport the troops and supplies. In those cases the Quartermaster-General rightly refused to pay anything, because in those cases it is obvious from the language that the whole burden is on the company. And so the language varies in these fifty or sixty acts, one way in one and another in another. The Supreme Court has laid down certain principles. For two years under a provision in substance exactly like the one I have offered, that Congress passed, I think without a division, the thing has gone on peaceably and amithink without a division, the thing has gone on peaceably and amicably. We only want to provide a little money, and I have used the exact language adequate to that.

Mr. McPHERSON. With respect to the idea that the Government could under any circumstances in practice undertake with their own rolling-stock to transport their freight and passengers over the numerous railroads over which it becomes necessary for them to transport them to different parts of the country, I think the honorable Senator will see that it is very evident they cannot do it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course not. I hope the Senator did not suppose I thought so.

Mr. McPHERSON. Therefore it remains then strictly between the two contracting parties, the Government on one side having goods or troops to transport, and the railroad upon the other doing the transportation business. I still submit that the amendment of the honorable Senator does not reach the point, because inasmuch as there is a given sum fixed by law which is to be deducted from the gross

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no such thing fixed by law, if the Senator will pardon me. Mr. McPHERSON. It will be fixed if this becomes a law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. By no means; it does not fix any sum to be de-

Mr. EDMUNDS. By no means; it does not fix any sum to be deducted. It is an upward limitation given in cases still open and in controversy between the United States and these people that they shall not go beyond a certain quantum. That is all.

Mr. McPHERSON. Well, in any event they are not to be paid the amount which they expected to charge for doing this work. If there is any law or any rule of practice that would compel a railway company to undertake the transportation of goods or troops for the Government on any terms less than they themselves think it is worth to do the service, I should like to have the Senator assert it. The railroad companies are permitted to make their own charge whether it road companies are permitted to make their own charge whether it be exorbitant or otherwise; and upon that we propose to pay them

Now, I say that while we are paying 50 per cent. for the transportation of the goods of the Government believing that we are getting something in repayment on account of the original grant to the company, we are in reality paying as much as the public pay for the same service. If the Senator would permit me to change one word in his amendment, I would like it better, striking out the word "lawfully" and substituting "justly," so as to direct the proper officer to audit and allow the sum "justly due," instead of "lawfully due."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not power to accept that now, because the Senate has agreed to my amendment. If it had been proposed before, I should have been willing to accept it, because any sensible court would hold that the two words amounted to exactly the same thing.

I preferred the word "lawfully" because I thought it would limit a little more strictly any possible discretion of the Quartermaster-General; but any sensible court, I think, would hold that the two words amount to the same thing.

Mr. McPHERSON. I shall be in order in moving to amend it when it comes into the Senate.

it comes into the Senate.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. The question is so narrowed down that I suppose all Senators will understand it when I state it. As the law now stands these railroads cannot collect anything, and if this provision is stricken out of the bill altogether, no money can be paid to them, because the law of March 3, 1875, absolutely prohibits it. So, then, all the provisions we are now making is in the interest of the railroad companies, at least to the extent of enabling them to get that much money which by law they are now prohibited from collecting. We make this provision because the Supreme Court of the United States, differing from the legislative and executive construction, in two cases heard before them have said that the companies were entitled to one-half, or 50 per cent. of what they would otherwise have had but for the right of the United States to have the use of the road free. Now, we propose per cent. of what they would otherwise have had but for the right of the United States to have the use of the road free. Now, we propose to say to all the other roads, "as that is the decision of the courts we will not require you all to litigate; it has been well considered; we will place you in the hands of the Quartermaster-General, to pay you 50 per cent., provided you are willing to accept it, give us a receipt in full, and stop litigation." That is what the committee proposed.

The proposition of the Senator from Vermont is that we shall pay them 50 per cent. now, and after they have once received they may go to any lawyer who will take the case on speck and try to get more. Having got the 50 per cent. in their pockets, suits will be brought in every case under an agreement to give a lawyer one-half of what he every case under an agreement to give a lawyer one-half of what he can get over and above that. It does not stop litigation; it encourages it after you have paid as much as the Supreme Court in the two cases already decided has held that the roads were entitled to. None need take this 50 per cent. unless they are satisfied with it, but the committee desire that. Whenever these parties do take our money, they shall take it because they regard it as an equitable and full settlement. If they do not, then let them sue for all they claim. All that the courts say they are entitled to is only 50 per cent., and why should we pay that and then allow ourselves to be sued again if the company wishes? What private man would do that in his dealings with his neighbor? It is just inviting suits, for they will necessarily follow from everybody who thinks he has a chance to get something more. Let them sue for the whole if they are not content with the amount we see fit to give them.

Besides, after we have 'paid them the 50 per cent., if the courts should determine that they were entitled to but 40, they could plead that we had paid this much already, and the United States would never get it back. They would get all they could in excess of the 50 per cent., and the Government would lose all that was paid in excess never get it back. They would get all they could in excess of the 50 per cent., and the Government would lose all that was paid in excess of the judgment, if it was for less than the 50 per cent. It is to avoid litigation, to keep the Government from being entangled in suits with its citizens, or corporations, or anybody else, that we now say in this bill that the Supreme Court having decided two important cases, after full consideration, we are willing to pay what the decisions of the court said was right, and end the matter; but if we are not going to end it we had better do nothing, and let them sue for all, instead of suing for the balance after they have got this much money. Strike the whole section out, and let them sue for it all, standing on the law; and if they are not content with what we give, let them have nothing. If they are not content with what we give, let them have nothing. If they are content, let them say so by a full receipt. That is the way every private man would do.

So far from being grasping and severe, we are absolutely acting almost in violation of a direct and positive law of Congress in advancing this money, because the courts have shown, under their construction, that there is an equity in it to that extent and no more, and on that basis we are willing to settle.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, I think that if the Senate in considering this subject had followed the decisions of the court the question would have been settled long before this. It could have been settled yesterday in a very short time. In the first place the Supreme Court decided that the Government had no right to use the motive power or rolling-stock of the road, and therefore the Government had to pay for the use of that in the transportation of troops. The Court of Claims have decided that 50 per cent. is a fair allowance, and in making up that decision they took as the starting point the schedule rates of the railroads. They came to two or three different conclusions by different processes; one of them amounted to

If we in the Senate had adopted that rule and said these accounts shall be made up on the basis of 50 per cent. of the schedule rate, which was the only rate the court had under consideration in making which was the only rate the court had under consideration in making its decision, we should have come to a decision long ago; and if we had said that in case the railroads give a receipt in full we will pay them 50 per cent. of the schedule rates at the time they performed the service, that would have been the rule for the Quartermaster-General in all future time to observe in making up these accounts. For instance, if they charged two and one-half cents a mile on the Happileal and Saint Ioseph Bailroad and a they are troops were For instance, if they charged two and one-half cents a mile on the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Railroad, and a thousand troops were transported on that road, the accounts must be made up at the rate of two and one-half cents per mile for the transportation of a thousand troops, and the Government of the United States would pay one and one-fourth cents a mile. By that process you would follow distinctly the decision of the Court of Claims.

As I said before, the decision of the Supreme Court is that the Government of the United States has no right to the use of the rolling-stock, and, secondly, that as a rule 50 per cent. of the schedule rates is the proper amount to be paid for the transportation of troops; that is, you pay for each soldier just exactly one-half what an individual would have to pay himself if he was traveling over the road. That was the substance of the amendment I offered yesterday; and that is the only fair way to consider this thing, in my opinion; and if this bill should be amended in that way the Quartermaster-General would have in all future time a fixed rule to go by and we should never here experience were cheef the construction.

have in an inture time a fixed rule to go by and we should never hear anything more about it in Congress.

Mr. CARPENTER. Why, Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Rhode Island if it would not be the easiest thing in the world for the railroad companies next year to double or treble their schedule?

Mr. BURNSIDE. But the Quartermaster knows that the railroad companies have a fixed rate.

Mr. CARPENTER. Suppose they change that fixed rate? is my question.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I mean the schedule rate.
Mr. CARPENTER. Suppose they double the schedule rate?
Mr. BURNSIDE. Then it is not the regular schedule rate. No quartermaster would submit to a thing of that kind and no land-quartermaster would submit to a thing of that kind and no land-grant railroad would dare to do a thing of that kind, being in the hands of Congress.

Mr. CARPENTER. Though the rate is fixed by the company itself? Mr. BURNSIDE. For instance, take the Illinois Central in trans-portation from Cairo to Chicago; does the Senator from Wisconsin think for one moment the Illinois Central would dare to put even 10 per cent. upon their rate? Everybody knows what he has to pay traveling from Cairo to Chicago, a certain fixed sum, say ten and a half dollars passage money.

half dollars passage-money.

Mr. CARPENTER. I have learned from the debate this afternoon that the railroads do not observe the schedule at all, but that freight is all carried by contract.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether the Court of Claims had not in consideration, when they were making up the percentage that the United States ought to pay for the transportation of troops, the rates upon which the railroads can do business under competition when they are cutting each other's rates, or whether mader competition when they are cutting each other's rates, or whether they considered their ordinary regular traffic rates?

Mr. CARPENTER. My difficulty about it is that there is nothing regular that is not fixed by law. Your schedule rate is one thing this year, it is another thing next year, and if you say you are to establish a rule that shall govern the quartermasters for all time to come to get at just half what they ought to pay, then I say you have got to fix a schedule.

MR. BURNSIDE.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Let me put my statement in a little different form. If the Senator from Wisconsin were to pass over the Illinois Central Railroad next week he would pay a given sum; he would pay what they advertise to sell tickets at. If a regiment of soldiers goes over the road at the same time no quartermaster would pay more than the Senator, and no railroad would dare to increase the rates for soldiers Senator, and no railroad would dare to increase the rates for soldiers going over it. In the first place, the quartermaster would not pay it.

Mr. CARPENTER. If you determine that he shall pay one-half the schedule rates, I do not see how he can help it.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The Quartermaster-General would not allow the account; he would not audit the account.

Mr. CARPENTER. But the law is to make him allow it. I take it the Quartermaster-General will do what we command him to do; and I understand the Senator's idea is—

Mr. BURNSIDE. We allow him to pay 50 per cent. if they give a receipt in full. I think the only solution of the thing is to make the schedule rate the rate on which the money shall be paid—the schedreceipt in full. I think the only solution of the thing is to make the schedule rate the rate on which the money shall be paid—the schedule rate at the time the service was done.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I insist that the amendment, as offered by the Senator from Vermont and already passed, is exactly right. According to the usual system of railroading and railroad settlements, it is neither equitable nor just to fix the standard of 50 per cent. as the cost of transportation of troops, passengers, or freight over all these lines. To illustrate: Suppose there are two roads between two given points, each one one hundred miles in length. Each of these roads has to have a president, a superintendent, a treasurer, an auditor, a master machinist, a master car-builder, a road-master, and all the machinery that is usual to a railroad. In addition to that, I may say, as a Northern Senator said to me awhile ago, "We must not forget the attorney." They have to have a large amount of fixed expense that they must incur whether they do much or little transportation. The president's salary runs, and the salaries of all these other officers run, whether the company does much or little. You lay down your road with cross-ties. The decay commences at once, and in a given number of years they are rotten. That process of disintegration or of rotting goes on the same whether you carry over the road one train or fifty trains a day.

Now, in the case I have supposed, I will say that road number one carries one train each way per day and has no other custom but that. Road number two carries fifty trains each way per day. In the one case all this fixed expense is divided and charged to the amount that is made by the running of one train each way per day. In the other case this fixed expense is divided between fifty trains each way per day.

is made by the running of one train each way per day. In the other case this fixed expense is divided between fifty trains each way per day. One can very well afford to do it, and the other cannot afford to do it. The one can make money in carrying probably at two cents per passenger and two cents per ton per mile; the other cannot possibly live at that charge unless it can get more business.

Again, take two roads situated as I have just supposed and say that the business of one of them is equally good each way over the line, that it gets as much freight at the east end to send west as it does at the west end to send east, so that each train going over the road is loaded each way, and the other road is hauling freight that goes only one way. The first road can carry a great deal cheaper per ton per mile, because it carries a loaded train each way. The second road cannot carry as cheaply, because it carries a loaded train one way and carries back its empty cars the other way. Therefore it is impossible for them to carry at the same rates, and it is not reasonable to require them to do so. You can scarcely find any two roads in the country to-day on which it costs exactly the same rate to transport a given amount of tonnage or a given number of passengers over the road. All railroad men know that.

In the case before us, here are certain companies that the United the business of one of them is equally good each way over the line,

In the case before us, here are certain companies that the United

In the case before us, here are certain companies that the United States have given land grants to aid in the building of their roads. The United States have required these companies to permit the Government to transport free anything it wants to carry over the roads. The courts have come in when dispute has arisen and said that that does not mean that the companies shall be compelled to furnish engines and cars and conductors and engineers and train-hands and brakemen and firemen and coaches and everything that is necessary in running a train; but that it only means that the company shall permit the United States to run its trains over the road free. And in the case that went before the court, it seems from the statement we have heard here—for I have not examined the case—that the court heald that 50 per cent, on the amount of the ordinary charges would held that 50 per cent. on the amount of the ordinary charges would be a fair compensation in that case and that therefore the company ought to have 50 per cent. That may be exactly right with that road; that road may do a business of ten trains a day each way. Now take another road that carries but two trains a day each way and it cannot live at 50 per cent. in that business. Whenever you held that 50 per cent. on the amount of the ordinary charges would and it cannot live at 50 per cent. in that business. Whenever you lay down a particular standard or a particular rule that governs all the roads without regard to the nature of their business or the amount of business done by each, you necessarily do injustice; and the only safe rule is in each case of a road that has received the benefits of the Government and made its contract that all the facts as to the nature of its business and the amount of its business should as to the nature of its business and the amount of its business should be taken into account and be considered by some proper tribunal in adjudicating what is a just compensation for the carriage, and a fair and honorable court will in one case give more to one road than it will to another because one is so situated that it cannot carry as cheaply as another does.

The only question here is whether we should in each case say the settlement may reach as high as 50 per cent. There may be some of the roads that do a very heavy business that could carry for an amount so small that they ought not to have 50 per cent. There may be others that ought to have 75 per cent. Therefore it is hard to lay down any rule about it. You will have to leave it to the courts to adjudicate rule about it. You will have to leave it to the courts to adjudicate it and determine what is right in each case; and as the companies cannot go on from year to year and carry without some compensation while a long litigation is going on, it is fair to make an arrangement as the amendment proposes by which the Quartermaster-General may pay to each company what is a fair compensation, not exceeding 50 per cent.; and then if the particular condition of the road or the nature of its business be such that it cannot do the service at 50 per cent, lat it we to court and let that question be determined, and if nature of its business be such that it cannot do the service at 50 per cent., let it go to court, and let that question be determined, and if there be more due it let it be paid to it after the case is decided. I think that is the only way you can settle it on a basis that is fair and equitable to all the companies concerned. If you lay down one single rule to apply to all of 50 per cent., you will pay some more than you ought to pay them, and you will not pay others by 25 or 50 per cent.

as much as you ought to pay them.

I believe you may discuss it ten days here and you will not get a better rule than that which is laid down in the amendment adopted which was offered by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to say one word on account of the position of the Senator from Georgia in connection with railroads. The Senator gives a list of officers belonging to each road. I believe he has some knowledge on the subject. If so he will recollect that in many instances on small roads a half dozen of the offices are held by one man, and not half a dozen men, and then he will recollect another thing, that many of the small railroads pay perhaps $100 to an employé for the same service that a large company pays $1,000 for; so his comparison is not fair any more than it would be to compare the expenses of running a State Legislature with those of running this Congress. There are certain officers that they do not pay anything library many and a state of the same are certain officers. thing like as much as we do.

Now, it is true that one road may be able to haul much cheaper than another; but it depends more on the number of trains run and the circumstances of the road than it depends upon whether it is a small or a large road. If but one train a day is run it takes but one set of men to run it; if ten trains are run it takes ten sets of men to run them. It is true the investment of the road is the same in one case as in the other; but as to the general expenses the Senator is mistaken in his proposition as a rule.

Now, I believe the committee's amendment is a proper one. It says that if the Quartermaster-General settles one of these accounts and the party running the road chooses to come in and take 50 per cent. it may do so and give a receipt in full. That is the option. In other words, if the claimant thinks proper to say "No, I will go on and litigate," he can do so. The position of the Senator from Georgia and of the Senator from Vermont, as I understand, is when a man comes in and takes 50 per cent., he may then use that money to litigate against the Government for more. The committee say, "No, if you take it you must take it in full; but it is at your option whether you will take it or not." While I agree that the Senate has already said that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is a proper one, the committee say that this provise ought to be added; that is, if the party comes in and takes 50 per cent. in settlement, he shall not go on and try to get 20 or 30 per cent. more from the Government and take, perhaps, the money furnished by the Government for the purpose of following up his suit, or commencing a new one if one is not already commenced.

Mr. McMILLAN.

Mr. McMILLAN. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont contains a provision directly in contradiction to this amendment of the committee. The Senate have already adopted the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, and this is in conflict with it, and of

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. But notwithstanding that, there is a proviso, and that proviso says "If you receive the 50 per cent. that is a settlement." As it now stands the road may receive 50 per cent. Perhaps the road has now a suit in the Supreme Court against the Perhaps the road has now a shit in the Supreme Court against the Government, and it can receive 50 per cent. and continue this suit, and the 50 per cent. may go toward defraying the expenses of that suit. It is giving a decided advantage to those who are in litigation with the Government. As the Senator from Kentucky has well said, you had better strike this provision out entirely, for then nothing can be paid. This whole provision is in favor of those claiming from the Government, and the committee so understood, and they said, "If there are claimants who are willing to take 50 per cent. and set

"If there are claimants who are willing to take 50 per cent. and settle with the Government and stop litigation, let them take it, but not take it and still go on with their suits against the Government."

Mr. BROWN. My friend from West Virginia has referred to my comparison between small and large railroads. He says where there is but little business done by a road the offices I mentioned are very frequently several of them consolidated into one. Sometimes that is true. He says, furthermore, that the officers get smaller salaries on small roads than they do on large roads. That is sometimes true, but still it is not true that there is any comparison in the rates at which the road running but one train a day and one that carries ten trains a day can do transportation business. Suppose, for instance, the capital stock of a railroad company be $2,000,000—

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My friend will understand that I admitted that the investment was another thing; but as to the expenditure there would not be so much difference.

Mr. BROWN. I want to look into this principle a little now. Suppose the capital stock invested be $2,000,000. At 5 per cent. that would be $100,000 a year of interest whether the road makes $100,000.

would be $100,000 a year of interest whether the road makes $100,000 a year from freight or passengers, or $5,000,000 a year. That interest runs alike no matter whether the road does a large or a small business. There is $100,000 a year in the case supposed that is expended in interest on capital invested. Then there are cross-ties laid down. Everything of wood rots in eight or ten years. That wood-work is going to be destroyed, and it must be replaced. That rotting process goes on exactly the same, no matter whether you are running one goes on exactly the same, no matter whether you are running one train or fifty trains a day, or whether you are making $1,000 or $100,000 a day on the road. Then, so far as all the official salaries are concerned, they are a small part of the expense, but it is necessary that a large amount of money shall be paid out to the officers every year. That has to be paid out of small earnings or large ones. It is a very large per cent. if the income of the road is very small, as in the case of one that runs only a single train a day each way. It is a mere nothing if the income of the road is very large and it has fifty trains a day. fifty trains a day

The fixed expense has to go on very nearly the same, no matter what may be the income of the investment, the interest fund at that time. may be the income of the investment, the interest fund at that time. Therefore, as I have stated before, it is not a just rule to lay down that 50 per cent. shall be the rule applied to all roads. It may be more than some of them ought to have. My friend says wait, then, and do not settle at all if they do not take that. Then you only foster the large company that does the large business, and crush the little company. Why? Because the great company that does a very large business can well afford to take the 50 per cent. It is all they earn; all they are entitled to. They will settle with you at once. The road that does very little business cannot carry the transportation for 50 per cent., and it will not settle with you. It cannot do it without that does very little business cannot carry the transportation for 50 per cent., and it will not settle with you. It cannot do it without losing money. Then, if you compel it to settle, it does not get what it is entitled to. Therefore, the large road, the monopoly, the one that does the most business, the one that can afford to make a settlement at your rate, will do it, and the small road will be crushed and put into bankruptey because you will not pay what it is entitled to. That is the necessary effect of the rule. The Pennsylvania Central can very well afford to carry at 40 per cent. of the expense of carrying; but take a little road in Virginia, if there be one there that has but one train a day—what of that case? If you offer the Pennsylvania Central the 50 per cent. to settle you will have no trouble, while the little road in the State of my friend from Virginia would go into bankruptcy if you did not pay it more.

Another idea in that connection: the rich companies can very well afford to go on and fight; they are able to fight; they can fight you afford to go on and fight; they are able to fight; they can fight you as long as they please and never go into bankruptcy. They have plenty of means. The poor company that has to have its earnings every year and every month in the year in order to succeed must go into bankruptcy or it must take an unjust thing that does not compensate it because it is not ready for the fight.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, would it be in order to move an amendment at this time? If so I desire to move to strike out the entire clause, including the proviso, and insert instead thereof these words:

To pay land-grant railroads whatever sum the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due, the same to be not over 50 per cent. of the reasonable price for the same service if performed for a private individual or corporation by the same road: Provided, Such payment shall be accepted in full of all demands for said services, $125,000; but no payments shall be made in any disputed case until the dispute is settled.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hamp-shire who is to determine the "reasonable price?" The Quartermaster-General?

Mr. BLATR. I will explain what I mean by the amendment.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator to allow the Secretary to read the amendment from the desk, and then we shall all understand what it is.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the whole clause, including the proviso, and insert:

To pay land-grant railroads whatever sum the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due, the same to be not over 50 per cent. of the reasonable price for the same service if performed for a private individual or corporation by the same road: Provided, Such payment shall be accepted in full of all demands for said services, $125,000; but no payment shall be made in any disputed case until the dispute is serviced.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President—
Mr. WITHERS. I ask how that can be in order if a similar propsition which I submitted——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Virginia will permit the Chair to announce, he will announce that this is not in order until the substitute offered by the Senator from Virginia has

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator from Virginia will certainly permit the Chair to decide.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then that is the decision of tho Chair. The Senator from New Hampshire is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLAIR. I am in some doubt—
Mr. CARPENTER. The speech is in order.
Mr. BLAIR. The speech is not in readiness, but I can explain what mean to be understood by the amendment.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLAIR. It seems to be admitted, I believe, in all parts of the Chamber, that in no case whatever is the Government entitled, after what it has done for these roads, to less than 50 per cent. of what is what it has done for these roads, to the standard of the seasonable price—

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator is mistaken about that. I think if he will reverse that proposition and say it is conceded that the Government is not entitled to more than 50 per cent., it would be perhaps

Mr. BLAIR. That would be reversing the proposition. If I had been allowed to complete my sentence, it would have been the same in the end, that the Government is entitled to a deduction of no more than 50 per cent. It is entitled to a deduction of no more than 50 per cent. of what would be the ordinary reasonable price for the same service if performed for a private individual; and whatever dispute there is, arising under the rules of the Government itself, settled by there is, arising under the rules of the Government itself, settled by the decisions of the courts to which allusion is made, must be with reference to the other 50 per cent. If the Quartermaster-General in making his adjustment allows one of these roads 50 per cent. of what would be a reasonable price if the charge were made against a private individual, and the road accepts it, everybody wants to settle such a case and take the receipt of the corporation in full and end it; but in some cases this will not be likely to be deemed just by the road, and a dispute will arise in regard to what proportion of the remaining 50 per cent. should be deducted. In such a case, of course no payment whatever would be made or ought to be made, because any payment toward the amount in dispute or any payment upon account would, as the Senator from Kentucky said, give the corporation great advantage in its dispute with the Government.

ration great advantage in its dispute with the Government.

Now, the purpose of my amendment is to allow the Quartermaster-General and the railroad company to decide in each individual case first what is a reasonable price. It may be the schedule price for the service if rendered to a private individual; but if that schedule price is too much as suggested in many cases. is too much, as suggested in many cases by the Senator from New Jersey, it would not be a reasonable price, but it would be the duty of the Quartermaster's Department to ascertain that it was not a reasonable price. The Quartermaster's Department, notwithstanding the schedule which might make a prima facte case of a reasonable price for services rendered to a private individual, would be under obligations to search further, to look deeper, and see that the schedule price was a reasonable price, and then pay one-half of it, whatever it might be. That would seem to obviate the objection of the Senator from New Jersey Senator from New Jersey.

The provision further that no payment whatever shall be made until all questions in dispute between the railroad companies and until all questions in dispute between the railroad companies and the Government are settled, would seem to meet the objection of the Senator from Kentucky. I suppose it to be the purpose of the committee where there is no dispute to pay in full and end the matter, and my amendment provides that in such case, and only on condition that this is done, shall that receipt in full be given.

Mr. BECK. I wish to interrupt the Senator from New Hampshire to ask a question right here, if I have his permission.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. BECK. I do not know that I quite understand the amendment in this regard. The Government wants supplies taken to the ment in this regard. The Government wants supplies taken to the Black Hills. That is about equidistant between the Northern Pacific ment in this regard. The Government wants supplies taken to the Black Hills. That is about equidistant between the Northern Pacific and the Central Pacific Railroads. One offers to carry the supplies for $100,000, and that is the schedule price of both roads; but the other, in order to get that transportation, it being large, offers to take it for $75,000, and the Quartermaster accepts the proposition. In that case would he not have the right to settle by paying one-half the contract price, though below the schedule price?

Mr. BLAIR. I take it the corporation would be estopped from claiming anything more than it had itself asked in the terms of the original contract. It could not claim that a reasonable price should be beyond what it had agreed to take.

Mr. BECK. Wherever the quartermaster had made a contract with a railroad company, even though it might be far below the schedule price, that would govern though it was below the schedule price under the Senator's amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. I so understand; certainly.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, as this is a matter of some importance and everybody's ideas seem to be a little loose and the bill cannot be finished to-day, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish the Senator would withhold that motion for a moment that I may give a notice. I give notice that I shall ask a separate vote in the Senate on the amendments to the paragraph under consideration which have been adopted in Committee of the Whole under consideration which have been adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLAIR. I suppose all these amendments will be printed, will they not?

Mr. CARPENTER. They ought all to be printed.
Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to give notice that I shall offer an amendment to the amendment already adopted by the Senate proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. CARPENTER. Now, Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. Davis, of Illinois] left the Senate this evening on account of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 35; as follows:

Mr. CARPENTER. I call for the yeas and nays on that question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CARPENTER. I do not wish to detain the Senate or annoy Mr. CARPENTER. I do not wish to detain the Senate or annoy anybody who wants to go home and get his dinner; but this is too important a question to allow it to go through without men's going on record who sustain the proposition. By the amendment, if we sustain it after what we have already done, we declare that this Government, in dealing with its creditor, unless the creditor will come to what it names and dictates as a sum for settlement, will refuse to keep its contract with him as it understands it itself, and compel him to go through the tedious process of two, four, or six years' litigation before he can receive what we admit to be his due. I say that is oppression. Gentlemen say it is the rule with individuals. Very well, one individual may be as mean as he pleases with another, but no government has a right to resort to such a rôle of meanness against its own citizens.

Again, a distinction arises from the amounts generally involved.

Again, a distinction arises from the amounts generally involved. In a litigation between individuals it can rest and neither be crushed; but in the majority of cases of these large contracts with the Government made by railroad companies, made by contractors for constructing public buildings and so on, the amounts due are large, and unless the man can get what is his due and get it promptly under the contract he must be ruined. Now if he says, "I claim that I am entitled to $75,000" and the Government says, "we admit we owe you $50,000, but if you insist upon enforcing your right to have a court decide whether you are right or whether we are, we will hold you by the throat for six years, we will ruin you, we will not pay you what we admit to be your due unless you take it and give up what you claim to be your rights beyond that," is unjust, it is wicked, and it is dishonest, and for the Government to clothe and shelter itself under it is a disgrace to the land. Again, a distinction arises from the amounts generally involved.

est, and for the Government to clothe and shelter itself under it is a disgrace to the land.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator proposes to pay 50 per cent. to those litigants or those who are claiming from the Government, and still let the litigation continue. The committee propose, as I understand them, to let it be optional with the party, but if he chooses to take the 50 per cent. it shall close the transaction. That is the whole of it.

is the whole of it.

is the whole of it.

Mr. CARPENTER. That is precisely the option it is said Louis Napoleon gave when he ordered an election for emperor. Every Frenchman could vote as he pleased, but the Frenchman that did not vote for him would be shot! A company having a claim which we concede it is entitled to of $25,000 may have its option to take that and give up $25,000 more which it says it can establish by the judgment give up $25,000 more which it says it can establish by the judgment of our courts. It asks us, "Let me go into your own courts, the courts of the United States to prove my claim to $25,000 more." "No," says Congress, "you shall not do it, you shall come to our terms; you have the option, be ruined and seek your rights or take what we dictate; half we say, and have no hearing on the balance." I say that is cruel; it is simply crushing and destroying more than half the parties it would apply to, and I repeat what I said before, it is a disgrace to this ration.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, these are the creatures of the Government; they are the land-grant railroads, and those alone. They may be creditors of the Government, but I imagine that the people of this country want them to be treated in the spirit of the laws as they exist—to hold them to the laws as they are. They do not propose to allow them to take from the Government that which is not theirs. They propose to give them their rights, but they propose to hold them with a tight hand. They have already got enough. They propose to deal justly by them. The Committee on Appropriations has done that; it seeks no wrong. We propose to treat these people fairly, and administer the law as it is, and I think this amendment is in that line.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, that is a speech for a barbar in that line.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, that is a speech for a barbecue. I cannot conceive of anything that would take a town meeting as that speech would. We have been scolding about Pacific railroads, we have been scolding about subsidies, and now we propose to jump into them, hold them strictly, without any regard to the great question of whether it is honest or dishonest to do it. The Senator says we propose to deal justly with them, but we propose to say what justice is for them, and we propose that unless they will accept our definition of justice they shall have nothing at all; they shall be ruined and crushed in the attempt to enforce their views. I know of but one precedent for that. I have heard of a quarrel between two deaone precedent for that. I have heard of a quarrel between two deacons in a church, which grew very warm. Finally a revival of religion came along and roused them both up a little. One deacon got out his sleigh and drove over to the other's house very early in the morning. He said, "Deacon, I have come here to see you; I am feeling very badly; four or five years ago we got into a little difficulty about cattle breaking over division fences; we, either of us, could have survived the damage that was done without ever feeling it, but we went to law; we have been wrangling for five years; the lawyers have got our farms covered all over with mortgages; and that is not the worst of it, a quarrel and litigation between two deacons in the same church hinders the cause of our Saviour, and I have come over for I can't." [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is what the Senator wants the Government to do, to back out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered

The CHIEF CLERK. In lieu of the paragraph contained in lines 200 and 204 it is proposed to insert:

To pay land grant railroads on which the United States is entitled to transportation of troops and supplies free of charge for transportation for the Quartermaster-General's Department, $125,000: Provided, That the said railroads be paid only 50 per cent. of their schedule rates, and that said 50 per cent. if accepted by any railroad, shall be in full of all its demands for said services. And the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized to settle the accounts of the said railroads in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. Does that strike out the amendment already made on motion of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does.

Mr. HOAR. That was the perfection of the text, for which this is a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This does strike that out. The question is on the substitute offered by the Senator from Virginia, which has just been read.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I should like to have the amendment reported again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute will be reported again. The Chief Clerk again read the amendment offered by Mr. WITHERS. Mr. BLAIR. Before the vote is taken upon that amendment I call for the reading of the amendment which I offered and which will come up subsequently if this shall be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has submitted an amendment which will be reported for information and which if the substitute offered by the Senator from Virginia is voted down will then be in order.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is to strike out the entire clause, including the proviso, and insert:

To pay land grant railroads whatever sum the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due, the same to be not over 50 per cent. of a reasonable price for the same service if performed for a private individual or corporation by the same road: Provided, Such payment shall be accepted in full of all demand for said services, $125,000; but no payment shall be made in any disputed case until the dispute is settled.

Mr. WITHERS. So far as I can do so as the organ of the committee which authorized me to report the pending substitute, I desire to say that I am perfectly willing it shall be voted down. I would withdraw it if I could.

withdraw it if I could.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator be willing that I shall move this amendment as an amendment to his amendment?

Mr. WITHERS. No, sir.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I would favor the motion of the Senator from Virginia if it were so amended as to include the proper roads. It now includes all roads over which the United States is entitled to transportation. If it included the roads that come under the decision of the courts I should be inclined to favor his plan of payment. I think the payments ought to be made by the schedule rates; but his amendment includes all land-grant roads, no matter whether they come under the decision of the Supreme Court or not.

come under the decision of the Supreme Court or not.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, this question is now so mixed that I think we ought to have until to-morrow morning to disentangle it. There is a considerable amount of executive business to be attended to; and we shall not lose any time if we spend half an hour in executive session. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope we shall finish this bill now.

Mr. CARPENTER. It cannot be done.

Mr. MORRILL. We cannot do it to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 35; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the substitute of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WITHERS. I hope that substitute will be laid on the table.
I make that motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What will be the effect of that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides that this being an appropriation bill, the motion only carries the substitute itself, and does not affect the bill.

Mr. WITHERS. It comes under the rule of laying amendments to appropriation bills on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is an amendment to an amendment. I do not suppose it is strictly in order anyway, but I do not care about that. It is not quite so clear to my mind that that saving clause as to appropriation bills will save it. I wish the Chair would just look at the rule and see what it does say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The last clause of Rule XXIX is:

And any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. That covers this case. Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think it does, because there is no word in what is proposed to be stricken out that the Senate has not already voted in.

Mr. ALLISON. But the Senator from Virginia proposes to insert,

Mr. Allison. But the senator from virginia proposes to insert, and that makes an amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right. I do not care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides that the motion of the gentleman from Virginia is in order and that it will not carry with it anything except the substitute offered by himself. Is the Senate ready for the question on the motion to lay on the table?

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. Now, Mr. President, with the utmost kindness to my friend from New Hampshire, I move to lay his amendment on the table.

Mr. BLAIR. Is that motion in order?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is in order if the amendment is offered.

Mr. BROWN. If it has not been offered yet of course I am too soon with my motion.

Mr. BLAIR. Now, Mr. President, I move the adoption of the amendment, which has been read in the hearing of the Senate, to strike out the whole clause, including the proviso, and insert that which the Clerk will please read once more.

Mr. CARPENTER. Is that in order? That strikes out precisely what the Senate has put in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And something additional, as the Chair understands,

Mr. CARPENTER. Not a word, as I understand it. The proviso there, the Chair will bear in mind, has just been voted in. It was not a motion to strike it out, but it has been voted in, agreed to, and now that portion which the Senator moves to strike out does not contain a word that the Senate has not voted in.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator is mistaken. What I propose to strike out is all that has reference to the land-grant railroads as the bill

Mr. CARPENTER. That has all been put in by vote of the Senate.
Mr. BLAIR. It has been put in by the House of Representatives,

Mr. CARPENTER. Yes, it has been put in by the Senate.
Mr. BLAIR. Not in that form.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Nothing, I think, stands in this paragraph now that the Senate has not already voted into the bill. Therefore the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire is to strike out what the Senate has voted into the bill and nothing else, as far as I remember it. If there is any part of the original print left, then I think his motion is in order; otherwise it is not.
Mr. EATON. There is something else in the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. EATON. There is something else in the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CARPENTER. Oh, yes, but there is nothing he moves to strike out that the Senate has not already voted in.

Mr. EATON. I think not. Taking the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire as a whole, it is to strike out a certain other whole, and therefore, in my judgment, in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has decided that the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire is in order, because there are still in this section certain words which were in the critical bill: are still in this section certain words which were in the original bill; and now it will be reported to the Senate, and if the Chair is mistaken in that, the motion is not in order. It will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The proposed amendment is to strike out the part included from lines 200 to 204, inclusive, and insert in lieu therof:

To pay land-grant railroads whatever sum the Quartermaster's Department finds justly due, the same to be not over 50 per cent. of a reasonable price for the same service if performed for a private individual, or corporation by the same road: Provided, Such payment shall be accepted in full of all demands for said services, $125.000; but no payment shall be made in any disputed case until the dispute is settled.

Mr. BROWN. Now, Mr. President, I move to lay that on the table. Mr. CARPENTER. I want to know about the point of order, be-

Mr. CARPENTER. I want to know about the point of order, because that is pretty important.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has decided that there are words left, which were in the original text, untouched, and therefore the proposed substitute is in order.

Mr. CARPENTER. From that decision I appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin appeals The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decided that it was in

Mr. BROWN. My motion was to lay it on the table. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless it is in order there is nothing to lay on the table. The question must first be decided whether the motion is in order or not.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I beg the Chair's pardon. I did not understand that there was an appeal from the decision of the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has appealed from the decision of the Chair; and the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair be sustained?

the decision of the Chair be sustained?

Mr. HOAR. I understand that it is verified by an examination of the Clerk's record that the words "one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars," which were in the original bill, have never been affected by any motion. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] substitutes other words before and after them, but leaves the words "one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars." That is the way the Clerk has got it recorded.

Mr. CARPENTER. That ends the question, if it is so. I withdraw the apneal.

the appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no question of that. The words "one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars" remain.

Mr. CARPENTER. I understood that they had been stricken out, although they were also contained in the amendment which was so the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. BROWN. Now I renew my motion to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Now, before the subject drops, I would be glad to have the Senator in charge of the bill state whether he has a letter from the Auditor showing the method by which these accounts are made up; and if so, will he be kind enough to have it read at the

Mr. WITHERS. I will state, in reply to the Senator from Rhode Island, that I have such a letter, responding to certain interrogatories; but as the question has been disposed of, I will not take up time with it now.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I stated yesterday in debate that the schedule prices were the proper prices by which the accounts ought to be made up, and that the Quartermaster-General was not the proper accounting officer. This letter bears me out in both these statements, and I simply desired to have my position verified in that respect.

Mr. WITHERS. Will it not meet the purpose of the Senator to ask for the information when we come into the Senate and reach that

part of the bill?

Mr. BURNSIDE. I do not care about making any point about the matter. I simply wanted to show that I was right yesterday when I said the schedule rates were the proper rates upon which these settlements ought to be made up, and that the Quartermaster-General was not the proper auditing officer; that the Auditor was the auditing officer. I directed my remarks particularly to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison] at the moment. The Senator from Iowa is an old Senator; he has made a very creditable record, and he ought to be satisfied with it. When a young innocent like myself gets up to make a point, it is not very comfortable to be sat down upon in the way he is in the habit of sitting on me, and I just wanted a little bit of a chance to make a reasonable record. I am very modest; but when I am right I would like the Senator from Iowa to know it.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out from line 219 to line 226, in the following words:

And the unexpended balances under the several heads of appropriations for the

And the unexpended balances under the several heads of appropriations for the Quartermaster's Department for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1879, and June 30, 1880, are hereby reappropriated and made available for the use of said Department for like purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, to those for which they were originally appropriated.

Mr. WITHERS. The committee were of opinion that it was more judicious not to appropriate unexpended balances without specific judicious not to appropriate unexpended balances without specific information as to the amount of those balances, but rather to adhere to the principle adopted for several years past of refusing to vote unexpended balances and making specific appropriations. The amount, consequently, of several of the items in this bill has been increased beyond the sums fixed by the House bill in order to appropriate directly the amount rendered necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and read to the end of line 230.

Mr. SAUNDERS. As we are now closing up that part relating to the Quartermaster's Department, I wish to offer an amendment. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announced in the beginning of the consideration of this bill that the amendments of Committee on Appropriations would first be acted upon. It is the better mode of procedure. As soon as the bill is read through the Senator from Nebraska will be recognized to offer any amendment

Mr. WITHERS. There are amendments of the committee yet.
Mr. VOORHEES. I desire to offer an amendment at the proper time. Mr. WITHERS. It will be in order when we get through the committee's amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators' amendments will be in order as soon as the amendments of the committee shall have been disposed of.

Mr. SAUNDERS. With that understanding, I will let it pass.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations for the Ordnance Department, in line 284, after the provision appropriating $300,000 for the manufacture of arms at national armories, to insert:

Provided. That not more than $50,000 of this amount may be expended by the Secretary of War in the manufacture or purchase of magazine guns, to be selected by a board of officers to be appointed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. WITHERS. It will probably be necessary to give a word of explanation there. The Chief of the Ordinance Department was before the committee and asked for an appropriation of $100,000 in order to purchase or manufacture magazine guns for introduction in practical use in the field. The committee were of opinion that on the testimony before them of the efficacy of the small number of those guns which had been furnished and had been used that it was an experiment which it would probably be well to make, and they therefore authorized the Secretary of War in his discretion to take $50,000 of the appropriation for the manufacture of arms at the national armories, in order that it might be used in the manufacture or purchase of magazine guns to be approved by a board selected by the Secretary of War.

Mr. DAWES. I do not object to the appropriation of $50,000 for this purpose, but it should not be taken out of the $300,000 approprithis purpose, but it should not be taken out of the $300,000 appropriated for the armories. The estimates are $500,000 for the armories, and the need of the guns that are manufactured at those armories is very great at this time. The Ordnance Department need a much larger sum than $300,000. These $50,000 should be in addition to that, rather than taken out of that. It seems to me that diminishing the amount for the armories to $250,000 would cause a disbandment of the whole work in the armories at the end of six or eight months, $500,000 being what is necessary to keep the armories at work and keep the skilled workmen from being discharged and scattered. The reduction of $250,000 would cause at the end of six months an entire disbandment of the armories. If the committee would consent to strike out the word "of" there and say "in addition to," then the armories would be cut down from $500,000 to $300,000, and not to $250,000.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator is simply mistaken in the capacity of the works as at present organized. They are organized upon a basis of an expenditure of $300,000 only, instead of $500,000. In addition to that, if the argument in favor of the magazine guns be sustained by the result of actual experience in the field, it is very evident that the old gun will be entirely superseded, and it is consequently useless to continue the manufacture of large numbers to be accumulated there and subsequently discarded as unfit for use. In order that the experiment may be fully made, we authorize, but do not require, the Secretary of War in his discretion to use $50,000 of the amount appropriated for the manufacture of small-arms to the manufacture or purchase of this particular class of arms, to be tested by actual use in the field and to be selected by a board of officers. Mr. DAWES. Am I mistaken in saying that the estimates are for

Mr. WITHERS. The estimates are very much larger than that, if my recollection is right, and have been for years, running up to $500,000 or $1,000,000.

Mr. DAWES. According to my recollection, the estimates are $500,000. The Senator says the work has been organized on the basis of $300,000. It has not been organized on that basis. It has been forced on to that basis the last year by cutting down the appropriation of $500,000 to $300,000, and the consequence has been that workmen have been discharged down to the number that can be kept for the $300,000. Now it is proposed to curtail that $300,000 in the face of the Ordnance Department still further, which will cause what I have stated to be the result—the further disbandment of the work in the armories. Still it is true that if the magazine gun is adopted there will be less need of guns manufactured at the armories; but the supply on hand at the armories at this moment is very small indeed, and the demand for them is quite pressing, especially for distribution among the States for the militia, and long before any magazine guns can be distributed the whole supply at the armories will be exhausted. be exhausted.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state that $300,000 is the maximum appro-Mr. WITHERS. I will state that $300,000 is the maximum appropriation, according to my recollection, that has been made for this particular service for several years past. Three hundred thousand dollars is the basis on which the proceedings of manufacture are going on at the armories, as I am informed by the Chief of Ordnance. We propose, therefore, to authorize the Secretary of War to divert, in his discretion, $50,000 of that amount. Of course, if the Secretary of War believes that it would be injurious to do so, there will be no change at all in the appropriation as it has been for the last few years.

Mr. DAWES. If the Secretary of War does not approve of the magazine gun, of course this $50,000 will not be expended at all; but if he does the armories lose that much. It may be proper that the magazine gun should be adopted; I do not oppose that; no one desires to prevent the introduction of the magazine gun into the service; but at the same time, and while that is before a board, it is not proper to out down the manufacture at the armories, and cut off the supply to the militia of the States and to the regular Army. I move, therefore, to strike out the word "of" in the amendment and insert the words "in addition to."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair). The Same

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HOAR in the chair.) The Senator from Massachusetts moves to amend the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BECK. Can the Senator from Massachusetts advise us what is the cost of a Springfield rifle?

Mr. DAWES. I have not that amount in my hands. I know that it is much less than the cost of manufacture in private armories.

Mr. BECK. I think it is about ten dollars a gun, is it not?

Mr. CARPENTER. I think fifteen to seventeen dollars.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know the exact amount. It has been demonstrated that the manufacture of guns in the armories can be carried on at a much less expense than in private manufactories, owing to a variety of reasons

Mr. BECK. My recollection is that the impression the committee got in some way was that there was a very large number of guns we had now that might be useless if there was a probability of a magazine gun being adopted. In that event $250,000 would make enough guns at $10 each to last till we got the magazine gun. It would not seem well to go into a very large manufacture until you determine whether the magazine gun will be an improvement.

Mr. LOGAN. I would like to ask the Senator does this mean a magazine musket?

Mr. BECK. No, sir; a rifle. We had the gun before us, and the Chief of Ordnance seemed to be very much impressed with it. It is in the committee-room now.

Mr. LOGAN. Does the Senator understand how the magazine is to be made? In the breech of the gun?

Mr. BECK. In the breech of the gun. We had it here. It looks like a double-barreled gun.

Mr. WITHERS. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me a word? There are several magazine guns which are competing for introduction into the Army, one of which only was presented to the consideration of the committee, and the committee declined to recommend any specific gun, but proposed to leave it to the discretion of a board of officers and the Secretary of War to select from the various magabe most likely to be effective.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not know whether it was left to a board or not; but a certain kind of magazine guns I do not think can be made to but a certain kind of magazine guns I do not think can be made to work well in time of war.

Mr. WITHERS. That is true.

Mr. LOGAN. If the magazine goes in the breech, I would not have them; they are not worth five cents.

Mr. DAWES. There is a great effort to secure such an arm as a magazine gun, and there is no doubt in my mind but that ultimately it will be secured; but as yet no member of the Ordnance Corps, no officer, is prepared to recommend any particular magazine gun. That is a matter in the future; but if you take $50,000 out of these $300,000 you reduce the armories to a basis that they cannot carry on their work for the year. That is my objection.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to say only a word in explanation of what I meant by my inquiry. Of course, I do not propose to make any opposition to the appropriation if it is thought proper; but so far as a magazine gun is concerned, if it is intended that it shall be a gun to fire continuously by turning the cartridge into the gun, I would much prefer a gun without a magazine for warfare. If you will put a magazine gun into the hands of a soldier carrying say ten charges, and give gun into the hands of a soldier carrying say ten charges, and give another one a gun that loads, and let him throw out and put the charge in, the magazine gun will fire off more ammunition without charge in, the magazine gun will fire off more ammunition without doing any execution than you can pay for. That is always the effect of magazine guns. If the charge is to be held in the stock of the gun I would not have it; there is danger, if you put the gun down on the ground, of an explosion; and if it is by a fine wire, as some of them are, for the purpose of putting the charge up and throwing it into the gun and shooting just as rapidly as a man can cock it, I would not have that for war. It may be very good for use in killing deer, but in war I would not have it for the reason I stated, that the waste of ammunition is far beyond anything you can imagine. When you give men who are excited fifteen shots to fire away as fast as they can cock the gun, they will exhaust all in a few minutes and be out of ammunition. I expect that is the experience of any man in the Army who ever saw the working of this kind of a gun. That is the reason I made the remark.

the Army who ever saw the working of this kind of a gun. That is the reason I made the remark.

I know some gentlemen are very fond of examining different patterns of guns and having examinations and so on. The best gun that ever was made up for war is a rifle-gun, where the soldier puts the cartridge in and fires the gun without having anything to throw the cartridge in so that he can fire rapidly. It is the best gun, does the most execution; it is the cheapest gun; it is the best arm ever invented for war. I will say no more than that. I would not give a dollar for the experiment of a megazine gun for war.

dollar for the experiment of a magazine gun for war.

Mr. BECK. The board of officers seem very anxious to try it, and the committee were willing they should make the experiment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Dawes] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. CARPENTER, (after having voted in the negative.) I voted, not recollecting for the moment that I was paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDonald] on all questions where, if he were present, he would vote differently from me. So the amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment was, after the word "continued," in line 293, to insert "during the next fiscal year;" and in line 294, before the word "report," to strike out "an annual;" so as to make the clause read:

United States testing-machine:
For caring for, preserving, using, and operating the United States testing-machine at the Watertown arsenal, $10,000: Provided. That the tests of iron and steel, and other materials, for industrial purposes shall be continued during the next fiscal year, and report thereof shall be made to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.
The reading of the bill was concluded.
Mr. SAUNDERS. I now propose the amendment that I sent to the Secretary's desk awhile ago to come in after line 230.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words proposed to be inserted

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of line 230 it is proposed to add:

For the erection of a building suitable for offices for headquarters of the Department of the Platte in Omaha, State of Nebraska, $30,000: Provided, That said sum shall not be expended until suitable grounds, to be approved by the commanding officer of said department, shall be furnished on which to erect said building, free of charge to the United States: And provided, That the Legislature of the State of Nebraska shall first relinquish to the United States all jurisdiction over

Mr. WITHERS. I would suggest to the Senator whether it would not be proper for him to reserve this amendment for the sundry civil bill, where such expenses are usually provided for, instead of cumberartment of the Platte in Omaha, State of Nebraska $30,000. Provided, That state and provided, That state and provided in the United States all furnished on which to erect said building, and to the United States all furnished on which to erect said building. The of charge to the United States: And provided, That the Legislature of the tate of Nebraska shall first relinquish to the United States all furnished on which to the United States all furnished on the United States all furnished on which to the United States all furnished on bill, where such expenses are usually provided for, instead of cumbering this bill with it now?

Mr. SAUNDERS. There would be no objection to that on my part if it were not for the fact that our Legislature is now in session in Nebraska, having about twenty-two business days to serve; and inasmuch as it will require legislative action to get the title perfected and our Legislature will not meet again for two years it is important that it shall be put on this bill. That is the reason I urge it now.

I will state that the papers in this case ought to have been here in time to have reached the committee; but owing to the fact that the Department wanted an estimate made by the commanding officer at Omaha, the papers had to be sent there and returned here, and they did not get back in time to go before the committee before the bill was reported to the House. We have the indorsement not only of the commander of the Division of the Platte, but we have also the indorsement of General Sheridan, the indorsement of the Quartermaster-General, and the indorsement of the Secretary of War, all asking for this, and stating also that it is done because it is the most economical way to dispose of the question, to erect buildings suitable for headquarters.

urges to postponing its consideration till the sundry civil bill can be very easily obviated. The Legislature can pass the act and authorize the governor to carry it out before the appropriation is made by Congress for that specific purpose, in view of its being made, the sundry civil bill being the bill on which it should be made. I do not want to antagonize the merits of the proposition; it was not considered by the committee; but I am disposed to think, from personal investigation I have made, that there is some merit in it. I think there will be no difficulty whatever in getting it into the sundry civil bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I understand this to be one of the privileged questions that come here under every circumstance of this kind; because the measure is recommended by a Department, it is therefore in order. If any one wishes to have the recommendations read, they can be. The Department want immediate action on it, because they are now, you might say, without a place for business. They cannot rent a place suitable for the purpose. If they could, they would have rented one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the papers from the Department had bet-

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the papers from the Department had better be read. I should like to vote for this if it is necessary; if it is not I should not; but I think there ought to be added to it a provision that this shall be a payment in full, that there shall not be anyon that this shall be a payment in full, that there shall not be anything further about it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will send the papers to the desk to be read.

Mr. WITHERS. Do I understand the Senator from Vermont to move an amendment that it shall be in full?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not yet; I may before morning. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Nebraska has not concluded his remarks. He has sent documents to the Senators to be read.

ments to the Secretary to be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to hear them.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Headquarters Department of the Platte,
Fort Omaha, Nebraska, December 31, 1830.

A careful examination of the within subject has led to the most positive conviction, on my part, that the ultimate expense caused to the Government by locating the headquarters Department of the Platte in the city of Omaha will be greatly less than by continuing them at this place.

The convenience for the better discharge of Government business by their establishment in the city of Omaha is so apparent as scarcely to need other remark than merely calling attention to it.

If the Government should build a headquarter building on some elegible and suitable site, as contemplated within, it is not an unreasonable expectation that such building, when no longer required for Government purposes, could be sold for a considerable advance over the cost of its construction.

I believe that whatever improvements are made at this place (Fort Omaha) will, if ever abandoned by the Government as being no longer required, be of little value.

if ever abandoned by the Government as being no longer required, but value.

The buildings originally constructed here, and now occupied by officers and men, notwithstanding the repairs which have been put upon them, have been, during the recent cold weather, almost uninhabitable. They were built, by contract, in so slovenly and careless a manner that they cannot be repaired so as to make them suitable for occupation.

As a matter of common humanity, it is unjust to require officers and men to live in such structures in so rigorous a climate. If the headquarters remain here, therefore, a much larger number of reasonably comfortable buildings will necessarily have to be erected at this place for the accommodation of headquarters officers.

If these headquarters are removed to town, the expenditures here will be proportionably much smaller.

There are ample means already available to erect new buildings sufficient for the accommodation of such a garrison as is contemplated for Fort Omaha.

GEORGE CROOK,

Brigadier-General, Commanding.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Here is a letter from the Quartermaster-General since that was written.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

I return the papers from the Omaha Board of Trade which were left at this office this morning.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the letter read.
Mr. SAUNDERS. I shall soon be through. That is the last paper I shall ask to have read.

Mr. EATON. Is there any estimate here? Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the letter. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Cierk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,

Washington City, January 13, 1881.

Sir: I have the honor to forward to the Senate Committee on Appropriations for their consideration a letter of the Quartermaster-General, setting forth his views in regard to the erection of a suitable building in the city of Omaha for the offices of the headquarters of the department of the Platte, and for the safety of the valuable records of that department. These views of the Quartermaster-General are in accordance with those of the department commander, General Crook, and of the Lieutenant-General of the Army, and have heretofore been recommended to Congress.

I approve the recommendation of the Quartermaster-General, and have the hon to ask that a suitable appropriation be made.

Very respectfully,

ALEX. RAMSEY,

ALEX. RAMSEY, Secretary of War.

Hon. Henry G. Davis, Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will state that I took it upon myself to say that the ground would be given free of charge to the Government, knowing that our people would be liberal enough to do so, so that the money may all be expended in the buildings and offices.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will $30,000 complete the buildings?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I think so. General Sheridan says that with that amount he can build them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should doubt that very much.
Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President—

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly, I will give way if the Senate is ready to vote. I do not think any other Senator wishes to say anything.

to adjourn

Mr. SAUNDERS. I ask for a vote on the question. It is a subject that I have explained. I could not get it before the committee. The papers only reached me day before yesterday, and I immediately submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to this bill, and I have followed it up, so that it is here, I think, as strongly indorsed as anything probably that is in the bill. I have no doubt that it is as strongly indorsed as anything that we have acted upon to-day.

Mr. BECK. I do not know that I can, but if I can I desire to make a point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky will state his point of order.

his point of order.

Mr. BECK. It is that this is not estimated for by any Department,

Mr. BECK. It is that this is not estimated for by any Department, not recommended by any standing committee, and has never been before the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the impression of the Chair that the point of order comes too late.

Mr. BECK. I have been waiting to hear what the case was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska moved the amendment, and without objection proceeded to discuss it. Having explained it slightly, the Senator from Virginia rose and suggested to the Senator from Nebraska that it would be better to be offered to another bill adding to his suggestion that he had examined gested to the Senator from Nebraska that it would be better to be offered to another bill, adding to his suggestion that he had examined this matter, and for himself, without speaking for any other person, considered there was some merit in it. The Senator from Nebraska then proceeded to discuss the matter, and during his discussion the Senator from Vermont asked to have any communication from the War Department which he had in his possession read. It was not read with the view of determining the point of order in the beginning, but the debate had proceeded, and proceeded upon the merits, without any objection being taken. The Chair will submit the question whether the point of order now is valid to the Senate, if the Senator from Kentucky desires.

tion whether the point of order now is valid to the Senate, it the Senator from Kentucky desires.

Mr. BECK. I will only state in this connection that when the Senator from Virginia made the suggestion that the amendment belonged to the sundry service bill and not to this bill, expressions were made all around me that perhaps the Senator from Nebraska had estimates that would bring it within the rule, and I waited to see whether there were such estimates as would bring it within the rule. The moment the reading of the papers was concluded and I thought the amendment did not come within the rule, admitting that I do not know much about rules, I made the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is under the impression, subject of course to having the matter determined by the Senate if any Senator desires, that the discussion proceeded upon the merits of the amendment so far that the point of order is not now valid.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WITHERS. Where is the rule of order, I ask in that connection? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island to withdraw the motion for a moment in order that I may make an inquiry.

Mr. BURNSIDE. If I can get the floor as soon as the Senator is through, I will yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island withdraws the motion to adjourn.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to ask the Chair under what rule of the Senate it is that he decides that it is too late to make the point of order, the custom of the Senate here having been, according to my order, the custom of the Senate here having been, according to my recollection, that a point of order against an amendment to an appropriation bill may be raised at any time during its consideration? I know such has been the practice.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Always.

The PRESIDING OFFCER. The Chair has not decided the question. The Chair stated his impression, and said that he would submit the question to the Senate if any Senator desired. If the Senator from Virginia desires, the Chair will submit the question to the Senate, Is the objection that the amendment is out of order now valid? Mr. WITHERS. I prefer to have the ruling of the Chair first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will rule, if the Senator prefers.

Mr. WITHERS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that a point of order that an amendment is not in order cannot be taken after discussion has proceeded upon the merits of the amendment.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Now I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] why he proposes in one of these resolutions that the Committee on Ways and Means shall usurp the authority of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The proper time for the gentleman's inquiry, when I shall be happy to answer it, will be when these resolutions are taken up for consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WARNER. I give notice that I shall move an amendment to that resolution.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The present proposition is simply to refer these resolutions to the Committee of the Whole.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee of the Whole House

REFUNDING BILL.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The call of committees having been

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The call of committees having been gone through with, I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the refunding bill.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask the gentleman from New York to yield to me for a moment for the purpose of asking unanimous consent.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I would gladly yield to my friend from Virginia, but there are twenty or thirty other gentlemen who desire to make the same request, and it is evident if I yield to all it will consume a great deal of valuable time.

Mr. HUNTON. I withdraw my request.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. My desire is to get through with the refunding bill at the earliest possible moment. I insist on the question being put on my motion to go into committee.

being put on my motion to go into committee.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committe of the Whole House on the state of the Union,

Mr. COVERT in the chair. The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I hope the Chair will state the precise ondition of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. Just prior to the rising of the committee yesterday the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anderson] submitted a parliamentary inquiry as to the status of the substitute offered by him at an early stage in the consideration of this bill. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Kansas that since the adjournment of the House yesterday he has examined the question raised by the gentleman, and finds no reason to depart from the determination previously reached in reference to the question submitted. The status of the matter at the time of the submission of the substitute was this: the original bill of the committee was pending. To that bill the gentleman from New York having it in charge submitted an amendment in the first section. That amendment was further amended amendment in the first section. That amendment was further amended by a proposition coming from the gentleman from Ohio. It was at that juncture the gentleman from Kansas submitted his substitute. Rule XIX provides that to an original proposition two amendments shall be in order, and after the submission of those two amendments a substitute shall then be in order. The Chair holds from the phraseology of the rule that the word "substitute" in the rule refers not to an amendment, but to a substitute for the entire proposition. The rule goes on to state, further, that on the disposition of the original question and the amendments, a substitute shall then be in order, and that the substitute may be once amended. The Chair, after a review of the question and a quite close examination, adheres to the opinion expressed at a prior stage of the discussion, and holds the substitute of the gentleman from Kansas to be not now in order, and that the pending proposition is the amendment of the gentleman and that the pending proposition is the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, on which discussion has been exhausted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to amend the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Kan-as to rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise merely for the purpose of saying I submit of course to the decision of the Chair, and wish now only to give notice that when the section has been completed I shall then seek the floor for the purpose of offering a substitute to the section to accomplish the object I have in view.

Mr. TOWNSLIPED of Ulicair.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move to amend the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by striking out "600" and inserting "400," so it will read, if my amendment should be adopted, to embrace an issue of $400,000,000 of bonds instead of $600,000,000, and I would follow that up by moving to strike out $200,000,000 from the original bill and providing for the issue of $200,000,000 of Treasury notes instead.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania provides for the issuance of $650,000,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Then I move to strike out "650" and insert "400."

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will yield for a moment, as I would like the gentleman from Pennsylvania to explain his amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I am willing that the gentleman may have an opportunity of explaining it.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I suggest, then, to the gentleman from Illinois that inasmuch as the gentleman from Pennsylvania made no remarks whatever upon his amendment on yesterday, or explained its provisions in any way, and as it appears to be a novel proposition to make these two issues of bonds, that I understand being the amendment and the only amendment offered of that character, I would like to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania upon the ques-

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I am willing to yield the floor on condition that I may take it as soon as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has concluded.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Mr. Chairman, I have never been able to clearly understand the reason for the distinction between bonds by name, as representing the indebtedness of the Government, and the Treasury notes by name representing also the indebtedness of the Government, provided, of course, that they were alike in other respects as to the rate of interest and their time of redemption. My respects as to the rate of interest and their time of recemption. My proposition was offered with a view to simplifying the bill, to make them entirely of one description and call the issue bonds, and not call them bonds and Treasury notes.

Mr. WARNER. One difference the gentleman from Pennsylvania will observe, is that bonds have coupons attached and Treasury cer-

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Then I would favor the choice being given to the holder of the indebtedness to say whether he would have registered or coupon bonds. And, in addition, if you place them as Treasury notes without coupons or perhaps registration, they might possibly in that case enter into the circulating medium of the country.

Mr. WARNER. Not if limited to $50 as a minimum.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The difference between the Treasury notes and the bonds goes to the extent that heretofore Treasury notes have been used by the Government for temporary purposes, always running but a very short period, and so far as I am aware in o instance have they borne coupons or been placed in the attitude to enable them to be registered. The law applying to the registration of United States bonds is applicable solely to bonds and not to Treasury notes.

Now, the importance of the inquiry which I have addressed to the gentleman from Pennsylvania is this: if the time or option for the redemption of these Treasury notes is a very short period, why then they will bear no coupons, and this large volume of six hundred and odd millions of dollars, no portion of which is registered, will go into the market. Therefore if there be any reason in the mind of the gentleman from Pennsylvania which has not yet been explained for offering this amendment I would like very much to hear it, in order offering this amendment I would like very much to hear it, in order that we may know the necessity for making a change from the historical practice of the Government in that regard.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I do not understand the gentleman from New York as objecting to the latter portion of the amendment, but only to the point which he now suggests. I have no objection to a modification of the amendment. I will therefore modify my amendment so that it shall relate only to the first part and allow the Treasury notes to remain as at present in the hill

Treasury notes to remain as at present in the bill.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to amend by saying bonds or Treasury notes.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I propose to modify the amendment in that way

ment in that way.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentlemen who propose to discuss this bill will take position in the Hall further back, in order that the committee may be able to hear them. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot dictate to members what position they shall take in addressing the committee, but the Chair can insist that no business shall be transacted until a reasonable degree of quiet and order is restored and preserved in the committee.

Mr. HAYES. Before the gentleman from Illinois proceeds, I would like to have the amendment as modified by the gentleman from Penn-like to have the amendment as modified by the gentleman from Pennsylvania read, so that we may know what we are talking about.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed in line 15 to amend by inserting the words "or certificates," and in line 16 to strike out $500,000,000 and insert $650,000,000, and also notes in the amount of $200,000,000, bearing interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States, after two years, and payable in ten years from the date of issue; but not more than $40,000,000 of said notes shall be redeemed in any one fiscal year, and the particular notes to be redeemed from time to time shall be determined by lot, under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury shall proceed the secretary of the Treasury shall proce

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MILLS. Whose amendment is that which has just been read?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WARNER. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania a mere verbal amendment. The next line reads "bonds or notes." I suggest that in place of "notes" the word "certificates" be inserted. Mr. MILLS. Do I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to provide that not more than $40,000,000 shall be paid annually?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That is not a part of my amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I so understood from the reading.
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I did not modify it in that way.
Mr. MILLS. From the reading of the Clerk I judge that to be a part of his amendment.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The Clerk has not read the amendment as I modified it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to strike out "$650,000,000" and insert "$400,000,000," and in lines 20 and 21 to strike out "$200,000,000" and insert "$300,000,000."

Mr. MILLS. Are these amendments offered to the original bill or to the substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. To the original bill, as the Chair understands.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday several gentlemen across the Chamber indulged in apprehensions that if this gentlemen across the Chamber indulged in apprehensions that if this funding bill was adopted in its present condition, providing for 3 per cent. bonds, that the national banks would go out of existence and surrender their circulation. I desire to controvert that proposition. There is no probability that the national banks will surrender their circulation even if we were to reduce the interest to 2 per cent. Why should they surrender their circulation? If the entire amount of bonds deposited by the national banks to-day were only drawing 3 per cent. they would be reaping a harvest of profit upon their circulation amounting to over seven million dollars annually. Why should they surrender what is producing them such a large income merely upon the bonds deposited as a basis of security to the Treasury for its guarantee of the redemption of their notes?

The only tax these bonds pay on their circulation is 1 per cent. Now, as their circulation is about three hundred and twenty millions and their bonds to secure this circulation is about three hundred and sixty millions, their statement in this regard would be thus:

sixty millions, their statement in this regard would be thus:

Interest at 3 per cent. on their bonds $10,800,000 Deduct 1 per cent. tax on circulation..... 3, 200, 000

Profit from the Treasury

But in truth they hold over one hundred and forty-five millions of four and four-and-a-half percents. This large rate of interest being added to their profits would increase same to nearly nine millions. Again, sir, the national banks to-day hold advantage which is greater than the difference between 3 and 3½ per cent. They hold a monopoly upon the circulating medium of this country. It was remarked by the President-elect, I believe, during the last session of Congress that the power which held control over the circulation of the country was a dictator in its finances. He has aptly described the power of our national banking system. It is a dictator in the finances of this coun-

But, sir, national banks are drawing much larger profits from their circulation than the interest on the bonds deposited.

Mr. HEILMAN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My time is limited to five minutes, therefore I do not wish to yield. I hope my friend will not interrupt

Mr. HEILMAN. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman; I merely

Mr. HEILMAN. Ido not want to interrupt the gentleman; I merely want to ask him a question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I have not time in a five-minute speech, but perhaps I will yield to the gentleman further on.

Mr. Chairman, national banks are not limited in their profits on circulation solely to the amount of interest drawn on their bonds. They are using the national-bank notes for the purpose of loaning to the public, and make a large profit upon it. In addition to the interest on their bonds they are receiving from the business public from 6 to 8 per cent., and in many instances much higher rates by loaning the circulating medium that the Treasury furnishes to them free of any cost. Does any sensible person suppose that national banks will surrender this opportunity for profit and the power over the circulation of the country? tion of the country?

What is the true status of the question of circulation to-day? what is the true status of the question of circulation to-day? The amount of Treasury notes is limited. It can neither be expanded or contracted. But the national banks have unlimited power to increase or contract the circulating medium of the country, and they possess an exclusive monopoly in this respect. They have to-day about three hundred and twenty millions of circulation. There is nothing in the law that will prevent them from inflating it to five hundred millions or more or to contract it down to $50,000,000 or

Now, Mr. Chairman, my object in offering this amendment is to calm the fears of the friends of the national banks on this floor with regard to the contraction of the currency. If a 3 per cent. bond should drive national banks out of existence and their circulation should drive national banks out of existence and their circulation should be taken up this amendment would prevent a contraction of the currency because the three hundred millions of Treasury notes provided for in this amendment would be a good substitute and supply the place of the bank issues, and thereby contraction would be avoided.

Mr. REAGAN was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. Townshend, of Illinois.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I thank the gentleman from Texas. I wish, Mr. Chairman, to call attention further to the fact that national banks are doing a business of over twenty-one hundred million dollars upon a capital of $359,000,000. Add together all the resources of national banks as they have been stated to us in the report of the Comptroller of the Currency, embracing their bonds on deposit, the circulation used by them, and the deposits made with them, you will find that their resources exceed two billions one hundred willion.

Here is an immense resource for profit. It is the largest resource for profit of any business in existence. They are, in reality, doing a business upon a 10 per cent. investment, for 90 per cent. of the amount invested is issued to them in notes which are a free loan from the invested is issued to them in notes which are a free loan from the Treasury. The indorsement of the Treasury and their semi-official character has given them such power, prestige, and adignity exceeding that of private or State banks that they are thereby enabled to secure a much larger share of profits and business. I wish it understood that I am not an advocate of State banks of issue. I never want to see the old wild-cat system revived in this country. But while I am opposed to State banks of issue I am likewise an opponent of national banks of issue. I want no banks of issue, either Federal or State. What is the national-bank note? It is nothing more nor less than a Treasury note. It is a note issued by the Treasury through the bank and loaned to them without interest in order to enable them to make profit therefrom. If we must have a paper circulation, I insist that the Government should supply it, as was advocated by Jefferson and Calhoun, a Treasury note receivable for dues to the Government.

Government.

Five minutes is too short a time in which to make a speech on this subject, but I must call attention to the fact that the advocates of national banks constantly throw into our teeth the assertion that the national banks constantly throw into our teeth the assertion that the banks are paying enormous taxation on account of their circulation, and for that reason are a blessing to the people.

Take this report of the Comptroller of the Currency, and what does it show upon this point? That from 1864, the year of their creation, down to this year the national banks have only paid $45,000,000 in taxation upon their circulation. How much have they drawn from the Treasury on this account in the shape of interest? They have drawn from the Treasury during their existence over two hundred and fifty million dollars. So, then, it will be seen, sir, the national banks have been profited over two hundred million dollars upon their circulation. If you will add together, Mr.-Chairman, all the taxes that they have paid to the Federal Government, including the taxes upon their capital stock, the taxes upon their deposits, the taxes upon their circulation, it will not exceed $100,000,000, whereas they have drawn from the Treasury over two hundred and fifty million dollars.

dollars.

Briefly, then, my object in offering this amendment is to put it into the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to substitute for national-bank circulation a currency equally as good as it, being the same Treasury note provided in the bill, to the extent of $300,000,000, to be issued directly from the Treasury and not through the banks. If, then, national banks scorn our 3 per cent. bonds and seek to contract the volume of the currency by retiring their circulation they will be foiled by the people in their use of these Treasury certificates, for it will be in their power to make use of these Treasury notes as a circulating medium.

will be folied by the people in their use of these Treasury certificates, for it will be in their power to make use of these Treasury notes as a circulating medium.

Before I sit down, let me say further that I read in the Baltimore Sun this morning an account of an interview with one who is styled "a prominent republican member of the Committee on Ways and Means," who, when speaking of the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Randall] to compel the national banks in the future to take these 3 per cent, bonds when they call for a continuance of or for new issue of circulation, denounced it as the proposition of a pirate. Sir, if there be any piracy connected with the national-banking system in any way, I would have you and the country understand that it has been practiced by many of the national banks, and not by those who advocate measures of reform in that system which are of advantage to the people.

It is claimed that the bank bill is a good currency. Why is it so? Because it has the indorsement or guarantee of the Treasury of the United States. As I said, when debating this question during the last session, if the Treasury would indorse the note of a pauper it would circulate alongside of the bank note and be as good.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment has been exhausted.

exhausted.

Mr. MILLS.

Mr. MILLS. I move to strike out the last word. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indi-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MYERS.]

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Chairman, in listening to the debate on this question I have been struck with profound surprise at the readiness with which some gentlemen here have accommodated themselves to the influences which seem to surround them, and the facility with which they forget the utterances made before their constituents under circumstances of a wholly dissimilar if not antagonistic character. In the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Hurd] on Saturday we were startled by the bold declaration—

I do not believe that prosperity in business in any country can long continue unless there is resumption of specie payments. And I confidently say, from all the information I have been able to gather on this subject, that the specie payment now claimed in this country is delusion and a snare. It is based not upon specie honestly coined, but upon false and fraudulent silver dollars, which are untruthfully coined every day from the mint.

I ask if these silver dollars are not coined in exact conformity with a law passed by a vote of two-thirds of each House of Congress, under the provision of the Constitution which says "Congress shall have power to coin money and regulate the value thereof?" And I am therefore at a loss to discover how it can be considered either fraudulently or dishonestly coined, as the gentleman so savagely declares. But he further says:

It is based upon legal-tender paper currency, which has the power of discharging debts.

Mr. Chairman, there can be no specie payment unless nothing but specie can pay debts. When you have a paper currency usurping all the functions of money, discharging all debts, you have no "specie payments." These startling and terrible declarations were hailed with applause and delight by the advocates of an exclusively gold standard on the other side of this House, and it may appear a little cruel to disturb their hilarity now by asking their attention for a moment to the same high authority, in a speech made by him at Fremont, Ohio, September 6, 1878, to the power and eloquence of which it is said he is indebted for his seat on this floor. I read from a copy which I now hold in my hand, as follows: which I now hold in my hand, as follows:

It was one of the risks of the bondholder that the coin might depreciate in value. If a man agrees to pay a debt in so many bushels of wheat, the contract is kept,by paying the wheat, whether it be worth one dollar or ten cents a bushel, so the bonds could be discharged in coin dollars, whether they were worth one hundred cents

Immediately after the assembling of Congress a law was passed remonetizing silver, which now stands upon the statute-book, notwithstanding the veto of the President. The silver dollar can now pay the bonded debt, and the contract is again as it was made by the statute in the first instance. But much still remains to be done upon this point. There are restrictions upon the coinage of silver which should be removed. The demand should be for unrestricted coinage of silver as of gold. Let that be one of the watchwords of the canvass. Let the people refuse to be satisfied until there is perfect freedom of coinage of silver and the relations of bondholders to the Government are fixed, as was manifestly intended when the bonds were issued and the money was received.

I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, that these extracts do not afford the gentlemen on the other side of this Hall the same pleasure they derived from the speech on Saturday; but I assure them they are all from the same luminous and consistent author, and I am quite sure if they will give close attention they will be greatly edified before I am through. It is good reading, and I commend it to their careful consideration. From the same speech I again quote:

The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the Congress has power to make its notes a legal tender in payment of all debts. It is the highest judicial tribunal in the land. From its decision there is no appeal. The whole country has acquiesced in it, and is bound to accept it. I know that some say that the decision is only that Congress can issue legal-tenders during war. I do not so understand it. There is no such limitation expressed in the decision itself, and, indeed, such a one would be an absurdity, for it would lead to the proposition that a constitution which is a delegation of power for all periods means one thing in time of war and another thing in time of peace. I therefore accept the decision of that court as settling the constitutionality of greenbacks and the power of Congress to issue them whenever in its judgment the public interests or emergency may require.

It has been charged I voted against the repeal of the resumption act. Nothing can be further from the truth; I introduced a bill in Congress for its repeal at the only time when the measure came directly before the House for its action; I advocated its repeal in the cancus of the House, in private conversation, upon the stump, and in democratic State conventions, and I expect to do everything in my power in that direction until the measure is wiped from the statute-book.

The democratic platform on the currency question is antipodal to the republican on the currency question. It proposes the full remonetization of silver with unlimited right of coinage, the repeal of the resumption act, and the substitution of the greenback for national-bank notes. It opposes contraction of the currency, forced resumption, the further issuing of bonds for the redemption of greenbacks, and the increase of the public debt by legislation. It looks to the highest interest of the whole people, and not to that of the bondholders alone. It opposes a disturbance of the volumes of the currency, and maintains that it shall be kept equal to the demands of trade. * * * Read, my friends, the Ohio platform, which points out the evils and proposes the remedy, a platform which I heartily indorse, and whose principles I shall carry so far as I can into the administration of public affairs, if I should be elected to Congress in this canvass.

What new lights, may I ask, have flooded this gentleman's intellectual cavern that he now discovers that this silver coinage, so ardently and ably advocated then, has now become a false and fraudulent issue, and the greenbacks, declared to be a legal-tender by the Supreme Court, which the gentleman accepted as full settlement of the question, now declared by him as usurping the functions of money? I know not, nor has he troubled himself to inform us from whence he derived his new inspiration. His conversion seems to have been each derived his new inspiration. His conversion seems to have been as sudden and almost as miraculous as that of Paul of Tarsus, though, unlike Paul, without repentance for his sins. That some magical indunke Faul, without repentance for his sins. That some magical influence has taken possession of his mind seems clear; but whether the magician came from the direction of classic Mentor or the genial atmosphere of a national-bank parlor we are left to conjecture; but, whatever source, he seems to have so metamorphosed his victim that whatever source, he seems to have so metamorphosed his victim that we are lost in doubt as to his identity, requiring the utmost stretch of credulity to recognize the brilliant orator of Fremont in the conspicuous and whimsical member from the region of the great lakes.

Mr. Chairman, with my present light on the pending bill I shall cast no vote that will in any way take from the people their sovereign right to pay the bonds that are now coming within the option of the Government whenever in their judgment the business interests of the country will permit.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. TOWNSHEND,] who states that the national banking system is the greatest monopoly that ever exist on this county, if there is any law, either State or national, that is more free in its action upon all classes of people, that is less a monopoly, than the law in regard to the national banking system? monopoly, than the law in regard to the national banking system? Any five or ten men, who have a sufficient amount of money to enable them to get together the sum of $50,000, can engage in the banking business. If it should be desirable the national banking currency in that way can be swelled to one or two thousand million of dollars, if a sufficient amount of capital is brought forward for that purpose. There is no corporation in existence to day that is governed by laws so free and so much in the interest of the people as is the national

Another thing. The gentleman tells us that he is not in favor of wild-cat money of a State banking system. He also tells us that he is not in favor of a national banking system. He does not say that he is in favor of greenbacks as the currency upon which we should depend to transact the business of the country. We may infer that he is either a greenbacker or else in the situation of the individual in a story which I will relate.

story which I will relate.

A man went into a grocery store and ordered a pound of crackers. Having eaten one of them he saw some cider there, and asked the groceryman if he could trade the crackers for the cider. The groceryman said he could do it. The man gave up the crackers and took a quart of cider and drank it, and then started out. "Look here," said the grocer, "you have not paid me for that cider." "Yes I have," said the man. "How?" "Why, I gave you the crackers for the cider." "I guess that is so," said the grocer, "but you have not paid me for the crackers." The man replied, "I did not eat the crackers; you have them." "Well," said the grocer, "I suppose that is so; but look here, young man, I don't want any more of your custom." [Laughter.] It seems to me that when people take a position in opposition to national banks upon the ground which the gentleman takes, if they will take into account the fact that any set of men can take $50,000 in greenbacks and go into the business of private banking, paying I per cent. on their deposits, and a like number of men can invest the same amount of money in bonds and go into national banking, paying same amount of money in bonds and go into national banking, paying the local taxes, the tax of 1 per cent. on deposits, and 1 per cent. on circulation, they will see that at the end of the year those who have invested their greenbacks in private banking, at the rate of interest allowed by the law of the State, will have made more money than those who engaged in national banking with the like amount.

We are told that if these 3 per cent. bonds are made the basis of the national banks, the bankers of this country will continue to issue the national banking currency. I believe they will not do so for the

the national banks, the bankers of this country will continue to issue the national-banking currency. I believe they will not do so, for the taxes they will have to pay will more than counterbalance the amount they would get from these bonds, and they can escape those taxes by withdrawing their circulation and going into the private banking

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. MILLS. I move to fill up the blank in the substitute offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] with "one year" as the period for the beginning of the option, and "ten years" as the time for the maturing of the bonds. That portion of the provision will then read:

vision will then read:

These bonds shall be redeemable at the pleasure of the Government at any time after one year and payable in ten years.

Mr. WARNER. That is right.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. How many amendments can be pending at the same time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the proposition of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] to be in the nature of a proposition simply to perfect a pending amendment.

Mr. MILLS. To fill a blank.

The CHAIRMAN. Simply to fill a blank in the amendment. The Chair feels disposed to entertain that proposition as bein; in perfection of a pending amendment.

Chair feels disposed to entertain that proposition as bein; in perfection of a pending amendment.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state briefly my reasons for moving to fill this blank with "one year." It is contemplated, I believe, by the mover of this proposition, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Randall] whom I do not now see present, to fill the blank with "one year." We shall have no revenues to apply to the payment of the debt until one year. We shall then have $100,000,000 or more of surplus revenue lying in the Treasury, which under the present form of the amendment, we cannot apply to the payment of the debt until the expiration of two years. In other words, $100,000,000 of indebtedness will continue to bear interest at 3 per cent., making $3,000,000 for one year after we shall have the money in the Treasury to extinguish that amount of debt. I am satisfied that the gentleman from Pennsylvania will have no objection to my amendment; indeed I am told that yesterday he said he would consent to this insertion of one told that yesterday he said he would consent to this insertion of one

Now, in reference to fixing the ultimate time of payment at ten years, I wish to say a word. I desire that the time fixed for the extinguishment of this $600,000,000 of indebtedness shall arrive before the maturity of the $250,000,000 of bonds falling due in 1891, so that when 1891 arrives there shall be no occasion for refunding those bonds. Unless there is a period fixed within which this $600,000,000 must absolutely be paid, the payment may be deferred; the Government may not call the bonds, or it may call a portion only, iustead of the whole, so that when 1891 arrives the whole of these refunded 3 per cent. bonds will not have been extinguished, and then we shall be met by demand for the refunding of the $250,000,000 of 4½ per cent. bonds. I want in this refunding bill to-day to commit the Government to the absolute extinguishment of this $600,000,000 before 1891, so that when those 4½ per cent. bonds, to the amount of $250,000,000, mature in 1891, the hands of the Government shall be untied and we shall be prepared to begin to extinguish them.

untied and we shall be prepared to begin to extinguish them.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, addressed the committee. [See Appen-

Mr. HURD. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to take any further part in this debate, and should have said nothing more upon the questions presented in this discussion had it not been for the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Myers] on this floor a few moments ago. He has seen fit to call attention to a speech which I delivered at Fremont, Ohio, in the campaign of 1878, in which he discovers, as he thinks, inconsistencies between the views there enunciated and those uttered by me the other day on the floor of this House. I am sorry the gentleman did not have opportunity to read the whole of the speech to the House, for if the House had listened to it and the gentleman had read it to the end it would have been seen that every word which I uttered here in the speech last week is perfectly consistent with the positions I took in that canvass.

I am glad of the opportunity of undeceiving many people who have thought that I have in my campaign in Northwestern Ohio pursued one course on the money question, and on the floor of this House another. The position I took in that speech and which I maintain now is that the demonetization of silver worked a great injustice to now is that the demonetization of silver worked a great injustice to now is that the demonetization of silver worked a great injustice to the Government by changing the terms of the contract, and by disabling the Government from paying the bonds in silver. I therefore urged the remonetization of silver, and said in the very extract which was read by the gentleman that silver should be remonetized so that it should be money as gold; that there should be unrestricted coinage of silver; that silver and gold should stand upon precisely the same basis, and that there should be an honest dollar in silver as there is an honest dollar in gold. an honest dollar in gold.

And that is the doctrine I maintained here all through the discussion of the Warner bill. I voted to put four hundred and sixty grains, I think it was, into the silver dollar. I advocated the remonetization of silver, but I advocated an honest remonetization, which should put into the silver dollar enough silver to make it one hundred cents in interioric probaintrinsic value.

And I repeat what I said the other day, that the specie resumption of this country based on silver dollars falsely coined is a delusion and a snare. A man takes eighty-eight cents to the Treasury of the United States, and the business of the Government is to weigh it and to honestly certify its value; but yet, under the laws of the United States for the coinage of silver, the Government is required to declare that to be one hundred cents which is only eighty-eight cents

Mr. WARNER rose

Mr. HURD. I cannot yield.

Mr. WARNER. I expected it.
Mr. HURD. I say when such dishonest certification of silver is practiced by the Government of the United States, any prosperity based upon it is delusive, and any resumption resting upon it will fail.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I suppose from what I have heard of the discussion on this floor on both sides of the Chamber that it is honestly the intention of the House to pass some kind of refunding bill. Supposing that to be the case, I am safe, I presume, in believing it to be also the intention of the House to pass a refunding bill which when passed will amount to something on the part of the Government

Now, sir, two elements enter into any bond which is to be available and they are the time for which they are to run and the rate of interest which they are to bear. It appears to be the opinion of a good many gentlemen here, earnestly entertained, and I presume honestly expressed, that you must get the shortest time and the lowest rate of interest. And it has been asserted with a great deal of assurance that a 3 per cent. bond with one year's option on the part of the Government can be floated. I am not repeating anything original when I say the lamp of experience is the best light by which to guide our footsteps in the future, nor am I saying anything particularly new when I say that, with one or two exceptions, never in the history of the financial world has a 2 percent head they footsted at the saying anything particularly new when I say that, with one or two exceptions, never in the history of the financial world has a 2 percent head they footsted at the saying anything particularly new when I say that the say that the saying anything particularly new when I s

I say that, with one of two exceptions, never in the instory of the manicial world has a 3 per cent. bond been floated at par.

I sought to get the floor immediately after the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Mills,] but failed to do so, as I wished particularly to refer to the point that time is an element in the matter. That such is the case you need not take my opinion or that of any other man. It is indeed not a matter of opinion, not a matter of surmise, not a matter of conjecture, because we have the evidence of the fact to-day in reference to our own bonds. We have a 4 per cent. bond selling at 113, because it has twenty-seven years torun. We have a $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. bond, which has only ten years to run, at $112\frac{1}{2}$. These facts are worth a million of speeches such as can run, at 112½. These facts are worth a million of speeches such as can be made on this floor or anywhere else. It is not a theory, but it is a fact. It is occurring while we are engaged here in this Chamber in a discussion affecting the welfare of the people; it is occurring today in the money centers of the world that a bond with a less rate of interest, but with a longer time to run, is worth more than a bond interest, but with a longer time to run, is worth more than a bond with a greater rate of interest and a shorter time to run.

According to any arithmetic any gentleman can apply to a bond bearing 4½ per cent., selling at 112, would give for a 3 per cent. bond, with the same time—not of one year's option, but of the same time—seventy-five cents on the dollar. A bond of 4 per cent. selling at 113 would give you 84% per cent. With the same rate exactly, with the same people to buy it, with the same government to issue it, and the same market upon which to put your bond for sale, this result would follow.

Now, you propose not only to do that, but to give the Government one year's option. I would be willing to assent to that if you could sell the bond. But I do not want this Government to put a bond upon the market that cannot be sold at all, or, if sold, must be sold below par. You do not want this Government, which is now standing upon the very pinnacle of financial power and ability among the nations of the world, to put bonds upon the market that will not sell, thereby destroying that credit which cannot now be questioned.

thereby destroying that credit which cannot now be questioned.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Chairman, I do not profess to be like my distinguished friend from Ohio—one of the accredited apostles of finance; but, sir, with all the lights which I have been enabled to glean from the discussion on this subject, I cannot sympathize with those gentlemen who, after having determined to fund the debt, contend that this generation shall bear all the burden of paying it. Now, sir, if we judge of the future of our industrial development by its past, it is quite clear that twenty years hence the people of this country will be much better able to pay this large debt than they will be ten years hence or two years hence. I have generally, sir, been opposed to any idea of refunding the debt; but if it is determined to borrow this money, it seems to me a question that will not admit of discussion that we ought to borrow it on the best possible terms; and when we come to consider to borrow it on the best possible terms; and when we come to consider that question we are also called upon to consider not only our ability to pay, but the character of the debtor as well. What is the character of the debtor?

Mr. Chairman, we stand to-day in the attitude like that of the farmer who, vigorous, strong, young, buys on long time and at a low rate of interest a valuable tract of land, by the proper cultivation of which, and before the debt becomes due, he knows he will be enabled not only to pay the amount originally agreed upon to be paid, but to extend his farm by buying another.

As a people we are precisely in a similar condition. Twenty years hence it will be far easier for our people to pay the debt than it will be to pay it ten years hence. Gentlemen have spent a great deal of eloquence illustrating the question of extending the time of payment of these bonds, and about the impropriety of saddling posterity with them. I may ask, in the language of the distinguished Irish member, Sir Boyle Roche, "What has posterity ever done for us?" We have done a great deal for posterity, and posterity will be in a much better condition and far more able to pay the bonds than we are.

Mr. Chairman, it is impossible for the imagination to conceive the progress which will be made in our magnificent country within the progress which will be made in our magnificent country within the next twenty years. I speak particularly of that portion of our common country which I have the honor in part to represent. The South now may be typified as the man who is just recovering from bankruptcy, who is paying his debts and beginning to see a solvent and satisfactory future opening before him. The people of our section of the country are in a better condition than they have been for years. They are more nearly out of debt than they have ever been since the close of the war. They have more ready money. Our products are great and constantly increasing in value, and produce to our people the ready money needed for carrying on their business operations. But twenty years from now, if we may judge of the future by the present and by the past, and if we improve as we have in the past few years, we will be much better able to bear our share of the burdens of paying the national debt.

few years, we will be much better able to bear our share of the burdens of paying the national debt.

Gentlemen talk about the surplus revenues in the Treasury. Sir, let us utilize the surplus revenues by reducing the taxation which now bears heavily upon all classes. The greater the amount that the farmer and the citizen in every department of business can use, the greater will be the development of our resources, and greater results accomplished than can be accomplished by hoarding it in the national Treasury, or by expending it with the bondholder.

Mr. Chairman, the fact that this surplus revenue is in the Treasury is evidence, as I have always contended, that the Government, without injury to the public service, can reduce the volume of taxation. Surplus revenue—that is, revenue more than enough. How is it possible for gentlemen to maintain here that this heavy load of taxation shall remain superimposed on a struggling people, when there is more than enough of revenues in the Treasury? Is not the citizen far more capable than is the statesman, however great his capacity, of making those millions of surplus revenue profitable to the country? The aggregate wealth of the country is builded up and increased by the efforts of the individual citizen; but when you take his capital away from him, in the form of taxation, you deprive him of the implements of his trade and the means of his prosperity.

efforts of the individual citizen; but when you take his capital away from him, in the form of taxation, you deprive him of the implements of his trade and the means of his prosperity.

Then, since you will refund the debt, is it not far better that the people of this generation should relegate to those who come after us the discharge of those obligations which the policy of the Government and the course of events has imposed upon us? By this course the taxes can be at once reduced. The surplus millions left in the hands of the people; the expenses of collecting these surplus millions can be saved to the Treasury, and twenty years hence the debt can be discharged by a thrifty and prosperous people, whose wealth of material resource will not feel the burden of payment. Sir, does not the experience of the past twenty years bear me out in this argument? How incalculably more prosperous is the country at large to-day than it was twenty years ago? And, sir, in all likelihood the next generation will not be compelled, as we have been, to bear the distressing and fearful presence of civil war. How much is the American to be congratulated when it is remembered that the existence of the wonderful and rapidly increasing wealth of this county is, in spite of the fact that within the past twenty years the fiery tide of revolution has swept over our country, ingulfing in its horrid sweep millions of property, thus subtracted from our resources, and thousands of valuable lives which would otherwise have been spent in the development of individual and national wealth.

Mr. Chairman I have alluded briefly to the fact that the Southern individual and national wealth.

individual and national wealth.

Mr. Chairman, I have alluded briefly to the fact that the Southern States of the Union will by this policy be enabled to recuperate and to acquire that prosperity which will add our natural and proper share to the strength of the country. The soundest principles of economic science, the ablest exponents of economic thought, are now speaking in no uncertain sound in behalf of that section. Such splendid journals as the New York Herald and the Chicago Times, wonderful vehicles of information to the people, are advertising the matchless and almost untouched domain which the Southern States contribute to our national territory. If Horace Greeley lived to-day, he would say "Go South" to the energy, the youth, and the industry of the Northern States; and, sir, as a representative of that people, elected by them to express their sentiments, I say to the young men of the North come South and aid us in developing the possibilities of our country.

of our country.

Again, sir, is it not true that these short bonds deprive the advocates of revenue reform of their best arguments? If the bonds are to be paid two years hence, the money must be raised, and it will be raised in the way of revenue taxation.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the advocates of free trade, by swallowing this fallacy of a short bond, are walking into the toils of the protectionists. If the revenues of this Government are to be expended in paying off these rapidly-maturing bonds, revenue reduction will be impossible, and to revise the tariff likewise impossible. For my part, it is in the revision of the tariff that I base a sure hope for the rapid improvement in the condition of the Southern States. Sir if you will exempt machinery for the manufacture of cotton Sir, if you will exempt machinery for the manufacture of cotton thread and goods from those import duties which the tariff imposes, you will do a great deal more for the South than can be accomplished by the triumph of any financial scheme, however propitious that scheme may be. It is in the manufacture of cotton goods that the best investment for southern capital is found. By nature every conbest investment for southern capital is found. By nature every condition is afforded to make this great industry profitable. Our snowy southern staple, of which we have the monopoly, will flourish and produce at the very door of the factory. Plentifully supplied with water-power, the motive power of our factories is furnished by nature. When the streams of your northern rivers are frozen from bank to bank, and the wheels of the factories are clogged with iee, under the influences of our genial climate the work of the southern cotton-mill goes on unimpeded; and, sir, by some subtle law of nature, the cotton is spun and woven with more facility in that climate which is its habitat. So in freight, in transportation, in labor, in climate, in everything, the southern manufacturer has the advantage of all others. These are no conjectures; they are facts. They are proven by the price of factory stocks in the Southern States; and yet we are prevented from embarking our capital in the manufacture of cotton prevented from embarking our capital in the manufacture of cotton by that protective tariff which fastens on cotton machinery a prohibtiory duty and compels the manufacturer of cotton goods to pay twice the price it is worth for the machinery he purchases. Sir, the protective tariff intends, it is pretended, to encourage American industry. Is not a cotton factory at the South an American industry? It is, and the industry of all others that is best suited to flourish in that country; Is not a cotton factory at the South an American industry 7 It is, and the industry of all others that is best suited to flourish in that country; and yet, sir, when we seek to purchase the tools of our industry we find that we are handicapped by the tariff. He is no true economist who will refuse to encourage the cotton industry of the South. In 1860 the South produced with slave labor 3,826,086 bales of cotton. In 1870, with free labor, ten years later, the South produced 4,170,388 bales, and ten years later, in 1879-'80, the crop was 5,625,000 bales. And, sir, when I tell you that the old, worn-out lands, under the present systems of cultivation, produce as well as or better than when they were originally cleared; when I tell you that not a tithe of our fertile lands fitted for the cultivation of cotton have yet been cultivated, it is easy to see the immense source of national strength which is to be found in that staple, which is practically restricted to the climate and the territory of the Southern States.

Mr. Chairman, there are few cargoes which are freighted from the ports of our country which possess the merchantable value of a shipload of compressed cotton bales. A ship-load of wheat, or of bacon, or of iron is not worth so much. But, sir, if you would have forever the balance of trade in favor of our country help us to manufacture in the South the cotton crop that is gathered in the South. Sir, in that way employment will be given to our citizens; the wages that are paid to the artisans of Manchester and of the cotton-manufacturing world will go to the working people of our own country. The profits of the manufacture of catton will enhance the individual and are paid to the artisans of manufacter and of the cotton-maintacturing world will go to the working people of our own country. The profits of the manufacture of cotton will enhance the individual and national wealth of America, and, sir, when you foot up the exports and strike the balance you will find that a ship-load of manufactured cotton goods is worth far more than a ship-load of compressed

Now, Mr. Chairman, when I see that these short bonds may possibly prevent any revision of the tariff, when I recognize the fact that in order to meet their maturity, the revenues of the Government must be kept as at present, nay, even increased; when I declare that one great object of my service here is, if possible, to remove this obstacle from the advancement in diversified industries of the people of so from the advancement in diversified industries of the people of so large a section of our country, I feel fully justified in declaring that it is far preferable to have a refunding act which would permit the revenue to be reduced, the tariff revised, and to remit to the prosperity of the future the easy duty of discharging these obligations.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to take any part in the discussion upon this amendment, but after the remarks made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Young] who spoke a few minutes ago, I think that some one of the gentlemen referred to by him ought to make some response.

him ought to make some response

One of the questions involved in this discussion is whether or not there shall be any refunding bill whatever passed; and the gentleman from Tennessee announced to the committee that he is opposed to refunding in any form, and intimates that those of us who are in favor of reducing the interest rate on the public debt have become or are becoming the champions of the national banking interests.

The difference between myself and the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee upon that subject is, simply, that he is in favor of leaving outstanding in the hands of the national banks the bonds of the Government bearing 5 and 6 per cent. interest, so that they may continue to draw interest out of the public Treasury annually at that rate, while I am in favor of compelling them to receive bonds bearing a rate of interest at 3 per cent., and requiring money at that rate only to be taken out of the Treasury for them. That is the whole difference between us, so far as the national-bank interest is concerned. concerned.

Now, as to the economy of funding or not funding, the gentleman from Tennessee alluded to a calculation submitted to this committee a few days since by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Kelley.] In it he undertook to show to the committee and the country what it would cost to pay the outstanding 5 and 6 per cent. bonds at the rate of $60,000,000 per annum without refunding. I take the gentleman's figures as he gives them himself, from which it appears that in order to extinguish $637,000,000 in 5 and 6 per cent. bonds by annual payments of $60,000,000, it would require from the public Treasury the sum of $826,750,000; and I hold in my hand a calculation which I am willing to submit to any gentleman upon this floor or to any actuary in the country, by which it is shown that if these bonds shall be refunded at the rate of 3 per cent. and paid in precisely the same way at the rate of $60,000,000 per annum, that debt will be extinguished in exactly the same time, at a cost to the people of this country of $748,210,000, or $78,540,000 less than it would cost to extinguish it according to the plans of the gentleman from cost to extinguish it according to the plans of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the plan of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question, therefore, is simply this: whether we are willing to save to the people of this country by this process of refunding this seventy-eight and one-half millions of dollars in a period of a little over ten years, or whether we will give it to the national banks as interest upon their bonds, as the gentleman from Tennessee contends we should. Even if these 3 per cent. bonds should rise in the marwe should. Even if these 3 per cent, bonds should rise in the market so as to command a premium of 3 per cent, a contingency which I apprehend no gentleman on this floor anticipates, still the whole premium upon the whole amount of them would be but $19,110,000, which, deducted from the $78,540,000, will leave still a saving to the Treasury and to the people of $59,430,000. Now, I submit, upon these figures, which I think no gentleman will challenge, whether I am or the gentleman from Tennessee is the special advocate of the interest of the national banking associations.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. REED. Will the gentleman from Kentucky permit me to suggest that upon an option bond the Government cannot possibly be called to pay 3 per cent. premium?

Mr. CARLISLE. Even if we were to issue a bond having twenty years to run before it is redeemable, in my judgment it would not command a premium.

Mr. REED. Then the gentleman is addressing himself to a proposition not before the House.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know whether this discussion is pertinent to any amendment now

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the discussion is proceeding by general consent. The debate upon the pending amendment was exhausted some time ago, as was announced by the Chair.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to inquire whether the discussion is upon the amendment the committee will vote upon first?

The CHAIRMAN. The discussion is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Townshend] to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] upon which debate closed under the rule some time since. Subsequent discussion has been proceeding by general consent.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Then I understand the Chair to say, after the expiration of this discussion, whether by order of the House or by general consent, we will be called upon to vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois to the amendment offered by the ment of the gentleman from Thinois to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the status of the matter.

Mr. HASKELL. While agreeing with the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle] who has just taken his seat, I, in common with others on this floor, have repeatedly urged that the process of funding that he has advocated must of necessity fail, and that the national banks cannot be compelled to take our bonds.

In addition to the arguments that have been presented, let me call the attention of this committee to the fact that when this bill shall the attention of this committee to the fact that when this bill shall become a law you seem to compel the national banks to self the bonds they now hold and invest in three percents; you make a series of bonds at short time, with an option after one year, and, from the day that the national bank has made the transfer of its present bonds to the three percents, you commence picking them away by lot in order to take them up and pay them. You subject for ten years the national banks to perhaps a monthly raid upon these 3 per cent. bonds they hold in order to take them from them and pay them off.

Now, I submit that a national banker cannot, even if the interest was higher, submit or subject himself to the necessity of going once a month, it may be, upon the market to replace the bonds that he holds for his circulation. To-day the 4 per cent. bonds are drawing 3.20 interest. It is urged that this 3½ per cent. interest, the lowest rate ever reached in the United States, can still be retrograded down to 3 per cent.; and that, too, in the face of the fact, as I was informed yesterday by a gentleman on this floor, that in order to sell the 4 per to 3 per cent.; and that, too, in the face of the fact, as 1 was informed yesterday by a gentleman on this floor, that in order to sell the 4 per cents. a single bank in Boston expended $26,000 to popularize the loan, to acquaint the people with all the peculiarities of the security that they offered. Now, then, with that advertised loan, with that well-understood law, 4 per cent. bond known world-wide, interest is 3; or 3.30; and it is urged here that the 3 per cent. bond, with a 1-10 option, subjecting the banks to continual sale or purchase of other bonds, is to be a wise and successful loan placed on the market.

Mr. Chairman, I am no defender or advocate of national banks. But we have now $346,000,000 of national-bank note circulation. I insist that those notes shall not be withdrawn unless something is substituted in their place. I insist that if national banks are to be perpetuated they must be perpetuated so that they can be kept up in the cities, and in the country as well. Now, under the provisions of a law like this no man can say that a country bank could stand upon its feet a single day after its passage.

Mr. REED. I believe that the more sensible thing for this House to do, if it were possible, would be to pass a thirty-year 3 per cent. bond and take the tax off the banks, and thereby surely accomplish the object that we desire. But I realize the fact that men have prejudices as well as reason. It seems to me that a long-time bond is not possible in the present disposition of this House. Therefore the only possible in the present disposition of this House. Therefore the only thing which we can do (for in statesmanship we have to do what we can and not always what we would) is to provide an option bond bearing interest at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. I believe it is utterly impossible to float a 3 per cent. option bond. I believe that the arguments and facts and figures presented by the Speaker of this House and by other gentlemen are as fallacious as any that have ever been presented. Never in the history of the world has a 3 per cent. option bond been negotiated. Every 3 per cent. bond that has been described has been a perpetual bond, and its perpetuity has been one element of its

The reason why men are willing to take a small amount of interest upon their investments is because, in the first place, the investment is perfectly secure; and, in the second place, it is permanent. When a man invests at a low rate of interest, what he wants is to feel that his investment can rest quietly where he puts it and his mind will not be disturbed by the necessity of looking for other investments.

I say that if you put $650,000,000 of 3 per cent. option bonds on the market they cannot possibly be negotiated at par. The fact that our 4 per cent, bonds, permanent for twenty-seven years, are selling at a market they cannot possibly be negotiated at par. The fact that our 4 per cent. bonds, permanent for twenty-seven years, are selling at a rate that brings a return of but 3½ per cent. is proof positive of the statement that I make. When you come to add to the bonds we now have issued the immense volume of $650,000,000 of 3 per cent. option bonds, you will find that you have undertaken an impossibility to float them at par. You will produce this effect: you will throw us back upon the proposition made by our greenback friends, which is to keep the 6 and 5 per cent. bonds still afloat and pay them off from the national revenue, which, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle] has plainly shown, will cost us $78,000,000 more than to issue a long 3 per cent. bond for their redemption. If we provide for a 3½ per cent. option bond we can negotiate them and pay them off as circumstances may justify.

as circumstances may justify.

I desire to say one other thing. I am sorry that the Speaker of this House has endeavored to make this matter a party question. I think that on great occasions and for a good purpose it is wise for think that on great occasions and for a good purpose it is wise for him to come down from the chair and help to direct us on the floor of the House, and the occasion now is certainly great. What has been the purpose? When the Speaker of this House declared that the democratic party had always been in favor of paying the national debt I will not charge him with believing that except for the moment, because he and his party have gone down in three pitched battles under our charging horse-hoofs on that very question, as he well

Now, what was his object? It was to sound the party tocsin, to Now, what was his object? It was to sound the party tocsin, to bring up his party zealously to the support of a 3 per cent. option bond. I say to you that the only effect of such legislation will be to keep afloat our heavy-interest-paying bonds until such time as we can make other provisions for their payment.

Now, I want to see the responsibility fixed where it belongs. I appeal to gentlemen on the other side of the House not to allow them-appeal to gentlemen on the other side of the House not to allow themselves to be led into any partisan action upon a question that ought to have no partisanship in it. Let them take a broad view of the question and save the country the difference of interest which has been pointed out by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Carlisle;] and do so by providing the only bond which can be floated at par.

The idea of attacking national banks and banking institutions upder these circumstaces is like a many undertaking the circumstaces.

under these circumstances is like a man undertaking to go into a shop and abuse the shop-keeper in the hope that he can obtain the shop and abuse the shop-keeper in the nope that he can obtain the articles he desires to buy at a cheaper price.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DUNNELL. Instead of using my own language in replying to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and other gentlemen who have spoken while this question has been under discussion, simply expressing their own individual opinions that we could not float at par a 3 more cant, hand I desire to have read as a part of my remarks an per cent. bond, I desire to have read as a part of my remarks an English view of American credit based upon the resources of our great

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the London Colliery Guardian, December 10, 1880.]

A piece of intelligence of very considerable moment to the ironmasters and traders of this country and elsewhere reached London on Wednesday, namely, that the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives of the United States had decided on the previous day that the rate of interest attached to the bonds which will be issued next spring by the Washington Treasury, in substitution of the great mass of 6 per cent. and 5 per cent. United States bonds falling due next year, should be 3 per cent. per annum, and no more. The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Sherman, and his excellency President Hayes, had laid their heads together, and, after much reflection, had come to the conclusion that 33 per cent. per annum was the lowest rate at which the United States could expect to raise bonds for seven hundred million or eight hundred million dollars. But when the matter came before Congress bolder counsels prevailed, and it was at once held that if Great Britain could keep her 3 per cent. consols at par there was no real or valid reason why the United States should not be able to issue 3 per cent. bonds at par also. We are disposed to think that the Committee on Ways and Keans was, after all, justified in forming the conclusion at which it has arrived. Coursilies that the credit of the United States is strong enough to justify an attempt to issue 3 per cent. bonds carries with it a moral force which will probably be found to have some influence on the question.

The issue of 3 per cent. bonds by the United States would, indeed, mark an epoch in the history of that great Republic. Speaking at the Central Farmers' Club on Monday evening, Mr. C. S. Read, who visited the United States in a semi-official capacity in 1579, declared, in a patronizing kind of way, that at no distant date within the United States may fairly claim to rank already among the greatest nations of the world; in fact, the question will soon be not whether the United States form one of the greatest nations of the world, in fact, the question will soon be not whether the United States form one of the greatest nations of the world, which we have the prevent of the world, which we have a subject to the prevent of the world, the South closed in April, 1855, the United States were paying as high an interest as 7½ per cent, per annum upon some of their states were paying as high an interest as 7½ per cent, per annum upon some of their consistible facts, hatevalled the provided of the provided provided the provided provided the provided provided provided the provided provided kets.

One fact of extreme importance must be borne in mind by English ironmasters, namely, that the productive resources of American rolling mills have been very greatly extended during the last two years. We learn from Philadelphia that the proprietors of Pennsylvania rolling mills are just now endeavoring to secure orders as freely as possible, and to make the prices at which these orders are given out a somewhat secondary consideration. We commend this point to the serious consideration of all concerned in the production of rails on this side of the Atlantic.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Mr. Chairman, it is rather amusing to me to listen to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. REED;] and I will try to bear his lecture with all the composure that my nervous systry to bear his lecture with all the composure that my nervous system is capable of. But I would remind the gentleman that I did not come down from my place for the purpose of taking part in the debate. The rules of the House require that when the House is in Committee of the Whole I should be on the floor; and being a member of the Committee of the Whole, I thought that in my representative character I was entitled to speak and to vote. But I really think that this lecture would have come more appropriately from some other gentleman than the gentleman from Maine; for during my long service with him in this House I have never seen him go very far beyond gentleman than the gentleman from Maine; for during my long service with him in this House I have never seen him go very far beyond the lines of the narrowest partisanship; nor have I ever known him to rise to such an exalted position of statesmanship that when he looked behind he was not within the reach of his party. [Laughter.] I therefore recommend to the gentleman that when he undertakes to lecture other members on partisanship he should first east the beam out of his own eye before he undertakes to trouble the mote in his paichbors even.

meighbor's eye.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] should regard my observations in the light of a personal lecture. I beg to assure him that they had a wider significance than any allusion to his personality. The object of what I said was to call the attention of this House to the partisanship which has been adopted with regard to a matter that had not the remotest element of party in it until it was dragged in, and principally by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, so that his allusion to my partisan feeling has no bearing upon the subject. I am glad to say that wherever I have taken ground there my party has been with me; and I believe that the wisdom of a good party like the republican party is better than all the "non-partisanship" that ever fooled a House or deceived a people. [Laughter and applause.] I say to him—or, rather, I say to this House, because I wish to avoid the appearance of a lecture to a gentleman so much my senior, and the appearance of a lecture to a gentleman so much my senior, and who stands so much higher than myself in ability and official posi-tion—I desire to say to members of this House that I believe they who stands so much higher than myself in ability and official position—I desire to say to members of this House that I believe they are allowing themselves to be deceived into a course of conduct which leads them whither they do not wish to go.

Every man who knows anything about the funding of the 4 per cent. bonds knows that they were funded under an entirely different state of circumstances from the present. Every man knows that then the market for money was low. Every man knows, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. EINSTEIN] so well said yesterday, that to-day the market for money is high; that enterprises are to-day springing up all over this land; and some people know that some million dollars' worth of those four percents are still in the hands of the original proprietors who are desirous of increasing the price by the passage of such a bill as this, which will be the sole effect of it; and it will not be the first time in the history of this country that the men who have declaimed the most forcibly against bankers and wealthy men have been really, without knowing it, their strongest adjuncts and assistants. [Here the hammer fell.] Is my time out?

The CHAIRMAN. The five minutes of the gentleman have expired.

Mr. REED. Well, I never knew so short a five minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. For the purpose of limiting debate I move that the committee rise.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 104, noes 5.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 104, noes 5.
Mr. MURCH. No quorum has voted.
The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is not necessary to adopt a motion that the Committee of the Whole rise.

The motion of Mr. FERNANDO WOOD was agreed to.

The motion of Mr. FERNANDO WOOD was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Coverr reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the funding bill, and pending that proposition I move that all debate upon the pending amendment and amendments thereto be limited to fifteen minutes.

amendments thereto be limited to fifteen minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move to amend so as to allow thirty minutes, which I think a very short time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that all debate on the pending amendment—

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. And amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. That debate on all pending amendments (that will cover it) be limited to fifteen minutes. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Townshend] moves to amend by striking out "fifteen" and inserting "thirty."

and inserting "thirty."

The amendment of Mr. Townshend, of Illinois, was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. Fernando Wood to limit debate was agreed to. The question recurring on the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and resumed the consideration of the funding bill.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all discussion upon the pending amendments is limited to fifteen minutes.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Chairman, the House on yesterday determined that the rate of interest on these bonds and certificates should be 3 per cent. The next important question—one equally important with the rate of interest, because it affects the question of the negotiability of these obligations—is the time that these bonds and certificates shall run. I have listened to this discussion on that point and regret to find very intelligent and honorable gentlemen running into what I conceive to be a radical error in still further limiting the exceedingly small period of time of the option in which the Government may retire this new issue. They start out with the declaration that we must keep within our power this $600,000,000 so as to pay it off out of the large surplus revenue. I take the position that, on a question of issuing a grave and great obligation of the Government, to predicate our ability to meet it at maturity on moneys and revenues not yet received is a very dangerous undertaking.

and revenues not yet received is a very dangerous undertaking.

Gentlemen refer to the existing large surplus revenue received by the Government. They also refer to the indications of the great prosperity of the country and attempt to show this large surplus revenue is likely to continue in the future. I take issue with them. I believe they are entirely in error, not only with reference to the real surplus revenue now received by the Government, but also in reference to the probability of that very large surplus revenue continuing for any long period of time. Why, sir, within a very recent period what have we seen? From 1872 down to 1879 the revenues of the Government fell off not only in receipts from customs duties, but from interment fell off not only in receipts from customs duties, but from internal taxation, to a very serious and important extent.

It is well worth while, Mr. Chairman, to know exactly what the reduction was in our revenue during the period I have mentioned. According to official data, in 1872 the receipts from customs duties were $216,000,000, but every year from then down to 1879 there has been a marked and steady reduction. The same may be said with reference to the revenue received by the Government from internal terration. We find the questoms reasonue alone the receipts being taxation. We find the customs revenue alone, the receipts being $216,370,000 in 1872, in 1878 fell to $130,170,000, making a difference between the revenue of the Government from customs duties in 1872 and 1878 of $86,199,000.

But in addition to that, Mr. Chairman, I have the language of the present Secretary of the Treasury in a statement which he made to the Committee on Ways and Means last January, and which I will ask the Clerk to read, as it shows the impolicy of issuing obligations of the Government upon assumed income derived from revenue.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Mills. What objection is there to funding the whole of the five percents in exchequer bills bearing 4 per cent. interest?

Secretary Sherman. Suppose that they should mature at a time when we could not pay them. Suppose that they should mature at a time when we could not pay them. Suppose that they had matured in 1873, 1874, 1875, when we had no surplus revenue, we would have had to borrow money to pay them. I should not like to have floating paper to an amount larger than we could certainly meet. I think it would be very unwise for the Government to issue short-time floating paper. I have seen since I have been in public life many sudden changes in the money market. Mr. Keller must recollect that in 1857, when he and I were in Congress together, we were buying bonds (as we are doing now) at a large premium, and that in six months from that time, when we came back to Congress, we had to issue Treasury notes to carry on the operations of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has evapored.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say that I was not in Congress in 1857, and that I hope the Secretary of the Treasury was not as much mistaken in his other facts as he was in that. I came here in 1860.

Mr. PHISTER. I take the floor and yield my five minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky for his courtesy. for his courtesy.

It is very apparent, Mr. Chairman, that for us to farm out supposed revenues to be received in the future, that for us now to issue new obligations of the Government predicated for their payment entirely on what moneys may come into the Treasury, is not the policy which a great Government like ours should adopt. But admitting this surplus may continue to come into the Treasury; admitting, for the sake of the argument, Mr. Chairman, that it is possible the present large surplus of revenue will be continued for years to come; what then? Are gentlemen, and especially gentlemen on this side of the House, willing to tie their hands in advance? Are they willing to be responsible by their votes for the continuance of the enormous burden imposed by taxation upon the industries of the country? Will they put themselves in the attitude that there is to be an end to the efforts of those gentlemen who seek for just revenue reform? Are all efforts to cease for the reduction of the enormous protection now afforded by our tariff laws to something like equality and justice? Are gentiemen willing to say in advance we will not hereafter reduce the present taxation; that we cannot spare the revenue which it brings in; that we cannot do anything which will lessen to the extent of $1 in; that we cannot do anything which will lessen to the extent of $1$ the present large surplus of revenue, because, in our infatuated desire to present ourselves to posterity as having liquidated the public debt at this time we are willing to continue the burdens upon the people in the way of onerous taxation; that instead of reducing the burden of taxation now resting upon the people we will keep up the present large surplus revenue? For one, sir, I shall never consent to any such attitude, and therefore it was that in the bill I propose $40,000,000 should be set aside to be taken out of the revenues for the purpose should be set aside to be taken but of the revenues for the purpose of meeting the notes and certificates to be issued with ten years to run. I proposed to take this amount of $650,000,000 and put two-thirds of it in bonds. I am willing to consent to a reduction of the time indicated by the bill just as low as is consistent with a successful sale of the bonds themselves. But I conceive, Mr. Chairman, it is possible to so surround the 3 per cent. bonds by arbitrary restrictions as to make it exceedingly difficult to negotiate them at all.

tions as to make it exceedingly difficult to negotiate them at all.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRIGHAM. Mr. Chairman, with all our pending bills on the subject of refunding or raising money for the payment of this large maturing indebtedness of nearly seven hundred millions of dollars, with all our substitutes for bills, and amendments to both bills and substitutes, our proceedings have the appearance of a patch-work quilt, of which perhaps the central and most attractive figure is the "left-handed" bill introduced by the gentleman from Iowa.

We are now in the position of the old gentleman who advertised for a coachman, and when the applicants presented themselves, he asked the first man how near he could drive him to the edge of a precipice without harm. The Jehn replied that he could take him with perfect safety within an inch of it. The next one said that he would not venture within a rod; but the last man said, "Faith, I will keep your honor as far from the edge as possible." "You are the very man I want," said the old gentleman; "you*are the man I can rely upon, and I take you."

Now, Mr. Chairman, in reference to this important matter which is pending, the country wants no half-way measures, no hair-breadth escape from a financial disaster. If this debt is to be refunded, and if these securities are to be taken by the people of this country, a bill must be passed which will meet all the requirements of the case. If measures adopted here fail, it will not simply be a failure to fund the debt, but it will be a disaster inflicted upon the financial credit the debt, but it will be a disaster inflicted upon the financial credit of this country which will reach far into the future. In order to make the investments desirable to the people, the securities authorized by this bill must be made desirable not only in point of time but in the rate of interest as well. There are gentlemen here who will vote for a low rate of interest, if a long time is given, but if the bends are short in time, then they will not be satisfied with a lower rate than 3½ per cent. If the interests of this great country were the same in all sections it might be an easy matter to pass a bill containing provisions which would be acceptable to all parts of the country; but, as the gentleman from Colorado has well said, we have a gold interest in one part of the country, an iron interest in the interior, a copper interest on the lakes, and a great silver interest in the West, all involving immense amounts of capital. All of these interests are different and each one of them must expect to make concessions to different and each one of them must expect to make concessions to

It is my view that the interest on these bonds ought to be higher than 3 per cent. Three-and-a-half per cent., in my opinion, would make it possible to float the debt—would give the loan a probable success in the markets of the country. But this great Government ought not to go into the market to chaffer with the people as to the rate of interest it shall pay on its indebtedness. It ought not to go out and say, "We wish to get this loan taken at 3 per cent.," and hearing the people answer, "No; that is too low," then say, "We will give 3\frac{1}{2} per cent.," and again receive the response, "That is too low; we cannot take it at that; we will not take a cent of it unless you fix the rate at 3\frac{1}{2} per cent."

I am reminded of a family council held in reference to the purchase of a dog. The proposition was first made to pay fifty cents for him, and if he could not be bought for fifty cents to pay a dollar; if the dollar was not enough, then twelve shillings should be offered if the dollar was not enough, then twelve shillings should be offered for him. The "small boy" of the family was deputed to make the purchase, and went to interview the owner, and remarked to him that he was authorized to buy the dog for fifty cents if he could, and if he could not buy him for fifty cents he was to offer a dollar, and if if he could not buy him for fifty cents he was to offer a dollar, and if that was not enough he was authorized to pay twelve shillings. The negotiation was brief and entirely successful. The dog was bought, but not for fifty cents. This bill should be so framed as to fix a fair rate of interest without discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury that he may be free from the combinations of capitalists as to rate, and thus inducements be given the people to become purchasers of the securities contemplated by this bill. To accomplish this the rate must be liberal enough to induce the people of this country to take the loan. If this is not done it may follow that the loan will go abroad, and our own people will be unable to take it and receive the interest which the Government is required to pay.

The amount ought to be so liberal that the depositors in the savings-banks in this country, the people of small means, whose savings are placed in those institutions, may receive a fair interest on their deposits. The Government then would pay out the money to its own people. In fact, the Government is the people, and the debt is theirs, and they ought to have the first opportunity of taking the securities which represent it. In short, the provisions of this bill, securities which represent it. In short, the provisions of this bill, both as to time and interest, ought to insure the placing of these securities at home, and that a market need not be sought abroad.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House debate is exhausted upon the pending amendments. The vote will first be taken upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed in line 16 to strike out "$650,000,000" and insert "$400,000,000," and also in line 20 to strike out "$200,000,000" and insert "$300,000,000."

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned I take no issue with the amendment

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Will you accept the amendment? Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I have no objection to it myself. Mr. WARNER. The gentleman has no right to accept the amend-

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 98, noes 4.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Let the amendment now be read as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds in the amount not exceeding $400,000,000, which shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after — years from the date of issue, and also notes in the amount of $300,000,000 bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after two years and payable in ten years from the date of issue.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Pennsylvania to have accepted the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The committee have adopted that amendment, and the question recurs on filling the blank.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it was the understanding on the part of the Chair that the gentleman from Pennsylvania had accepted the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas as to filling the blank.

Mr. CARLISLE. The committee has not yet disposed of the question on the amendment on which it has just voted. It has still to vote on the amendment as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that. But the Chair desired to understand fully the position of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. As presented it had some blank spaces which the gentleman from Texas suggested should be filled in a cer-

Mr. CARLISLE. But we have not yet reached the point of filling the blanks. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offered an amendment, and the gentleman from Illinois offered an amendment to that amendment. The amendment to the amendment has been adopted, but not the amendment as amended.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The House is now voting on filling the blanks. We must have that question brought directly before the committee.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] accepted my amendment as a part of his own.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO accepted my amendment as a part of his own.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] is on the floor.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I say in my judgment the attitude of this question is this: we are now brought to vote upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. That amendment has been amended upon the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Townshend,] the committee having sustained the gentleman from Illinois in what he proposed; but the amendment as presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania left a blank, and before proceeding to the vote upon that amendment the committee must fill that blank, which leaves an open question as to the time these bonds may have to run. Now, I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to take the position that he has accepted an amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Mills.] I do not know what the Chair intends to do, but I assume that this being the most important question perhaps relating to the whole bill, the committee must have an opportunity to vote upon it. Therefore I think the next amendment properly before the committee is to fill that blank.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) If I have the power under the rules I desire to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] as a modification of my amendment.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania undoubtedly has the power to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Texas as a modification of his own; but that does not cut off the right of the committee to vote upon that question.

Mr. MILLS. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was nending. Before there was a vote taken on the amendment of

Mr. MILLS. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was pending. Before there was a vote taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois to the amendment I offered an amendment that filled the blank in the substitute of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. While it is still in his control he accepts that amendment as a part of his own; and I submit the committee has nothing further to do than to vote on the whole substitute as amended. Mr. CLAFLIN. It will be recollected that on yesterday the gentleman from Pennsylvania stated he left a blank purposely to be filled tleman from Pennsylvania stated he left a blank purposely to be filled by the committee after the rate had been fixed.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I do not take any different position now. The committee can call for a division.

Mr. CLAFLIN. Very well; let that be understood. The first thing to be done is to fill the blank. I ask what was the motion the gentleman from Texas made as to filling the blank?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.]

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 19, strike out the words "after twenty years and payable forty years" and insert "after one year and payable ten years."

Mr. MILLS. Redeemable in one year and payable in ten.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I move to amend by inserting the word "five" instead of "one," as applicable to the bonds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it seems to him the order of procedure should be first determined; the question being whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has the right to accept the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] without a vote being had thereon in the committee?

Mr. HAWLEY. I would suggest that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has accepted the amendment of the gentleman from Texas as part of his own; and now the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania stands without any blanks, and it is quite competent for the committee to strike out the figures which are in his amendment as modified and put in others.

ment as modified and put in others.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The Chair has stated, as I understood, that that was the mode of procedure. But I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLAFLIN] a question. His amendment would make the time, as I understand, 5-10.

Mr. CLAFLIN. Five-ten or 5-20, I do not care which.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) He proposes 5-10 for the bonds and to leave 1-10 for the certificates.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I do. The first question is on the word "five."

My motion is to strike out the word "one," as accepted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and insert the word "five."

Mr. WARNER. I understand the time to refer both to the bonds and the certificates. It would be necessary to make a division there. This covers both bonds and certificates. The gentleman from Massachusetts, I suggest, should make a distinction.

Mr. CLAFLIN. My amendment simply applies to the bonds.

Mr. WARNER. I would like to have the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts read tleman from Massachusetts read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in the pending amendment the words "one year" and insert "five years i" making it read "after five years and payable ten years from the date of issue."

Mr. WARNER. That applies to both bonds and certificates. MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and the chair was taken by Mr. NEWBERRY, as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 2008) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, completion, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 14, 1880.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 2968) for the relief of James D. Grant.

FUNDING BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. CLAFLIN. My original proposition was to make these bonds five-twenties; but that seems to be objected to by some. I consider it immaterial whether they are 5-10 or 5-20 bonds. If any gentleman wishes to try the sense of the committee upon making the bonds five-twenties he can move the amendment. I would like to have the vote first taken upon the proposition to make them 5-20 bonds. first taken upon the proposition to make them 5-20 bonds

Mr. MILLS. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Claf-LIN] move to make the bonds 5-20?

Mr. CLAFLIN. I do.

Mr. WARNER. I call for the reading of the amendment as it now stands, with the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLAFLIN] incorporated into it. I do not understand that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois Mr. Townshend contains any element of time either for the certificates or for the

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] contains it.

Mr. WARNER. The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Clafin] applies, therefore, both to the bonds and to the certificates.

The amendment proposed by Mr. RANDALL was read, as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds or certificates in the amount of not exceeding $650,000,000, which shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after—years from the date of issue. The bonds and certificates shall be in all respects of like character and subject to the same provisions as the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, &c.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Now let the amendment be read as amended by the adoption of my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to the fact that in one part of that amendment the $200,000,000 are called "certificates," and in another part they are called "notes." They should be called one or the other.

Mr. WARNER. They should be called certificates.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The modification can be made by Mr. CLAFLIN. I have no objection to that. There being no objection, the word "notes" was changed to "certificates.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] whether his amendment does not provide that not more than $40,000,000 of these certificates shall be paid in one year?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I did not have that in my amendment.

Mr. FRYE. It was so read. Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That was not part of my amend-

Mr. FRYE. It was so read, and the sinking-fund law will require more than that.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I understand that. I asked the Clerk on a former occasion not to read that part of it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I had no desire to amend any por-Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I had no desire to amend any portion of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] except in regard to the amount of the certificates and the amount of the bonds. I am willing that the forty-million clause shall be left out. It is not embraced in my amendment at all. Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I never did have the forty-million clause as a part of my amendment.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I have no objection to omitting that.

There was no objection, and the forty-million clause was omitted. Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I desire to offer an amendment in regard to the time to which these bonds may run.

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is now in order; there are two amendments already pending.

are two amendments already pending.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] offered an amendment to fill the blank with "one year." The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLAFLIN] moved to make it five years instead of one, and the gentleman from Texas accepted that amendment

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mills] accept the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr.

CLAFLIN ??

Mr. MILLS. Making them 5-10 bonds? I do.
Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Then I desire to offer an amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. Further amendment is still in order.
Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I think the time when these bonds are to mature should correspond to the time when the 4½ bonds are payable. I therefore move to strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "twenty," so that it will read "redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after five years, and payable twenty years from the date of issue." the date of issue."

The amendment was not agreed to, upon a division-ayes 74, noes

Mr. WARNER. I move to amend the amount of bonds to be issued by striking out "$400,000,000" and inserting "$350,000,000." The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Townshend,] which has been adopted, provides for the issue of $700,000,000 of bonds and certificates. That certainly is fifty millions more than is needed; there is not seven hundred millions of fives and sixes to be taken up.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My amendment does not limit the amount of bonds more than did the original bill. It simply adopted the figures of the original bill.

the figures of the original bill.

Mr. WARNER. When the bill was originally reported there were seven hundred millions of bonds to be taken up. I think there will be no objection to reducing the amount to six hundred and fifty millions of bonds and certificates.

Mr. CARLISLE. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] will look at the bill I think he will find that it provides that the bonds shall not exceed four hundred millions and the certificates shall not exceed three hundred millions. And there is an express provision in the section that the public debt shall not be increased.

Mr. WARNER. I understand that; but we have already adopted an amendment deferring the option upon the bonds for five years. It was in view of that amendment that I desired to limit that part of the debt that is to be postponed for five years.

Mr. MILLS. I move to strike out "five years" and insert "four years" as the time of the option.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order at this time.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Is a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the pending amendment to that amendment in order?

that amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that a substitute for the section would be in order, but that no further amendment will be in order until the disposition of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER.]

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I understand the Chair to say that a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the pending amendment to that amendment is not in order at this time, but that a substitute for the section would be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. A substitute for the section will be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. A substitute for the section will be in order when the section is finally perfected. The vote will now be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER.]

The amendment of Mr. WARNER was not agreed to; there being—

Mr. MILLS. I wish to inquire what is the earliest option proposed by the amendment for the payment of the notes and certificates?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report that part of the amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

And also certificates in the amount of $300,000,000, bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after two years, and payable in ten years from the date of issue.

Mr. MILLS. The phrase "two years" ought to be "one year."
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That was the original motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that modification will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETTE. I desire to submit an amendment.

Mr. MILLS. Before we leave this question of the time I want to suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the option ought to be at four years instead of five, because at the rate at which our revenues are now accruing we shall be able to extinguish these certificates a year before the maturity of these bonds.

Mr. CLAFLIN. In answer to the gentleman I will say that we cannot possibly pay more than $300,000,000 in four years. Five years is short enough, and that is the common time.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion is scarcely in order at this time.

The amendment submitted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GIL-LETTE] will be read.
The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "issue," in line 15, down to the word "notes," in 20. Also, strike out the word "two," in line 20, and insert "seven."

Mr. GILLETTE. The effect of my amendment is simply to issue the whole amount in Treasury notes rather than a part in bonds and a part in certificates.

The amendment of Mr. GILLETTE was not agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. GILLETTE was not agreed to.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to submit to the Chair an inquiry. As I understand the attitude of the question, we are now amending the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which is substantially a substitute for the whole of the first section. Now, after the committee has exhausted itself in these amendments, will the Chair submit to the committee for its action amendments to the original section?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee received first an amendment presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the proposition reported by the Ways and Means Committee. To that amendment an amendment was first offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Townshend,] which was adopted. Secondly, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mills] submitted an amendment in the form of a suggestion to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which was accepted by that gentleman. Thirdly, an amendment was presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. CLAFLIN,] which was also accepted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The committee at this time is called upon to vote upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. sylvania thus modified by these amendments or suggestions.

Several Members. "Let the amendment be read."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as it now stands.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds and certificates in the amount of not exceeding $400,000,000, which shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after five years, and payable ten years after the date of issue; and also certificates in the amount of $300,000,000, bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after one year, and payable in ten years from the date of issue.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The Clerk has read the amendment incorrectly. It should read "bonds"—not bonds and certificates—"in the amount of not exceeding $400,000,000." The words "and certificates" in that part of the amendment should come out. The subsequent part of the amendment relates to certificates.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the modification suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The whole amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was not read, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir; the whole amendment was read.

The amendment of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to; there being—ayes

Mr. WARNER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to ask how and when the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Clafin,] to make the time of redemption of these bonds five years, was adopted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio that to the then pending amendment the gentleman from Massachusetts of the state of Only that to the then pending amendment the gentleman from Massachusetts offered an amendment, which was accepted and adopted by the gentleman whose proposition was sought to be amended. Thus the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts became merged in the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as a part of it, and as such was submitted to the committee.

Mr. WARNER. That is the question I wish to raise. When an amendment is pending, and the House has already voted upon a part of it, can a member rise and offer an amendment, and the gentleman proposing the original amendment accept this amendment without of it, can a member rise and offer an amendment, and the gentleman proposing the original amendment accept this amendment without its being adopted by a vote of the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio that precisely a similar condition of things occurred in this Chamber, in this committee, within the space of the last half hour, in the presence and in the hearing of the gentleman from Ohio and other members of the committee, and no objection was taken to it.

Mr. WARNER. I had already given notice, Mr. Chairman, in this case that I should object.

The CHAIRMAN. But for the purpose of determining this mat-

Mr. WARNER. I gave notice that I did object.

The CHAIRMAN. For the purpose of bringing this matter to determination the Chair will make a formal ruling, and he does so now make it, that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts was properly received, that it was open to amendment, and that as such it was merged with the original amendment after having been duly submitted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The Clerk in reading the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania omitted to read the last clause or proviso of the section; and I desire to inquire of the Chair whether that last clause or proviso of the section stands unaffected by the amendment which has been adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no doubt whatever on that point. Mr. SPRINGER. Is it in order to have the section as amended

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the section as amended and adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope that will be done, so we may understand exactly where we are.

There was no objection; and the Clerk read the section as amended, as follows:

That all existing provisions of law authorizing the refunding of the national debt shall apply to any bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than 4½ per cent. per annum which may hereafter become redeemable: Provided, That in lieu of the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and the acts amendatory thereto, and the certificates authorized by the act of February 25, 1879, entitled "An act to authorize the issue of certificates of deposit in aid of the refunding of the public debt," the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds in the amount of not exceeding $400,000,000, which shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after five years and payable ten years from the date of issue, and also certificates in the amount of $300,000,000, bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after one year and payable in ten years from the date of issue. The bonds and certificates shall be in all other respects of like character and subject to the same provisions as the bonds authorized by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and acts amendatory thereto: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize an increase of the public debt: Provided further, That before any of the bonds or notes authorized by this act are issued, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay on the bonds accruing during the year 1881 all the silver dollars at 412½ grains and all the gold over and above $50,000,000 now held in the Treasury for redemption purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, whether he has any further amendment to offer to the section as it now stands? Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I have not any further amendment to offer on behalf of that committee.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I have a futher amendment to offer.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. As I understand it the section now stands as perfected by the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I move to amend by adding the fol-

And provided further, That interest on the 6 per cent. bonds hereby authorized to be refunded shall cease at the expiration of thirty days after notice that the same has been designated by the Secretary of the Treasury for redemption.

If I am correctly informed and remember accurately, the Secretary of the Treasury somewhere in one of his reports to Congress recommends this very proposition.

Mr. KELLEY. He urgently recommended it in his annual report at the opening of the last session of Congress, and again before the Committee on Ways and Means in personal conference.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. KELLEY. Let me make a brief statement. I desire to say to the gentlemen who have expressed themselves kindly to the substitute of which I gave notice that, inasmuch as the committee has adopted substantially the provisions of that substitute, I do not proe further to press it, as all I have sought to secure is already in the bill.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to add the following amendment:

Provided further. That no portion of the public debt now payable in lawful money shall be funded under authority of this act into obligations payable exclusively in coin.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one word on that amendment. Two hundred millions of dollars of bonds sought to be refunded were issued under acts of July and August, 1861, and are not expressly payable in coin. If the bill passes as it now stands all the bonds and notes issued under the authority of this law will be made expressly payable in coin. For one, I am not willing to part with the right to pay $200,000,000 of the public debt in any kind of lawful money the Treasury may have on hand. I think this House and the committee should insist have on hand. I think this House and the committee should insist upon retaining that right on the part of the Government.

If the Government has that right, why part with it? Gentlemen who claim that they are in favor of paying the bonds in lawful money have now an opportunity to show that they are in earnest. Here are $200,000,000 of bonds which are unquestionably payable in greenbacks. No wisdom can foresee what the movement of our coin will be in the future. It is the most untrustworthy money in the world. Its habit is to leave the channels of commerce just when it is most needed. The greenback can always be relied upon. Give it full legal-tender functions and it will always be the equivalent of the best coin in the world.

coin in the world.

There is nothing in the act of 1869, March 18, that precludes us from paying in lawful money, for that act expressly declares bonds shall be paid in coin or its equivalent. Now, any lawful money hereafter held by the Treasury, which is equivalent to coin, can be lawfully used in paying these obligations. I trust my soft-money democratic friends will now rally to the support of this amendment. The funding bill of 1870 was a great wrong. It was an unmitigated swindle. Here, however, are $200,000,000 of bonds which survived that catastrophe, and are still payable in greenbacks. Let us so pay them, and thus ingraft one single feature onto this bill that is in them, and thus ingraft one single feature onto this bill that is in favor of the people.

Mr. FORT. Mr. Chairman, a word or two upon this amendment. It does seem to me that there can be no occasion whatever for the adoption of this proposed amendment. The day has passed when there is really any distinction between coin and lawful money.

Mr. WEAVER. It may arise again.

Mr. WEAVER. It may arise again.

Mr. FORT. Resumption has come, and resumption, being an accomplished fact, must be sustained at all hazards. That being the case, I do not see why there should be longer any desire to issue a bond which is to be paid in the lawful money of the United States, or payable in any special kind of money—

Mr. WEAVER. But suppose the coin leaves the country?

Mr. FORT. Coin may leave the country, it is true, but we must so provide as to keep it. We must provide by our laws governing commerce and trade and so husband the revenues of the country that coin will not leave us, and so that we shall have at all times a sufficient amount of good money in our Treasury not only to protect the paper circulation of the Government, but to pay off every debt in coin if demanded. I am glad, Mr. Chairman, that the time has come when money in this country is all good, when every dollar of the United States is equal to every other dollar.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I wish to ask whether the gentleman is in order in discussing an amendment at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offered an amendment and debated it for the space of five minutes. The discussion upon

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offered an amendment and debated it for the space of five minutes. The discussion upon amendments now offered is limited to ten minutes, to be equally divided.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Does the Chair hold that the order of the House does not apply to new amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that every new amendment is subject to discussion; five minutes for the amendment and five minutes in opposition to it. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor and will continue.

Mr. FORT. I have said, Mr. Chairman, about all I desire to say upon this question. I hope there will be no special mention of the kind of money to be paid, and when the bonds fall due they must be

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will take note that the committee is now dividing.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I wish to say that the committee evidently does not understand the purport of that amendment. It simply changes the obligation of the bond.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is not in order.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 65.

Mr. WEAVER. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the tellers will continue their count, and members who have not voted are requested to vote to make a quorum.

The tellers continued the count, and reported that there were ayes

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I ask leave to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the section the following:

"And all acts and parts of acts imposing a tax upon the capital and deposits of savings-banks, national banks, State banks, and private bankers are hereby repealed; and the tax upon the circulating notes of the national banks issued upon the bonds authorized by this act shall not exceed one-half of 1 per cent. per annum.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon that. I make the point of order now, that it is not germane to the proposition, and further that it is embraced in a bill now pending before

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman to make his point of order now?

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order now upon both points.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman in support of the point of order.

Mr. MILLS. I do not know that I have anything special to add further than that we are now providing a measure for borrowing money. The proposition now before the House is one for the purpose of borrowing money under the constitutional authority conferred upon Congress to pay debts. The gentleman from New York comes in and proposes as an amendment to the measure the alteration of the present system of taxation, and, instead of raising money even by present system of taxation, and, instead of raising money even by the processes of taxation, he proposes to give away money. The object of this amendment is quite the reverse of the object sought to be accomplished by the bill under consideration. And I give the gentleman notice now that, if he insists on having his amendment entertained by the House, he opens the door for the revision of the whole system of taxation of the United States. If he insists upon pressing the amendment, I tell the gentleman that we can predicate upon that basis legislation which will open the door for the revision of the entire internal-revenue laws and tariff laws of this country, and I shall offer amendments to that covering all those points, including the income tax. It is manifestly not germane to the question ing the income tax. It is manifestly not germane to the question under consideration, which is, as I have stated, a means of borrowing money to meet a present emergency.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. With the menace of the gentleman from Texas, I will not argue the point of order. I will submit it to the Chair without argument, after occupying two or three moments in regard without argument, after occupying two or three moments in regard to the general question.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Will my colleague listen to a suggestion?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to suggest to my colleague that to the fifth section of this bill I think his amendment would be held germane; but I doubt very much whether it is germane to the objects of this section. of this section.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I have but a very few words which I desire to say. I would like to say them now, so that when the amendment becomes germane it may be voted on without anything further from me.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I must object to the gentleman frem New York speaking on the merits of his amendment. I desire to answer the gentleman, and I shall not consent to his getting in a speech if he is to follow it by withdrawing his amendment, so as to preclude others from answering him. If the committee is willing to hear the gentleman, I desire to have an opportunity to answer him. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] that the Chair cannot dictate to gentlemen what shall be embraced in the remarks they make in reference to the proposi-man from Texas.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. If the gentleman from New York is proceeding to discuss the point of order, I have no objection; but if he proposes to speak on the merits, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is bound to presume that the gentleman from New York will address himself to the subject under consideration. He is entitled to the floor and will resume his remarks.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. As I understand it, I mean to stick to the question. I have considerately and earnestly advocated a 3 per cent. rate for this bill, but I have persistently and with equal earnestness insisted that without such relief to the banks as the Secretary of the Treasury has proposed and as this amendment provides, when the bill is finally passed it will be with a 3½ per cent. rate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. My point of order is this, that the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] is still pending and undisposed of. The gentleman from New York is proceeding to discuss the merits of his amendment, and it is not in order to do so. If it is in order for the gentleman from New York on a point of order to discuss the merits of his amendment, this debate would run on without limit; because I desire to introduce a proposition as a substitute for his, and I desire to have the same opportunity as he has of speaking on this question. My point is that the gentleman shall be limited in his remarks to the point of order now pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made by the gentleman gentleman shall be limited if his remarks to the pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made by the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from New York is not addressing himself to the subject now before the Chair; that being the question of the admissibility of this amendment, the point having been made that it is not germane to the section. The Chair would state that the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Towns-HEND] is well taken; and the Chair would suggest to the gentleman from New York that his remarks be confined strictly to the subject under consideration—the question as to whether his amendment is or under consideration—the question as to whether his amendment is or is not germane to the bill under consideration. Mr. CHITTENDEN here resumed his seat.

Mr. CHITTENDEN here resumed his seat.
Mr. GILLETTE rose.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] desire to discuss the question now pending?
Mr. GILLETTE. I understood the gentleman from New York
[Mr. CHITTENDEN] had yielded the floor.
The CHAIRMAN. A question is pending whether the amendment of the gentleman from New York is germane to the bill.
Mr. CHITTENDEN. I would like to make one more remark by unanimous consent. This question now before the House is of very great importance to every man on this floor as a representative of the American people, and I have a few words to say touching the facts of the case to show how unintelligently this discussion has gone on.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. If it is in order to choke me off and to forbid my having three minutes, I submit.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] be allowed to proceed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object, unless there can be debate allowed on both sides. I am willing the gentleman shall discuss the merits of the amendment if other gentlemen have an opportunity to merits of the amendment if other gentlemen have an opportunity to answer him.

answer him.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Towns-HEND] withdraw his point of order?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. As I have said, I am willing that the gentleman shall proceed if other gentlemen—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of order ?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I do not, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is as to the admissibility of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN.] The Chair feels no embarrassment in passing on this question, for the simple reason that the line of demarkation in cases of this kind seems very clearly and very broadly drawn by very numerous precedents, many decisions having been rendered on this question.

The rule has prevailed in legislative bodies for over half a century that no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of an amendment. The first section of the bill has been reported to the committee so often, the committee have been called upon to vote with reference to amendments to that section so often, that the committee are fully advised as to the character and substance of the first section of the bill, and it is unnecessary for the Chair to refer again to the substance and subject-matter of that section. Now, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York goes far beyond the scope of the sub-ject-matter embraced in the first section of the bill. It clearly falls within the exception of the rule, as that exception has been settled by a long line of precedents. The Chair therefore feels no hesitation in ruling that the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mills] is well taken, and that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. WARNER. I offer as an addition to the section that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, make the interest on the certificates hereby authorized payable annually, and make the interest on such certificates 3½ per cent. per annum: Provided, That no certificates of less denomination than $50 shall be issued.

Mr. BLAND. I raise the point of order on that amendment, that the subject to which it relates has already been passed upon by the committee.

Mr. WARNER. It is an amendment to the section under consid-

Mr. BLAND. It reopens everything which has been determined by the committee.

Mr. WARNER. Oh, no; it does not reopen anything.
Mr. MILLS. It changes the rate of interest fixed by the committee. Mr. WARNER. Only as relates to the certificates; not as to the

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] offers an amendment, upon which a point of order is raised by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bland] and the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Mills.] The Chair will hear the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] upon the point of order.

Mr. WARNER. The rate of interest has been fixed in regard to the whole issue, bonds and certificates. I propose to divide the question and make one rate of interest for the certificates and another for the bonds in the discretion of the Secretary. I propose also to limit and make one rate of interest for the certificates and another for the bonds in the discretion of the Secretary. I propose, also, to limit the denomination of the certificates to $50. Under the act of 1879, authorizing the issuing of certificates, they may be of denominations as low as $10. My amendment certainly is in order, and germane to the section under consideration.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Why do you want to change the denominations

Mr. WARNER. I will give my reason after the point of order has been disposed of.

Mr. BLAND. I ask the Clerk to read the rule relating to the question of going back upon a matter that has been acted upon by the

The Clerk read as follows:

When it is proposed to amend by inserting a paragraph, or part of one, the friends of the paragraph may make it as perfect as they can, by amendments, before the question is put for inserting it. If it be received, it cannot be amended afterward in the same stage, because the House has, on a vote, agreed to it in that form. But an amendment which has been inserted may be added to.

committee; the committee has recorded its verdict upon that subject. If at this time the amendment which has been presented should be entertained it would be in the direction of going over the same ground or undoing what the committee has already done. The Chair therefore holds that the point of order made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bland] is well taken, and the amendment is not in

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. WARNER. Then I move to limit the denomination of the certificates to $50

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anderson] to offer an amendment.

Mr. WARNER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER. I desire to inquire whether it would be in order to offer an amendment to this section to limit the denomination of the certificates to be issued to $50.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that that is the same subject-matter that has been considered and passed upon by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WARNER. The committee has not voted upon that particular question.

The CHAIRMAN. In any event the Chair would state to the gentleman from Ohio that the gentleman from Kansas is recognized to present an amendment, which he has been pressing for some time. After the gentleman from Kansas has stated his proposition, and it has been disposed of, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER.]

Mr. ANDERSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's death

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue, as hereinafter provided, currency notes of the United States, which shall not bear interest, and which shall be payable to bearer on demand in the legal-tender notes issued under authority of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide ways and means for the support of the Government," approved March 3, 1863, and of acts amendatory thereof.

From and after June 30, 1881, it shall be unlawful for the Comptroller of the Currency to authorize any association for carrying on the business of banking under title 62 of the Revised Statutes to commence the business of banking under said title; and it shall be unlawful for him, or for any other officer of the United States, from and after June 30, 1881, to issue circulating notes to any association which shall at that date be duly authorized to transact the business of banking under said title 62, except for the purpose of replacing mutilated, worn-out, or destroyed circulating notes, as provided in section 5184 of the Revised Statutes.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall ascertain the number, denominations, and aggregate amount of all circulating notes issued to banking associations under title 62 outstanding June 30, 1881; and when, from any cause, any of said circulating notes at that date outstanding shall be redeemed by the Treasurer, as provided in section 5234 Revised Statutes, he shall thereupon, and not otherwise, be authorized to issue the currency notes herein provided, of the same denominations and to the same amount as that of the circulating notes as redeemed by him; and he shall thereafter pay out said currency notes in discharge of any services rendered to or for supplies purchased by the United States after June 30, 1881.

The aggregate amount of currency notes issued to banking associations, and of currency notes issued by the Treasurer, shall at no time be greater than the total amount of circulating notes outstanding June 30, 1881, as ascertained by the Tre

Said currency notes shall be received at par in all parts of the United States in payment of taxes, excises, public lands, and all other dues to the United States, except duties on imports; and also for all salaries and other debts and demands owing by the United States to individuals, corporations, and associations within the United States, except interest on the public debt and in redemption of the national currency.

Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to reserve all points of order upon that amendment. It is a long one, and I am not certain that I apprehend exactly its full purport.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. I understand this is a substitute for the section.

Mr. ANDERSON. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. This is presented as an amendment by way of addition to the section.

addition to the section.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, in support of this amendment, I wish to say that two years ago the republicans of my State expressed their desire that the national-bank currency should be withdrawn and legal-tender notes substituted therefor. The declaration of their platform on this subject was as follows:

That experience has shown the greenback currency (the creation of the republican party and under whose fostering care it has been brought to a par with cointo be admirably adapted to the wants of trade; and to the end that there may be but one class of paper currency, we favor the withdrawal of the national-bank notes, substituting therefor greenback currency, issued directly by the Government, as the sole paper currency of the country. And we demand that it be issued in sufficient volume to fully meet the wants of business without depreciating its value, and that it shall be received in payment of all debts and dues, public and private, except as otherwise specified by contract; that we are in favor of an honest greenback, that shall always be worth its face in coin, and that it be issued in the largest volume that can be kept affoat at par with coin, to which end we favor a law of Congress by which the volume of greenback currency in circulation shall always obey the natural law of supply and demand,

This amendment. I have submitted seeks to provide a currency of question is put for inserting it. If it be received, it cannot be amended afterward in the same stage, because the House has, on a vote, agreed to it in that form. But an amendment which has been inserted may be added to.

Mr. WARNER. "The amendment may be added to."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels disposed to hold, and does hold, that the subject-matter embraced in the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has been acted upon by the for twenty years from the date of their organization, vested rights under their charters; and, secondly, because our present Treasury note was declared a legal-tender as a war measure, and if the United States in time of peace should undertake to make Treasury notes a legal-tender the Supreme Court of the United States would declare the issuance of such notes unconstitutional. Now, instead of issuing legal-tender notes, I propose to issue currency-notes which shall not be a legal-tender. While you cannot, in my judgment, abolish at the present time the national banks, because of their vested rights, you can place the Government in such a position that upon the expiration of the bank charters at the end of twenty years the Government can retire the national-bank notes and substitute for them non-interest bear-tire that the latter of the ing notes of the United States, which will not be a legal-tender and will therefore be held constitutional. Could you substitute to-day these non-interest-bearing Treasury notes for the national-bank circulation you would thereby be enabled to retire $343,000,000 of indebtedness which would not need to be funded.

which would not need to be funded.

Allow me to refer a moment to the number of these banks and the amount of their circulation. In 1870 there were 1,651 national banks, and their current circulation was about three hundred million dollars. The charters of those banks will expire in 1890. In 1891 you will have coming in bonds to the amount of $250,000,000. If you can then substitute these currency notes, if you can then put in circulation this non-interest bearing currency, you will save to that extent the payment of interest. Three years later, in 1894, the charters of the banks organized in 1874 will expire, there being 2,004 of such banks, having a circulation of about three hundred and fifty million dollars. At that time you will have coming in $100,000,000 of your Pacific Railroad bonds; and having no reputation as a prophet I am quite willing to risk the prediction that the United States will have quite willing to risk the prediction that the United States will have to pay those bonds.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, obtained the floor and yielded his time to

Mr. ANDERSON. You have to-day 2,090 banks, with a circulation of something more than three hundred and forty-three million dollars. Your bonds of 1907 will mature twenty-seven years hence, when you will have to meet $738,000,000 of indebtedness. I claim that the adoption of this amendment, while it will preserve all the rights vested under the law, in the banks—not, perhaps, gentlemen, because you care anything about them, but simply because you care something, as I do, about keeping the faith of the Government—will result in these advantages:

1. That the untaxed capital now locked up in bonds of the banks

1. That the untaxed capital now locked up in bonds of the banks will bear its share of the public burden.

2. As currency notes would be in the hands of the people, they instead of the bondholders would save this tax.

3. The Government, and therefore the people, would save interest on $343,000,000 which must otherwise be paid; and
4. The execution of this measure will bring the nation $343,000,000 in amount nearer, and in time six years nearer, to that triumphant day when this people will be free from that greatest of all burdens, a national debt, and to that other and yet more triumphant day when a national bond will be regarded as a rare relic of history, and when 100,000,000 of Americans will know no bonds save those of liberty, right and God.

right, and God.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. It is very evident, Mr. Chairman, from this discussion that the subject of this amendment is not relevant to the bill under consideration. I wish to raise a point of order upon the amendment before making the motion which I desire to submit, that the committee rise.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Let us pass on this section first.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. My point of order is that this amendment is not germane to the objects of the section or of the bill, that it presents irrelevant matter.

Mr. ANDERSON. I wish to be heard on this point of order. I desire to call attention to the fact that this amendment provides for the issuance of currency notes, which would enable the Treasury to meet a part of this debt proposed to be funded, and that just as rapidly as any actional bank may go out of existence this non-interest bearing currency with which you meet your indebtedness would be substi-tuted for the national-bank notes. I submit, therefore, that the amendment is in order

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I submit that neither the discussion of the national banks nor the discussion of the currency of the country has any relation to the letter, spirit, or object of this bill. This is simply a bill to fund a portion of the public indebtedness, and the presentation of anything outside of that, under the guise of an amendment, may lead to a never-ending discussion, to the exclusion of the consideration of the bill itself. I therefore make the point of order

Mr. ANDERSON. I wish to suggest in regard to that point that this bill is for the issuance of bonds and notes, and that the amendment is also for the issuance of notes, and that it is germane, and exactly germane, quite as much as any amendment which has been proposed.

Mr. WEAVER. One other word. It is germane for another reason, Mr. Chairman, that one of the objects of the bill is to provide new bonds as a basis for national banking, and by express provision in the bill these are to be made the only bonds hereafter to be deposited with the Treasury as security for national-banknotes. It is certainly germane for that reason, in addition to the one mentioned by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The point of order I make is that the amendment moved by the gentleman from Kansas is identical with a bill now pending before the House, and under our rules for that reason it cannot be received.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask for the production of that bill. I never heard the substance of this as having been included in any bill now pending.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Is not the gentleman aware there is a bill pending before the House almost in totidem verbis?

Mr. ANDERSON. I never heard of it.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Then I can inform the gentleman there is such a bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. I should like to have that bill produced.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move the committee rise.

Mr. CHALMERS. I hope the committee will rise, so we may have an opportunity to read the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas. I should like to read and understand it before being called upon to vote upon it.

Mr. DIBRELL. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his motion to rise, in order that I may have read for information an amendment which I propose to offer.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I yield for that purpose.

The amendment was read, as follows:

And in order to meet the interest upon the bonds and certificates or notes herein provided for, and to pay the same as they mature, an income tax is hereby assessed upon the net income of each person, company, firm, bank, banking association, insurance company, insurance agency, railroad company, or any other company or association in the United States, as follows, to wit: Upon the net income of $3,500 and under $5,000, 3 per cent.; and upon all such incomes of $5,000 and over a tax of 4 per cent. is hereby assessed, to be levied and collected annually under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. And the money arising from this income tax shall be set apart and used exclusively in the payment of the bonds, certificates or notes, and interest herein provided for.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I now renew my motion that the com-

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Coverr reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration a bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PUBLIC ADVERTISING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I present the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the mendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2658) to regulate the award and compensation for public advertising in the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the said bill and agree to the same amended to read as follows:

"That all advertising required by existing laws to be done in the District of Columbia by all the Departments of the Government shall be given to one daily and one weekly newspaper of each of the two principal political parties and to one daily and one weekly neutral newspaper: Provided, That the rates of compensation for such service shall in no case exceed the regular commercial rate of the newspaper selected, nor shall any advertisement be paid for unless in accordance with section 3233 of the Revised Statutes.

"SEC. 2. All laws or parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

And the Senate agree to the same.

PHILIP C. HAYES,
Managers on the part of the House.
WM. PINKNEY WHYTE,
MATT W. RANSOM,
H. B. ANTHONY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The report was adopted.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE M. ADAMS.

Mr. FIELD, from the Committee on Elections, submitted a report on the petition of George M. Adams, which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MICHAEL MEENAN, DECEASED.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I move, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent, that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2331) granting pensions to the widow and minor children of Michael Meenan, deceased, and that the same be now considered and passed.

There was no objection; and the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll, at the rate of $3 per month, the name of Emma Meenan, widow of Michael Meenan, deceased, late a corporal in Company E, Second Regiment Delaware Volunteers, also the names of Mary Meenan, William Meenan, George Meenan, and Edward Meenan, minor children of the said Michael Meenan, deceased, at the rate of $2 each per month; the said pensions to be payable to the parties hereinbefore named, respectively, from and after May 15, 1876, the day of the death of the aforesaid Corporal Meenan.

The second section provides that the aforesaid pensions be continued and paid subject to the limitations and regulations as to widow hood and minority provided by existing laws in relation to the pensions of United States soldiers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move that the House do now adjourn. The SPEAKER. Before the motion to adjourn is submitted the Chair desires consent to lay before the House certain executive communications.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I yield for that purpose.

CONTINGENT AND OTHER EXPENSES, STATE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting detailed statements showing the manner in which the contingent fund of the Department for the year ending June 30, 1880, has been expended; also the manner in which the contingent fund for foreign missions has been expended and an analytical statement of all moneys disbursed by the disbursing clerk of that Department; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC SURVEYS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of Major Benyaurd on surveys in Illinois, Mississippi, and Missouri; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEYS OF CERTAIN RIVERS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of Colonel Macomb on surveys of rivers and creeks in Delaware, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COFFROTH. I hope the gentleman will withhold the motion to enable me to offer a resolution asking for an evening session for the consideration of pension bills.

Mr. COFFROTH. I submit the following resolution:

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, transmitting, in compliance with law, his report for the year 1880; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of John M. Forbes and 12 others, praying for the passage of a law making suitable provision for our retired and retiring Presidents. At the proper time I shall present, by request, a bill which accompanies the petition. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of William H. Morgan and 30 others, citizens of Beverly, Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions to the bill (S. Miller & Co., manufacturers of vinegar, and several others, citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of a bill to regulate the manufacture of vinegar by the alcoholic vaporizing process; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TELLER presented the petition of W. E. Wheeler and 40 others, citizens of Golden, Colorado, praying for the passage of the amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions to the bill (S. No. 946) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was judicial district into an eastern and western division and for the location of the United States court for the eastern division at Starkville, Mississippi; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I present the memorial of W. E. Dodge, Howard Crosby, John Hall, S. M. Moore, William C. Gray, S. R. Riggs, and T. M. Sinclair, a committee of the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, appointed at its meeting in May last in the city of Madison, Wisconsin, to represent to Congress their most earnest desires on the question of Indian rights and Indian civilization, in which they state their sincere belief that the best way to ization, in which they state their sincere belief that the best way to elevate the Indian is to give him a home with a perfect title in fee-simple, to protect him by the laws of the land and make him amena-ble to the same; and to give him the advantages of a good educa-tion, and grant him full religious liberty. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I present a memorial of the bench and bar of the city of Richmond, Virginia, and the attorney-general of the State and many leading lawyers all over Virginia, in favor of the passage of a law for the erection of a statue in the city of Washington of Chief-Justice Marshall. I understand that a bill for that purpose is before the Committee on the Library. I move the memorial be referred to that committee.

No. 1988) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library, with an accompanying report from the same committee, which I ask may be printed for the use of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. All reports are printed under the rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does that contain the report of the persons employed to consider the question of the extension of the Capitol?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes sir

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of William Hazelit, praying for back pay and a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 2030) granting a pension to William Hazelit.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be rejected.

Mr. CALL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1107) granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Upright, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSTON. A number of bills have been referred to the Committee on Agriculture on the subject of pleuro-pneumonia. They embrace such a large subject, and the bills are so various in their provisions and so many difficulties surround them, that the committee who have had the subject under consideration have concluded that who have had the subject under consideration have concluded that the better plan would be to report the bills back to the Senate without recommendation and let them go upon the Calendar. Then the whole subject will be before the Senate to be called up at any time that any Senator interested may choose to do so. I therefore report without recommendation the bill (S. No. 1637) to provide for the suppression of infectious and contagious diseases of domesticated animals; and the bill (S. No. 1893) for the suppression and prevention of pleuro-pneumonia in neat cattle. I ask that they be placed on the Calendar. Calendar submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Private Land Claims have instructed me to report back the bill (S. No. 791) for the relief of F. G. Schwatka, sr., and ask its reference to the Committee on Claims. This is a claim arising out of a settlement made by Mr. Schwatka under the donation act of 1850, and is a claim for money. It has been twice considered by the Committee on Claims and it ought to go to that Committee again. I therefore move that the Committee on Private Land Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the letter from the Secretary of War transmitting a copy of a letter from the clerk in charge of the War Department library inviting attention to the act of June 20, 1878, which provides that, with the exception of record books, "hereafter no binding shall be done for any Department of the Government except in plain sheep or cloth," and recommending that the law be amended so as to except the library of the War Department from the provision of the act referred to, have instructed me to report it back to the Senate and ask to be discharged from its further consideration. The Senate has already passed a bill in conformity with the wishes of the Secretary.

The report was agreed to.

The report was agreed to. Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1569) granting a pension to William H. Walker, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

YORKTOWN CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am instructed by the Joint Select Committee on the Yorktown Centennial Celebration, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 337) authorizing and requesting the President to extend to the Government and people of France an invita-tion to join the Government and people of the United States in the observance of the centennial anniversary of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown, Virginia, to report it favorably and recommend its passage.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Anthony. When the joint resolution was referred I called the attention of the Senate to the fact that it made no appropriation. It is an invitation that cannot be refused, an invitation from one government to another; and certainly there should be some appropriation to defray the expenses of the reception of those who are invited here. I hope that the chairman of the Committee on the Yorktown Centennial Celebration will introduce a bill making an appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I agree with the Senator from Rhode Island that there should be some appropriation made. The French Government ought to be invited, and I think there ought to be an appropriation ought to be invited, and I think there ought to be an appropriation to defray the expenses of entertaining its representatives. Whether an appropriation ought to be put in the joint resolution itself or introduced as a separate measure, I do not know. Let the joint resolution be placed on the Calendar, to be taken up in a day or two, and in the mean time I will consult with the committee as to the proper mode of bringing the matter before the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am unable to hear the Senator, but I understand him to say that when the joint resolution comes up for consideration he will move an amendment making an appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSTON. No; I said I would have the joint resolution put on the Calendar and give notice that I should call it up in a few days, and in the mean time we can determine what is the better form to propose an appropriation, whether on this or on a separate bill.

to propose an appropriation, whether on this or on a separate form to propose an appropriation, whether on this or on a separate bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. There certainly should be an appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask, therefore, that the joint resolution be put en the Calendar, and give notice to the Senate that on next Wednesday I will ask the Senate to consider the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

PRINTING OF SURVEYS.

Mr. WHYTE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back a resolution directing the Public Printer to furnish printed copies of the surveys of certain rivers favorably with an amendment; but before sending it to the desk I desire to say that there was a misapprehension on the part of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Brown] who introduced the resolution as to the period of time during which the surveys had been in the hands of the Public Printer. I find that one of them was not delivered to him until the 10th of January and the other on the 8th of January. The printing of one is about comthe other on the 8th of January. The printing of one is about completed and of the other will be completed in the course of a few days. I do not know whether it is necessary to pass any resolution instructing him to return the surveys, but if it is necessary it is well to add other surveys besides those indicated in the resolution of the Senator

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read, and also the amendment of the committee.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate, at the earliest practicable moment, copies of the surveys furnished by the Chief of Engineers of the Altamaha, the Ocmulgee, the Oconee, the Canoochee, and the Savannah Rivers, between Savannah and Augusta, and also the survey of Romney Marsh, near Doboy, and the mouth of Jekyl Creek, as the printed copies of such surveys are necessary for the use of the Senate.

The amendment reported from the Committee on Printing was, in line 5, between the word "Canoochee" and the words "and the," to insert "and all other surveys for the improvement of rivers and harbors now in his hands."

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any necessity, in view of the remarks made by the Senator from Maryland, for passing such a resolution of instruction when the Public Printer is hastening the reports as rapidly as practicable? I shall certainly object to any resolution which has the effect of directing the Public Printer to send in reports of the surveys in one State in preference to those in another. Let the resolution be printed and placed on the Calendar. I object to its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made the resolution goes

COAST SURVEY REPORTS.

Mr. WHYTE. I am also directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the resolution to print 3,000 extra copies of the Report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the year ending June 30, 1880, with a recommendation that it pass; and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 3,000 extra copies of the Report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the year ending June 30, 1880, for distribution by the said Superintendent.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOAR asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (8. No. 2029) to provide for the retired and retiring Presidents of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say, as I present the bill by request, that I understand that the provisions of no bill which shall pass can be applicable to the present incumbent of the presidential office; that there is no person in existence except the one living ex-President of the United States to whom such a provision shall be applicable, and that I should myself in voting for such a provision, which I shall do with all my heart, be very largely influenced by what should seem to me most likely from all the information I can get to be most agreeable to the taste of the illustrious person who will be first and chiefly affected by the provision. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURNSIDE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2031) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary S.

W. Harris; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GROOME (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2032) granting a pension to John C. McConnell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BROWN asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2033) to appropriate money to light the Savannah River, between the mouth of said river and the city of Savannah; which was read twice by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BROWN. I prefer that it should go to the Committee on Appropriations, as I understand that matters concerning light-houses are usually referred to that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

Mr. HAMPTON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2034) for the relief of Willis N. Arnold; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on

Mr. PLUMB (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2035) for an appropriation to deepen the channel over the bar of the harbor of Galveston, Texas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce

Mr. TELLER (by request) asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2036) for the relief of C. Theodor Burchardt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. SLATER asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (8. No. 2037) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Snake River, midway between Grange City and Texas Ferry, in Washington Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PENDLETON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 142) relative to the erection of a monument at the Wyandot Mission, Upper Sandusky, Ohio; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SENATE TELEPHONE.

Mr. BECK submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate be, and it is hereby, directed to cause a telephone to be placed at some convenient point, for the use of the Senate, in connection with the general telephone system of the city of Washington, and that the expense thereof be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the resolution, and it was read the second time.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. INGALLS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the forty-third standing rule of the Senate be amended by striking out in line 13 the words "relating to adjournment" and inserting the words "to adjourn."

UNVEILING OF FARRAGUT STATUE.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Be it resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That the Committees on Naval Affairs of the two Houses of Congress be, and they are hereby, instructed to co-operate with the Secretary of the Navy and with each other in making all necessary and proper arrangements for unveiling the statue of the late Admiral Farragut, now finished and erected in Farragut Square.

DISTRICT ADVERTISING.

Mr. WHYTE. I desire to call up the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2658) to regulate the award of, and compensation for, public advertising in the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate consider the report at this time? The Chair hears no objection, and it is before the Senate.

Mr. WHYTE. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] made some remarks when it was up before, and I desire to call his attention to the report now.

tion to the report now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not suppose that any observations that I could make would convince the Senate at this present moment of the impropriety of passing this proposed legislation, of dealing out the Government advertising in this town in equal shares to two or three different political newspapers. I stated the other day that I did not believe in the theory of such a course; and I will add now that I think the advertising in this town might be made in some one paper, have it the one of the largest circulation, and that would be all-sufficient for the purposes of the Government and would save two-thirds of the expense. We all know with the railroads and the telegraphs and the general dissemination of intelligence about the business of the Government, that all the people who do bid for furnishing Government supplies of various kinds for the Army, and the Navy, and for printing, and so on, are perfectly acquainted with the fact when bids are to be called for, what sort of property is needed; so that the amount of advertising required is entirely different and less, as it seems to me, than what it used to be years ago when these means of information were so much less complete.

My only objection, aside from the dislike I have to the principle of speaking in the laws about political parties in any case, is that providing for three newspapers is I think a greatly unnecessary expense. That is all I wish to say. I do not expect to stop it; only I wish to put in my protest.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the conference report.

The report was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 1922) for the relief of Brigadier-General and Brevet Major-General Edward O. C. Ord, United States Army

Mr. FARLEY. If the morning business is concluded, I wish to make a motion now to take—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island has been recognized.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas demands the regular order, which is the consideration of the Calendar of General

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that the pending and all prior orders be postponed for the purpose of considering the bill I have indicated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island that the pending order, being the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under the Anthony rule, be postponed for the purpose stated by him.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 22, noes 7.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is a further count insisted upon? No quorum has voted. Mr. INGALLS. The Senate has deliberately adopted upon the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] a resolution for the better conduct of the public business, to the effect that the time between the expiration of morning business and the hour of half past one shall be devoted to the consideration of cases on the Calendar. If the rule is to be abandoned and the time of the Senate is to be disposed of in the consideration of such bills as the alacrity or ingenuity of any Senator can bring before it, of course I have no objections; but as long as that rule stands I feel disposed to insist upon its observance.

I have no objection to the bill proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE;] but I appeal to him whether it is just to lay aside this order at this stage of the session, when the Calendar is burdened with matters of great importance to every Senator on the floor. We have here the accumulated labor of all the committees of this body we have here the accumulated about of an the committees of this body and they are all entitled to consideration. It is unjust, it is unfair to every member of the body and unfair to every committee of the body, after we have adopted this rule, to depart from it in the manner proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. Burnside.]

I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion. We can pass his bill after the morning hour has expired; I suppose there will be no objection to it; but if we depart from the rule in his case we must in every ton to it; but if we depart from the rule in his case we must in every case in fairness to all who may have measures they desire to promote.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I do not think I have ever before made a motion or any kind of an effort to dispense with working under the Anthony rule; and if I had thought there would have been the slightest objection to the passage of this bill, or, in other words, if I had not thought it would have been but the work of a minute, I should not have made the motion. At the suggestion of the Senator from Kansag I will withdraw my motion. I certainly do not desire to interfere sas I will withdraw my motion. I certainly do not desire to interfere with the work of the morning hour, but I do hope that at the proper time when I shall ask the Senate to consider the bill it will be taken up and considered. It is a very important bill, and I do not think it will take any time to pass it.

VAGRANCY IN THE DISTRICT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the Calendar at the point reached when it was last under consideration.

The bill (S. No. 1477) for the punishment of tramps in the District of Columbia was announced as being first in order upon the Calendar, and the consideration of the bill was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon the amendment by way of substitute proposed by the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. Morgan,] which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and empowered to adopt all ordinances, consistent with the laws and Constitution of the United States, that may be necessary to repress vagrancy and mendicancy, and to punish offenses against public decency, in the District of Columbia. Provided, That in no case shall the fine or amercement to be imposed under such ordinances exceed $100, nor shall imprisonment when imposed by such ordinances exceed a period of three calendar mouths.

SEC. 2. That the police court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction to try all offenses made punishable by such ordinances, and to enforce the same.

Mr. MORGAN. The bill has been so nearly matured by the Senate that, believing that nothing further will be accomplished by conferring this special power upon the commissioners, I ask leave to withdraw my substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama withdraws his amendment, as he has the power to do, the yeas and nays not having been ordered upon it.

Mr. WHYTE. I move to strike out section 5 of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, to strike out the fifth section of the bill, which will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That any act of beggary or vagrancy by any person not a resident of the District of Columbia shall be evidence that the person committing the same is a vagrant within the meaning of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire, as I was not in the Senate when the bill was last under discussion, whether any amendment has been offered to section 6. If not, I desire to offer an amendment

The VICE-PRESIDENT. None has been offered.

Mr.TELLER. Then I call the attention of the committee especially to section 6. It seems to me that section as it now stands would authorize the court, convicting a minor under seventeen years of age authorize the court, convicting a minor under seventeen years of age of any of these offenses, to send him to the reformatory institution, whether a bond is given or not. I suppose it is the idea of the committee that a minor convicted should go there provided a bond was refused or neglected to be given. If that is not the idea, then the section is objectionable. Therefore I move to insert after the word "act," in line 2 of section 6, the words "and neglect or refuse to give the security required by the second section of this act." That will enable the court to send minors to the reformatory institution whenever they shall fail to give the security. If they give the security ever they shall fail to give the security. If they give the security they ought not to be sent there.

Mr. WHYTE. I did not hear distinctly what the Senator from Colorado stated. I presume the latter clause of the sixth section accomplishes his purpose.

Mr. TELLER. I have looked over the latter clause, and it leaves it somewhat questionable. The amendment that I offer makes it certain. I do not suppose the committee intended to say that any boy under seventeen years of age convicted of an offense of the character indicated herein, although his parents or others might be willing to give the security, should be sent to the reformatory institution. To make it certain and clear as to what it does mean, I want the amendment made that I have suggested. I think probably that that was the intention of the committee.

Mr. WHYTE. The Senator will see that there are three distinct clauses all in the alternative, and it is intended to apply to the different classes of cases. There are some orphans who have no parents and some who have no friends. It is intended to apply to all those cases. There are some whose parents the moment they give authority will obtain their discharge. If they do not, of course, they come in under the other two clauses and provisoes of this measure.

Mr. TELLER. There can be no objection to my amendment unless the committee intend that the court convicting a boy of a slight trespass in the night-time may have the power, without allowing him to give the bail, to send him to a reformatory school. If that is the intention of the committee, I want the whole section stricken out. If that is not the intention of the committee, my amendment makes certain that which is to-day uncertain. It cannot do any harm.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was rejected.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, agree with the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, as amended?

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the punishment of vagrancy in the District of Columbia."

G. W. CANDEE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 904) for the relief of Major G. W. Candee; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Major G. W. Candee, paymaster United States Army, of $2,650, being the amount stolen from him at Fort Arbuckle, Indian Territory, in the fall of 1867, without fault or negligence on his part, and was restored by him out of private fault.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 8 to strike out "seven" and insert "nine;" so as to read "eighteen hundred and sixty-nine."

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HAMP-TON April 13, 1880:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 994) for the relief Major G. W. Candee, paymaster, United States Army, have duly considered the same and accompanying papers, and recommend that it pass.

The facts upon which this recommendation is based are so fully set forth in the reports of Major Candee and the Paymaster-General that your committee ask to make them a part of their report.

War Department,

Washington City, January 8, 1880.

The Secretary of War has the honor to transmit to the House of Representatives, for the Committee on Military Affairs, copies of reports of Major G.W. Candee, paymaster, United States Army, and Brigadier-General Benjamin Alvord, Paymaster-General, United States Army, dated, respectively, December 29, 1879, and January 3, 1880, containing information called for under date of December 9, 1879, by Hon. Benjamin Le Fevers, sub-committee of the Committee on Military Affairs, in relation to the inclosed bill, House of Representatives No. 3050, for the relief of Major G. W. Candee.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 9, 1879.

SIR: The accompanying bill (H. R. No. 3050) for the relief of Major G. W. Candee, paymaster, United States Army, is before the committee, and referred to me for examination and report.

I respectfully request the following information, namely:
First. The military history of the officer.
Second. Was there a want of reasonable care and diligence exercised by the paymaster, Major Candee, while on disbursing duty at Fort Arbuckle, Indian Territory, at the time $2,650 was stolen from his safe?

Third. Is much consideration due Major Candee for his promptness in repairing the loss of the amount of money stolen?

Fourth. If no fault is attached to Major Candee, and his reputation is that of a faithful, industrious, and honorable paymaster, would the Department hold it to be an act of justice if the relief asked for in bill H. R. No. 3049 was granted?

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Sub-committee.

Hon. ALEXANDER RAMSEY, Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

[Second indorsement.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 29, 1879.

Respectfully returned to the Paymaster-General, inviting attention to the following report:

November 15, 1869, I received orders from my immediate superior officer, Colonel
N. W. Brown, Assistant Paymaster-General, United States Army, which orders commanded me to leave my station, Fort Smith, Arkansas, and proceed on a disbursing tour in a prescribed district and pay the troops stationed therein. For the purpose I took with me $83,000 in paper currency of the United States in packages running from $100 to $5,000. At the Creek Agency, Indian Territory, two companies of the Tenth Cavalry were stationed. In paying the said command I used $4,350 from a five-thousand-dollar package, which amount paid was marked off the strap that secured the bills. The broken package freturned to the safe and placed it with the unbroken packages forming the top layer. I locked the safe and placed it with the unbroken packages forming the top layer. I locked the safe and placed it with the unbroken packages forming the top layer. I locked the safe and placed it with the unbroken packages forming the top layer. I locked the safe and placed it with the unbroken packages forming the top layer. I locked the safe and placed to me by Captain Joseph B. Rife, Sixth Infantry, to share his quarters during my temporary residence at the post. After luncheon arringements were made to begin the payment of the troops. I unlocked and took from my safe several packages of money, locking my safe afterward. My clerk assisted in the removing of the straps and placing the bills on the pay-lable. When I ceased disbursing for the day I returned to the safe the small amount of money left on the table. As I locked and took the key from the safe the small amount of money left on the table. PAYMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE, January 3, 1880.

Respectfully returned to the honorable Secretary of War.

As to the military history of Major George W. Candee, paymaster, he was first appointed an additional paymaster February 23, 1864, and was mustered out January 15, 1866. He was afterward appointed a paymaster in the Army, January 17, 1867, under the eighteenth section of act of 28th July, 1866, which required the vacancies to be selected from those who had served as additional paymasters. His being selected for reappointment exhibits his standing during the war; and his entire course since has been confirmatory of the high character he has always held for probity, vigilance, and intelligent discharge of his duties. Thus I doubt not the affidavits presented by himself and his clerk, Lewis Candee, his brother, deserve to be treated with entire respect. His averment as to his care, caution, and diligence on the occasion referred to should have great weight. His brother, Lewis Candee, several years clerk to him, stands very high in character.

No report of this transaction was made to this office. Major Candee, no doubt, refrained from making such report and applied at once to his father for the money to replace the amount under the supposition that the loss must be promptly made up in order to maintain his record.

It hink that consideration is due this officer for his prompt restitution. The claim he has for legislation in this case is not absolute, but in proportion to his long and faithful service to the Government.

In private life, a rich bank often makes good to a painstaking, faithful teller an amount unluckily paid or lost, when there is unmistakable evidence of high character and fidelity, though the act of the bank must be one not at all founded on legal claims, but prompted by the bounty of the corporation in the spirit of generosity and good policy toward an unfortunate employé.

BENJ. ALVORD,
Paymaster-General United States Army.

I, Charles H. Smith, clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives of the United States of America, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of an instrument of writing now on file in the committee room of the Military Committee aforesaid.

Witness my hand, this 21st day of February, A. D. 1880.

CHARLES H. SMITH,

Clerk Military Committee, House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BERNARD REILLY, JR.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 147) to authorize the President to restore Bernard Reilly, jr., to his former rank in the Army

Mr. INGALLS. There seems to be an adverse report in that case,

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. EATON in the chair.) The bill will be passed over.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 120) to permit Elias C. Boudinot, of the Cherokee Nation, to sue in the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that another bill has passed, and this probably will not be taken up.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Indiana is present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. VOORHEES. That may be indefinitely postponed, as there is a House bill covering the same subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the bill will be indefinitely postponed. It is so ordered.

THE BARK MARY TERESA.

THE BARK MARY TERESA.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2262) for the relief of Juliet Leef, widow, and the heirs of Henry Leef, deceased, owner of the bark Mary Teresa, illegally seized by Alexander H. Tyler, consul of the United States at Bahia, Brazil.

Mr. TELLER. That is reported adversely.

Mr. WHYTE. I hope that bill may be considered and disposed of. There is a minority report as well as a majority report. The bill has been before Congress for a great many years. There have been seven or eight favorable reports in the House of Representatives, and I believe in all the time it has been pending this is the first adverse report made in regard to the case. It is made upon a question of law port made in regard to the case. It is made upon a question of law which is in a nutshell. The facts are admitted on both sides, and which is in a nutshell. The facts are admitted on both sides, and therefore it will not take the Senate long to dispose of it. I hope nobody will object to our taking it up and disposing of it.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $20,000 for indemnity and compensation to Juliet Leef, widow, and the heirs of Henry Leef, deceased, to be paid to them or to their legal representative, in full for losses and damages sustained by Henry Leef in his life-time in consequence of the illegal seizure of the bark Mary Teresa by Alexander H. Tyler, consul of the United States at Bahia, Brazil.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the reading of the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HOAR-April 14, 1880:

April 14, 1880:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Juliet Leef, and also the bill (H. R. No. 2262) providing for the relief prayed for in said memorial, have considered the same, and report:

The facts of the case we believe to be, in substance, as stated by the minority of the committee. Upon the facts the question arises whether it is the duty of the United States to compensate citizens for injuries to their property or business-caused by the improper exercise of his powers by a consul of the United States. We do not think it is the duty of the Government to make such compensation, whether the consul acted conscientiously and erred in a doubtful case, or whether his actions were arbitrary and wanton. We can see no reason why, if this claim be allowed, the Government ought not to compensate persons for illegal arrests, wrongful judgments of courts, wrongful acts of military or naval officers in war, and all cases where public anthority has been abused. We do not think such a precedent ought to be established. Government acts through human and imperfect agents. The liability to suffer from their error is one of the unavoidable ills of life. We recommend that the prayer of the petition be disallowed, and the bill indefinitely postponed.

Mr. INGALLS. Are not the views of the minority on file?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They are, and will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the views of the minority, submitted by Mr. PRYOR April 14, 1880; but before the reading was concluded,

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair.) The morning hour having expired, the Senate will resume the consideration of its unfinished business.

BEN. HOLLADAY.

BEN. HOLLADAY.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand there is a communication from one of the Departments which ought to be laid before the Senate in order that it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate a communication which is on the table. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Post-Office Department,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1831.

Sir: In response to Senate resolution certified to me by you on the 11th instant. I have the honor herewith to transmit to you, first, certified copy of contract with Overland Mail Company, statement of route as originally contracted for, the acceptance by the company to change of service was effected, and of all orders of record changing the service thereafter, or the pay of contractors. The sums paid for service under said contract and the several orders given can be obtained from the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department. It will be observed that contract for this service, by its terms, ended with June 30, 1864. There being no successor for the service prepared to take it July 1, 1864, the company continued the service as far as Placerville until September 30, 1864. The order of October 1, 1864, anthorized payment for the same. The routes upon which more than any others the overland mails were carried from October 1, 1864, to June 30, 1867, were routes No. 14260, Saint Joseph to Salt Lake City, and No. 14626, Salt Lake City to Folsom City.

Second. For contract and pay for service upon route 14260 you are respectfully referred to Executive Document No. 211, a copy of which is herewith handed you.

Third. Certified copy of contract with Overland Mail Company for the service over route 14626, and all orders of record pertaining to the service, are transmitted to you.

Respectfully.

to you. Respectfully,

JAMES N. TYNER, Acting Postmaster-General.

Hon. JOHN C. BURCH, Secretary of Senate, Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that that communication be printed, not including the executive document referred to, which has already been printed printed.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to inquire, is this the same contract once presented and once already printed?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; the Department sends that with the others, and I ask that that be not printed with the others.

Mr. CONKLING. But my friend I am sure does not take in the whole of my question. Does this include the contract presented here the other day which I believe was printed in the RECORD?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know whether it does or not.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest to the Senator that he had better look. It is hardly worth while to print this thing the second time in twentyfour hours.

Mr. COCKRELL. The advantage of having it printed here will be that all the proceedings had on it will be printed immediately be that all the proceedings had on it will be printed immediately after it and come in regular order.

Mr. CONKLING. I confess I am appalled that an economist so conspicuous as the honorable Senator from Missouri, the watch-dog of the Treasury, the guardian of frugality, the special crusader in behalf of saving money, should propose to send down to the Printing Office that voluminous document and have it printed again for nothing, squandering from the public purse if indeed it has once been printed in the official RECORD of the Senate within twenty-four or thirty-six hours. When such a Senator becomes so profuse of the public money, for one I stand aghast.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri suggests that all that part of the document not already printed shall be printed.

Mr. CONKLING. Not having been printed already either as a document or in the RECORD?

ument or in the RECORD ?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That excludes everything.

Mr. CONKLING. So I supposed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Here I have the printed letter of the Postmaster-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Here I have the printed letter of the Postmaster-General, which has those very contracts alluded to there.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest to my friend from Missouri in all earnestness now that he let his motion lie for a moment until he can look at these papers. If this matter has all been printed, he surely does not want it all printed over again.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know the document which the Senator from Kentucky has does not contain all that is in this document. That is the document I referred to; but I will let the motion lie on the table for the present for the present.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will resume the consideration of the unfinished business, being the Army appropriation

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Holladay bill was informally laid aside.

Mr. INGALLS. That was yesterday.
Mr. CONKLING. It remains the unfinished business every morning, and I ask that it be so announced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. CONKLING. Let it be presented as the unfinished business and then let it lie aside.

Mr. VOORHEES. Somebody else might understand it otherwise; but if I understand the custom of the Senate it is that when we reach the regular order of business it is announced to the Senate and then it may be laid sside.

Mr. CONKLING. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Mol-laday bill is before the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be reported.

The Secretary read the title of the bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of

Ben. Holladay.

Mr. WITHERS. Now I move that that be laid aside.

Mr. CONKLING. You do not want a motion. You just want to lay

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia asks that the Holladay bill be informally laid aside that the Army appropriation bill may be taken up. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to give notice now that on Monday next I shall ask the Senate to take up and consider and act upon the resolutions reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections in reference to the seat of the sitting member from Louisiana. I gave notice some time in December that I should call it up; but at the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] after consultation with members of the committee, I consented to let it go over until after the holidays. Other matter has engaged the attention of the Senate, and I feel that I have sufficiently deferred this matter, especially as I have been instructed by the committee to call it up and urge its consideration upon the Senate. I have postponed it as long as I can consistent with my duty to the committee. I therefore shall ask the Senate on Monday to take it up for consideration.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I suppose that such a notice as that, which any Senator has a right properly to give, binds nobody except himself. For abundant caution, however, I wish to file my caveat. On Monday or whenever the Holladay bill shall be reached, I will insist, with as many other Senators as will join me, that that careat. On Monday or whenever the Hohaday bill shall be reached, I will insist, with as many other Senators as will join me, that that bill shall be prosecuted to a determination. I shall do so in the economy of time to the end that it shall not be postponed and at the end of that postponement the Senate listen all over again to a debate, which has been repeated already as many as four or six different times since I have been a member of the Senate.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I did not suppose the notice I gave would bind the Senator from New York or any other Senator to any course of action. I did not give the notice with that view, but I simply gave notice that I should endeavor to bring the matter to the consideration of the Senate on Monday next.

tion of the Senate on Monday next.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 2331) granting pensions to the widow and minor children of Michael Meenan, deceased; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 2658) to regulate the award of, and compensation for, public advertising in the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 5047) relating to the appointment of professors of mathematics in the Navy, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6719) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. SAUNDERS.]

Mr. WITHERS. Before proceeding to the consideration of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, I wish to ask the attention of the Senate to the ruling of the Chair just prior to the adjournment leaf events which are also the consideration to the senator of the senator of the consideration of the senator of the adjournment last evening, which, according to my recollection, is contrary to the usage of this body; and as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I think it my duty to have an expression of the Senate in order to ascertain whether the ruling of the Chair yesterday evening—which I admit is in exact accordance with parliamentary law, but which is not in accordance with the usage of the Senate—shall hereafter be observed as the rule of conducting business in this body, because if a point of order cannot be made upon an amendment to an appropriation bill after the official communication connected with it shall have been read to the Senate, or at any time during its consideration it would become pecsary for the Commitmed Committee of the Commitmed Co tion connected with it shall have been read to the Senate, or at any time during its consideration, it would become necessary for the Committee on Appropriations to raise the point of order on all amendments, whether it was applicable or not, without knowing whether the point of order could be sustained, so that they may not lose the benefit of the point of order by permitting anything to be considered in the Senate in reference to the subject under consideration.

Mr. INGALLS. In order that we may all understand the question, will not the Senator state precisely the point that was determined, as I, for one, did not hear it?

Mr. WITHERS. An amendment was offered to the Army appropria-will not the Senator state precisely the point that was determined, as I, for one, did not hear it?

Mr. WITHERS. An amendment was offered to the Army appropriation bill by the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. Saunders,] proposing an appropriation of $30,000 for the construction of buildings at Omaha. That amendment never having been included in the regular Book of Estimates, nor submitted to the Appropriations Committee, a letter from the War Department was read by the Senator proposing it. It was impossible for the Committee on Appropriations, from the fact that it had never been submitted to them, to know whether the point of order was applicable to it under our rules or not; and they consequently made no objection to the reading of sundry papers from the of order was applicable to it under our rules or not; and they consequently made no objection to the reading of sundry papers from the commandant of the military department and from the Secretary of War indorsing the proposed amendment; but when that was done, finding that there was no estimate for it by any head of Department, the point of order was made by a member of the committee that it was obnoxious to that rule of order. The Chair, however, ruled that the point of order was made too late; that the reading of these papers constituted a consideration of the merits of the amendment, and that consequently it was too late to rule it out moon a point of order. As consequently it was too late to rule it out upon a point of order. As the contrary custom has prevailed in this body, according to my recollection, since I have been a member of it in the consideration of amendments to general appropriation bills, I wish to know whether the ruling of the Chair yesterday evening upon that point meets the approval of the Chair yesterday evening upon that point incers the approval of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. May I ask the Senator whether that ruling was made by the President of the Senate?

Mr. WITHERS. It was made by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hoar,] who I am glad to see has come into the Chamber now, whose knowledge of parliamentary law we all admit, and the correctness of whose ruling in this particular case in accordance with the ness of whose ruling in this particular case in accordance with the ordinary usages of parliamentary law no one would question. The point simply is that the custom of the Senate has been to the contrary. I only wish an expression of the sense of the Senate upon that point made, because if that be the ruling of the Chair and it be the sense of the Senate, hereafter it will necessitate that whenever an amendment is offered in the Senate to the provisions of a general appropriation bill, the Committee on Appropriations will at once make the point of order without waiting to see whether it will really be applicable or not.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator a question, as I happened not to be in at the moment the incident he refers to took place? Shall I understand the Senator to say that the Committee on Appropriations on hearing the papers read and first knowing what they were, submitted their point of order, and that the ruling was that the point came too late?

Mr. WITHERS. Yes, sir; that is my understanding of the case.
Mr. THURMAN. I wish to ask my friend, the Senator from Virginia, how he proposes to get the question before the Senate? I hope he may get it before the Senate, for, with great respect for the Senator who made the ruling, I am under a very strong impression,

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps the Senator from Ohio would permit the Senator who made the ruling to state it himself before passing an opinion on it.

Mr. THURMAN. Undoubtedly so; but I read it in the RECORD this morning, and I want to know how it can be gotten at now.

Mr. WITHERS. In view of the fact that immediately upon that ruling there was an adjournment, though no appeal was entered, I suppose an appeal would still lie this morning, necessarily.

Mr. THURMAN. You propose, then, to appeal?

Mr. WITHERS. I did not desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair if it were possible to reach an expression of the views of the Senate in any other way, and I supposed a request of a Senator calling attention to the fact might perhaps induce the Senate to take such measure as might give expression to their views.

Mr. THURMAN. That might produce discussion and bring no vote. If it is not too late to appeal, I suggest to the Senator that he appeal from the ruling.

from the ruling.

Mr. WITHERS. I would not go further until the Senator who occupied the chair has made his statement.

necessary to repeat them. There must be the recommendation of a standing committee or the estimate of the head of a Department, and so on; but when a matter is received without objection and discussed on the merits, that is an assent of the whole Senate to the fact that it is in order; and after the discussion has proceeded upon the merits without any objection it is too late then to say that originally the proposition to the Senate of that amendment as the pending question was out of order. That is a rule of law that nobody questions, I understand. I never heard it questioned.

The custom of the Senate, however, is to permit the matter to go on far enough to be explained to see whether it comes within one of the accepted classes or not, and then the point of order to be taken. The convenience of the Senate undoubtedly requires that that should be very liberally permitted. But in the present case no such thing happened. The Senator from Nebraska moved his amendment and proceeded to discuss it himself on the merits. Then the Senator from Virginia said: "I desire to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that it would be more convenient to have this moved on the sundry civil it would be more convenient to have this moved on the sundry civil bill. I do not wish to express any opinion against it. On the contrary, I have examined it, and am inclined to think there is merit in it." The Senator from Nebraska then, resuming his discussion of the merits, said that he had several letters, one from General Sheridan, one from the general in command in Nebraska, I think General Crook, one from General Meigs, the Quartermaster-General, and one from the Secretary of War. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] thereupon said: "I should like to hear those letters read;" and they were read in the order in which I have named, the letter from the Secretary of War being read last. All that appears in the RECORD of this morning. That was not read with the view of establishing the Senator's right to offer this amendment in order. It was read as a contribution to the merits, and read after the other letters from the subtribution to the merits, and read after the other letters from the subrodinate officers in the military service had been read. After that all had happened, then the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Beck] rose, the Senator from Virginia not then making any point of order, and said he did not know whether he was justified in making the point of order at that stage or not, but if he was he would like to do it; to which the Chair replied: "The Chair is under the impression that the point of order comes too late;" but the Chair further said he would submit the question to the Senate whether the point of order was now valid. the question to the Senate whether the point of order was now valid. Thereupon the Senator from Kentucky or the Senator from Virginia said they did not care about having the matter submitted to the Senate, but they would like the ruling of the Chair. The Chair thereupon ruled, and having ruled, the Senator from Nebraska yielded the floor, and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] moved an adjournment. That is the history of the transaction.

Now, I submit that within the most liberal possible interpretation of the custom of the Senate, which waits and hears a matter sufficiently explained to know whether it comes within the objection of the rule or the exception to the rule or not, this point of order comes too late.

too late.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that when the Senator from Kentucky made his point of order he did not make it qualified by the expression "at this stage," but it was in the following words:

I do not know that I can, but if I can I desire to make a point of order against to amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I so stated.
Mr. WITHERS. And the Senator from Kentucky subsequently stated—I read from his remarks:

When the Senator from Virginia made the suggestion that the amendment belonged to the sundry service bill and not to this bill, expressions were made all around me that perhaps the Senator from Nebraska had estimates that would bring it within the rule, and I waited to see whether there were such estimates as would bring it within the rule. The moment the reading of the papers was concluded and I thought the amendment did not come within the rule, admitting that I do not know much about rules, I made the point of order.

Those are the circumstances under which the point of order was made; and I wish to state in addition the fact that although it may had, the custom of the Senate still is to permit the point of order to had, the custom of the Senate still is to permit the point of order to be made at any time during the consideration of an amendment.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, when the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska was read, immediately after the reading, as the RECORD shows, before a word had been delivered by the Senator from Nebraska, the Senator from Virginia in charge of the bill suggested that it be postponed until the sundry civil bill was up. The Senator from Nebraska rose, as I think the RECORD shows, for the purpose of showing that there would be great danger in delay, because the Levislature of the State was in session and the grant of purpose of showing that there would be great danger in delay, because the Legislature of the State was in session and the grant of jurisdiction over the site could not be had unless the matter was taken up now. After some preliminary talk in that regard a suggestion was made to allow the papers to be read. We could not tell at that time whether the point of order would lie or not. They were read, and until they were read I had no means of knowing what papers the Senator from Nebaska had. He sent them up one at a time; and when the last one was read from the Secretary of War it turned out to be a letter dated the day previous, January 13, addressed to Mr. WITHERS. I would not go further until the Senator who occupied the chair has made his statement.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I understand the rule of the Senate to be that no amendment proposing an appropriation is in order unless it comes from two or three sources, which are familiar, and it is not officially communicated either to the Senator or to the committee, never having been seen by the committee so that by possibility it could have been looked into, I rose at once to make the point of order on the ground stated-

That this is not estimated for by any Department, not recommended by any standing committee, and has never been before the Committee on Appropriations.

The object we have in view is to have the ruling finally estabished, so that the committee may know what to do hereafter. If we cannot proceed to this point of hearing the papers read with a view to removing the preliminary objection, I do not think we can do anything but object to every amendment in the dark, and let the point of order stand until we see what may come. That would be a very unpleasant thing to do.

The reason I am urgent about this matter is this, if I may be allowed to say so: The sundry civil bill will be before us in a short time, and this seems to be a legitimate subject for that bill. It does not belong here, and it ought not to be a part of this bill. We will consider it, very likely pass upon it at once, when all the other matters of the same class are before us, and if we can postpone it tilt then, it will be a very short time, and the Senator from Nebraska will have a full and fair hearing.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that a few years ago the appropriation for the improvement of Fort Omaha was put into the regular Army bill. It has not always been in the sundry civil bill.

in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. BECK. I know there is something peculiar about it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have no pride of opinion in this matter.

Mr. BECK. Nor I.
Mr. HOAR. I certainly agree with the Senator from Kentucky that the administration of the rule which permits Senators to hear and understand what a matter is before they are required to make their point of order should be the most liberal possible; but here is a column of the RECORD of discussion about the merits of the measure, which was had even before the calling for the papers in the Senator's possession. For instance, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDator's poss MUNDS] said:

I think the papers from the Department had better be read.

That is, these papers of General Crook and General Meigs, as well as the Secretary of War.

I should like to vote for this if it is necessary; if it is not I should not; but I think there ought to be added to it a provision that this shall be a payment in full, that there shall not be anything further about it.

To which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. SAUNDERS] then said:

I will send the papers to the desk to be read.

That was the first call for these papers, and the call for the papers was made with the view of seeing whether the Senator from Vermont would or would not move an amendment on the merits. Then the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Withers] said:

Do I understand the Senator from Vermont to move an amendment that it shall be in full?

To which the Senator from Vermont replied:

Not yet; I may before morning.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska was in order when offered or it was not. If it was in order then, no question about the time of its presentation. order then, no question about the time of its presentation could arise; no question whether it was too late. The ruling of the Chair therefore must have gone upon the theory that the amendment was not in order at the time it was offered, and if objected to then the objection would have been sustained; but that debate having occurred upon the merits, the objection, when made, was too late.

Mr. President, there are a few rules in our Manual which cannot be suspended or set aside by unanimous consent. They are very few indeed. All other rules may be suspended or waived for the time being by unanimous consent; and doubtless this is a rule the point made under which might have been waived by unanimous consent; at least I think so, though I do not recall that there is anything in that rule which provides for it.

that rule which provides for it.

Then the question is simply this, Was there a waiver of that rule by unanimous consent? If the Senator then presiding had said, "The Chair waives the rule," as he might have said if he had been requested so to do, the suggestion having been made that the amendment was out of order, and the Senate having unanimously agreed to waive the rule, there would be no question. The only question is, Were the proceedings that took place in the Senate a tacit waiver of that rule which made this amendment out of order? I do not say that there might not be a treit waiver of a point of order, that there might which made this amendment out of order? I do not say that there might not be a tacit waiver of a point of order; that there might not be a tacit suspension of the rule by a long debate; but it seems to me it ought to be a very plain and strong case that would make the Senate agree that this rule is suspended tacitly. It is a rule of great importance; it is a rule whose importance has been such that it has been strenuously insisted on. It is absolutely necessary for the protection of the Government that this rule shall be enforced, and it seems to me that it requires a very strong case to make out a tacit waiver of the rule, to take away from any Senator his right to object that such an amendment is not in order.

Now, with the greatest respect in the world for the Senator who occupied the chair when the ruling was made, and giving to what he said all the force that I can possibly give to it, it does seem to me that his ruling is contrary to the usage of the Senate, and that it ought not to be sustained. I do not think, even if there were no ought not to be sustained. I do not think, even if there were no doubt or dispute as to the facts as stated by him, it ought to have been held that the rule had been tacitly waived. But in view of what I cannot help noticing, that again and again and again after papers have been read this objection has been interposed, and I have never before known a ruling that it came too late because there had been some discussion, I do think we should be setting a dangerous precedent if the ruling of the Chair were sustained; and if it is in order to appeal from that ruling, as I suppose it is-I do not know why it is not, that having been the subject under consideration when the Senate adjourned yesterday—I hope an appeal will be taken. I was not here at the time, and what I say upon this subject I say with great diffidence, because although I read in the RECORD what was said, yet that is not quite equal to having been here and having heard it

I felt bound to make these remarks, because I do think that the ruling was contrary to the usage of the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, is there any question before the Senate? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska to amend the bill. The question is on that amendment. Mr. CONKLING. Now I inquire whether the Senator from Virginia appeals from the ruling of the Chair?

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator from Virginia may have to appeal, but I proposed to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the presiding officer be requested to submit the question to the Senate. If that unanimous consent cannot be had, I propose then to appeal from the decision of the Chair. I do not desire to appeal if I can meach the sense of the Senate in any other way.

Mr. CONKLING. I have no doubt that an appeal, if the Senator wants to take it, is entirely in season, the Senate not only having adjourned pending this ruling, but immediately, instantaneously upon the ruling, a motion to adjourn having been made before and withdrawn for a moment as a matter of courtesy, as the RECORD shows, by the Senator from Rhode Island in order to enable the Senator from by the Senator from Rhode Island in order to enable the Senator from Virginia to inquire how the matter was disposed of, the presiding officer then ruled, and immediately the Senator from Rhode Island said "I renew my motion to adjourn," and the Senate did adjourn. Therefore, of course, now, if ever, the appeal is in order. If the Senator takes that appeal, I want to say a word upon it; if he does not I do not see that there is anything before the Senate.

Mr. WITHERS. Then I will enter an appeal in order to bring the matter before the Senate. I preferred, however, to reach it the other way.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, it has been said that after an amendment has been received-and a discussion of its merits has proceeded, it is too late to submit a point of order; and the Senator from Ohio grounds his observations upon the idea that a tacit waiver of the rule has taken place. It would not have occurred to me that that is exactly the principle on which in parliamentary bodies a point of order comes too late; but very likely the Senator from Ohio is right in so stating. In the House of Representatives, as I am quite sure the Senator from Kentucky who has had so much experience there will confirm me in saying the laches of a member in not advancing a point contribution of order is not held to proceed upon the idea that, if he does not, the whole House waives a rule. It proceeds simply upon the idea that there is a point of time when it is in order for him to do that thing, and at some other time it is not in order for him to do it; and I should suppose that the presiding officer of this body proceeded in his ruling rather upon that idea than the one suggested by the Senator from Ohio, or he must have held that the Senate by unanimous consent

Now, speaking with diffidence about this appeal, because I was not present at the moment and because I do not match my opinion against that of more experienced parliamentarians, I must think that the point of order submitted by the Senator from Virginia was in time, clearly in time, and for reasons some of which have been assigned, but one of which has not been assigned, which is this: Before these papers were read which were treated by the Chair as in the nature of debate upon the merits, obviously from the Record, the point of order was suggested. It was not technically suggested, but it was virtually suggested, as the Record shows. The Senator from Virginia having charge of the bill said:

I do not want to antagonize the merits of the proposition; it was not considered by the committee

Immediately the Senator advancing the amendment responded, and here is in part his response:

Because the measure is recommended by a Department, it is therefore in order.

What was the idea in the mind of the mover of this amendment? The Senator from Virginia had apprised him that he did not wish to disparage the amendment upon its merits; but he was encountering it, contesting it in some form, objecting to it. The impression made naturally upon the mind of the Senator from Nebraska was that he was opposing it, not because it was destitute of merit, but because it was out of place or out of time, and therefore he refers to the fact that he has a recommendation from the Department and insists that that makes it in order. Thereupon the Senator from Vermont says:

I think the papers from the Department had better be read.

And the papers from the Department were read and read, as the And the papers from the Department were read and read, as the Senator from Kentucky says with great force, as the first and, as it turns out from their date, the only opportunity that the committee in charge of the bill had of knowing the force and effect of these papers and from whom they came; and thereupon the Senator from Kentucky, the papers having been read and nothing having followed that except a remark from the Senator from Nebraska—

I took it upon myself to say that the ground would be given free of charge to the Government, knowing that our people would be liberal enough to do so.

Then the Senator from Vermont inquired something about the cost, and the Senator from Kentucky interposed saying:

I do not know that I can, but if I can I desire to make a point of order against the amendment.

I do not understand the Senator from Kentucky to have said that he did not know anything about the time, but after hearing read the recommendation from the Department he said:

I do not know that I can, but if I can I desire to make a point of order against the amendment.

On that state of facts, it is said, on the simple ground of delay and laches, as I understand, the Senator from Kentucky had not been diligent enough in submitting that point. My impression is that that could be hardly sustained in strictness of parliamentary practice, and certainly not, as I am bound to corroborate the recollection of the Senator from Ohio, in view of the circumstance that again and again

Senator from Ohio, in view of the circumstance that again and again and again the contrary practice has prevailed so uniformly that I never until now heard it suggested that a point of order must be so promptly and instantaneously submitted in the Senate.

I wish to add after reading a letter which the Senator behind me was kind enough to show me, that I do not see at this time how the Senator from Kentucky could successfully submit the point of order against this amendment. I do not understand that the rule requires that there must be not only the recommendation of the head of a Department, but that that recommendation must be dated so early as to have preceded the action of the committee. That has never been suggested. I think. Here is, if I understand it aright, the recommendation. suggested, I think. Here is, if I understand it aright, the recommendation of the head of a Department. What is the criticism upon it? Why that, although it is addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and be ample in itself, it came here after the committee had passed upon the bill. I do not think any rule makes that criterion.

No estimate whatever accompanies it.

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend from Connecticut apprises me that no estimate accompanies it. If he has a rule before him which requires that—which I do not remember—that would be very important; but I submit to that honorable Senator that the rule says nothing about estimates, but says that an amendment shall not be in order, unless, taking one of the alternatives, it is recommended by the head of a Department. He does not answer me when he says that there is no estimate for it.

Mr. INGALLS. That is not the language of the rule.
Mr. CONKLING. What is the language of the rule?
Mr. INGALLS. The language of the rule is:

Or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Not a recommendation; it requires an estimate

Mr. CONKLING. All the Senators set me right in that regard. I was speaking in the absence of the rule. My recollection of it was that one of the things required to qualify an amendment was that it should be recommended by a Department. Now I have in my hand

27. All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce; and no amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate; or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

ask the Senator from Nebraska if there is an estimate?

Mr. SAUNDERS. There is a statement that $30,000 will be sufficient. That was the same language which was used a year ago in regard to the warehouses, &c., at Fort Omaha, the work being done without contract.

Mr. CONKLING. I am afraid as the Senator from Connecticut inti-Mr. CONKLING. I am afraid as the Senator from Connecticut intimated in his remark to me, the force of which I did not see at the time in the absence of the rule, that the Senate is committed by invariable practice to hold that the words "estimates of the Departments" refer to those estimates made beforehand and submitted and carried into a book, which is denominated The Estimates, and very likely if supplementing them a formal estimate should take place that would satisfy the rule; but if there be nothing except that book in which this is absent and then some statement of an officer that in his opinion it would cost so much, I can hardly see how my friend can depend upon that ground to bring himself within the rule.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this question has certainly no very great practical importance because it turns upon what happened in a particular case which will not happen in the very same way again, but it has been discussed at some length, and it may be worth while to call the attention of the Senate to what is the actual point.

I do not understand that the correctness of the ruling depends on maintaining the proposition suggested by the Senator from Ohio that there has been unanimous consent of the Senate to waive a rule; nor do I understand that it depends upon the correctness of the proposition suggested by the Senator from New York that there has been tion suggested by the Senator from New York that there has been laches in somebody in not affirming or asserting his right at the time; but it is a simple question of fact. The rule is that "no amendment shall be received" of a certain character; "no amendment shall be received" proposing an increase or proposing new items of appropriation unless on certain conditions. If nobody objects, the amendment is received and stated from the Chair. When it has been received and discussion has proceeded upon the merits the objection is no longer in order, because it is an objection relating to the past. You might as well assert a parliamentary objection to a bill that was taken up and passed yesterday as to make a parliamentary objection to an amendment being received after it has been received and discussed, whether it has or has not been acted upon. The only question, therefore, is whether this amendment has in fact been received tion, therefore, is whether this amendment has in fact been received by the Senate. As has already been said, it was received, stated from the Chair, no objection made, and a discussion upon the merits had at some length; and although the Senator from Nebraska said in the debate that it was in order because he had got this recommendation, yet still the recommendation was not read to the Senate as bearing upon any question of order; it was not read to the Senate, and it was the last of the series read. After the letter of General Crook, the letter of General Meigs, and several other letters being read, finally that of the Secretary of War was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, or does he desire to submit

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, or does he desire to submit the question again to the Senate?

Mr. WITHERS. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the question of the decision of the Chair last night be submitted to the Senate, in order to determine whether it is necessary that an objection to an amendment to an appropriation bill shall be entered as soon as the proposition is reported to the Senate, or whether the same may be done at any time during its consideration. If unanimous consent shall not be given, I shall take an appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Virginia to ask unanimous consent to have submitted to the Senate the question whether the motion of the Senator from Nebreskato amend the bill is in order. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the question will be submitted to the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. One word. This may appear to some Senators, as not a question of great importance; but to the Committee on Appropriations, it is one of considerable importance. The question now, which the Senate is about to decide, is whether the Committee on Appropriations, or any member of it having charge of an appropriation bill, as soon as an amendment is offered is to jump up and say, "I object." That is the question. It is known to all of us, I believe, that heretofore the Senate has always decided a question of order whenever raised, it mattered not when.

Mr. FERRY. I understand that the Chair has submitted the question to the Senate.

Mr. FERRY. I understand that the Chair has submitted the question to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to state my understanding of the question as governing my vote. I am always disposed to sustain the Chair in his rulings; but when such a question has been submitted to the Senate for the action of the Senate, it becomes my duty to act upon that. I think the point now before the Senate turns simply upon the word "received"

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator permit the question to be stated by Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator permit the question to be stated by the Chair the Chair.

Mr. FERRY. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the question be stated by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question to the Senate. On Thursday, the last legislative day, the Senator from Nebraska moved to amend the Army bill. This amendment, if any Senator desires, will be reported for information. The Chair now by unanimous consent of the Senate submits the question to the Senate. Is the amendment of the Senate from Nebraska in order?

unanimous consent of the Senate submits the question to the Senate. Is the amendment of the Senate from Nebraska in order?

Mr. FERRY. I supposed at the time that the Chair had stated to the Senate the question of the correctness of the previous ruling of the Chair, which of course involved the whole point. Whenever that question comes up, which involves the right of a Senator to make this point of order at any time, I shall want to express myself on that subject, for my judgment is that at any time before the Senate acts on an amendment any Senator has the right to object to it under the rule; but as the question now is not the question of the ruling of the Chair, but simply the relevancy of the amendment, I am in favor of the amendment, and I believe it to be applicable to the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is another question.

Mr. FERRY. That is entirely another question, and on that I would vote in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska. As the matter of the rule is up, I desire to state that the mere fact that a member presents an amendment, and assumes the floor at once and discusses it, it cannot debar any other Senator from the right of objecting to it on a question of order; nor is it required the right of objecting to it on a question of order; nor is it required by the rule that any Senator should rise at once to claim his right to object. The reception of any measure in the sense of the rule is not its reception by the Chair, and cannot be anything but its reception by the body, and until the body receives it by acting on an amendment to it, or by referring it, or by taking some other course with it, it is not received under the rule.

Mr. GARLAND. I ask the Secretary to read Rule 40.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule called for will be read.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope the Senate will pay attention to the point of this rule, particularly the Senator from Massa-

The Secretary read as follows:

A question of order may be raised at any state of the business, except when the Senate is dividing and, when raised, shall be decided by the presiding officer, without debate, subject to an appeal to the Senate; or he may submit any question of order for the decision of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. What does the Senator understand by that? The Senator did me the honor to call my attention to that rule; does he undertand that it has anything to do with this matter?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand that rule says that at any time a question of order may be raised, which may be withint two or three days.

or three days.

Mr. HOAR. I bow with silent wonder.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is whether the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is in order. Those who are of the opinion that the motion to amend is in order will say "ay;" those of contrary opinion, "no," [putting the question.] The noes have it.

Mr. CONKLING. May I interfere in this matter now so far as to make a suggestion to the Senator from Virginia? The Senator from Nebraska says that an amendment relating to this same subject-mat-Nebraska says that an amendment relating to this same subject-matter has heretofore been upon the Army appropriation bill. If the committee, having had an interval to look at this is satisfied, or shall be on looking at it, of the merits of the proposition, having now enforced the law of the Senate, why not consider the amendment on its merits? Why not waive the rule—that will do no harm—and let the Senator from Nebraska have his hearing upon this bill?

Mr. WITHERS. As the representative of the committee I would have no objection were it not for the fact that it paves the way for similar amendments, which it is impossible that the committee can evamine examine.

Mr. CONKLING. Not at all, if the Senator will pardon me.
Mr. WITHERS. If the Senator will pardon me, I will state that already one or two have been suggested to me of a similar character which it is desired to attach to the bill if this one is accepted, and a which it is desired to attach to the bill if this one is accepted, and a number of others have been suggested.

Mr. CONKLING. Now, if the Senator will indulge me a moment, undoubtedly it is my right to crowd his committee with a thousand amendments on every bill. That the Senator cannot avoid. If the committee does not consider this amendment in respect to this bill, it will be obliged to consider it just the same in respect of another. If I have an amendment relating to anything cognate to this bill and I can get the committee to believe that that is a meritorious amendment, I have that advantage; but all the time the committee is compelled to decide upon the merits of these amendments first or last, and it does not multiply them to consider them at one time rather than another. Here comes a Senator who says that heretofore this very bill has been designated by Congress as the proper bill to which such an amendment is to be attached. He says his Legislature is in session, and he gives exceptional reasons why it is a matter of interest to him to have this done and a matter of hardship to him and to the interest which he represents to have it deferred. Now, I submit to him to have this done and a matter of hardship to him and to the interest which he represents to have it deferred. Now, I submit with great respect to the Committee on Appropriations—and I believe that is a very reasonable committee, I know that my friend the First Lord of the Treasury is a very reasonable man—I submit to that committee that it would be a gracious thing and would violate no rule if they would take the trouble to look into this amendment and if it really is meritorious not to stick in the bark by saying they would rather it should be offered on some other bill.

Mr. WITHERS. I would suggest that that is the very difficulty in

Mr. WITHERS. I would suggest that that is the very difficulty in connection with the matter. It is impossible that the Appropriations Committee can consider the merits of a proposition that comes upon them during the consideration of their regular appropriation bills in the Senate. For example, in this particular instance, locking into it we find $115,000 has been already appropriated for the construction. we find $115,000 has been already appropriated for the construction of storehouses and quarters, &c., either at the city of Omaha or at Fort Omaha. Now, the proposition of this amendment is that the headquarters shall be removed from Fort Omaha, where they are at present fixed, for the purpose of erecting buildings in the city of Omaha. The reasons that have been given for it undoubtedly strike me with some favor; but still it is a matter that requires some examination, and it is impossible that the committee can now give the matter that detailed examination and investigation which its impor-tance deserves and the interests of the Government demand unless it shall be submitted to them so as to give them opportunity to examine it.

Mr. CONKLING. Evidently it is the wish of the Committee on Appropriations that I shall make one or the other of two motions: either that I shall move to postpone this bill until they have an opportunity to look into the amendment, which I see that the Senator from West Virginia is anxious I should do, or, as the Senator from Virginia seems more particularly to wish, that I should move to en-Virginia seems more particularly to wish, that I should move to enlarge this committee or to enlarge its capacity for considering questions of this kind. Owing to my diffidence, I decline to make either of those motions, and leave to the committee to take their responsibility, and especially I leave it to the Senator from Kentucky, who I observe now has risen, with his usual energy, to I hope properly dispose of this matter.

Mr. BECK. I only rose to say that the committee, in dividing up their work, have thrown upon me, I believe, the responsibility of looking into the sundry civil bill; and all this class of cases properly come before me. Some Quartermaster's Department matters the committee think ought to be considered on that bill; this is one of them. We shall have that bill very soon; and if we were to allow this particular item to be acted upon on this bill in advance of all the others, we might, perhaps, be doing some other equally meritorious cases injustice. We want to act upon them all at once. Let us pass the Army bill clear of all complication with these matters, and when the sundry civil bill comes in the Senator from Nebraska shall have a full and fair hearing and very prompt action.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in. Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the bill by inserting after line 85:

Provided further, That the officer in charge as governor of the United States military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, shall receive pay in accordance with the brevet rank of such officer.

Mr. President, in justification of the motion which I make I desire to read a communication from the Secretary of War and the Quartermaster-General and the commandant of the post. I will say that this is the only military prison that there is this side of the Rocky Mountains. I believe there is a small one at Alcatraz, in California. Here all of the military prisoners that we have on this-side are confined and kept at labor. I understand that the officer in charge of this prison, that has recently been officially visited by the Secretary of War, is one of the most competent men for such service there is perhaps in the country. He has made it virtually into a manufacturing establishment, where fifteen thousand pairs of shoes are manufactured annually, and a great many other things. I am told that he factured annually, and a great many other things. I am told that he is peculiarly fitted and qualified for the discharge of his duties there, and that his services have been eminent for many years past in whatever position he has been placed. He is holding the brevet rank of ever position he has been placed. The is holding the prevet rank of colonel and yet receives only the pay of a captain. WASHINGTON, D. C., January 12, 1881.

Colonel Blunt's administration of affairs at the military prison cannot be too highly eulogized. The money value of his services cannot be overestimated. Under his management the labor of the prisoners has been utilized and directed into avenues for the benefit of the service; and it is mainly owing to his aptitude and ability that the prison stands to-day one of the most successful institutions in the country. His responsibility is very great and his duties ardnous, and entitle him fully to the consideration he solicits.

THOMAS F. BARR. Judge-Advocate United States Army, Commissioner of Prison.

Approved. JANUARY 12, 1881. ALEX. RAMSEY, Secretary of War,

I leave it for the committee, and I trust they will do what is right and what they will believe to be right themselves.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, having raised the point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, I feel compelled to make the same objection to the amendment just suggested. I raise the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not in order. It increases the appropriation.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I now would like to ask unanimous consent to allow the amendment that I proposed yesterday to be received and

Mr. SAUNDERS. I then move in the Senate the amendment which I proposed yesterday and ask that it be added to the bill.

Mr. WITHERS. I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will state while I am on the floor—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska will allow the Chair to have the amendment read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. SAUNDERS,

For the erection of a building suitable for offices for headquarters of the Department of the Platte, in Omaha, State of Nebraska, $30,000: Provided, That said sum shall not be expended until suitable grounds, to be approved by the commanding officer of said department, shall be furnished on which to erect said building, free of charge to the United States: And provided, That the Legislature of the State of Nebraska shall first relinquish to the United States all jurisdiction over said property.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has just declared the amendment out of order.

Mr. CARPENTER. The Senator from Nebraska is certainly in order in asking the Senate for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not so understand the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WITHERS. That application has been denied, and he now asks that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is in the Senate. He has a right to propose it again and take the ruling of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska ask unanimous consent of the Senate to offer this amendment?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I asked unanimous consent, but I found I could not get unanimous consent, and therefore I proposed it as an amendment to the bill. In answer to what was said awhile ago by the Senator from Kentucky, I wish to remark—

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to call attention to the fact that I object to the reception of the amendment on the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The amendment is not in order.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I am not about to wrestle with any rule of this body. I have an amendment before me affecting the people of Indiana and several other States, transmitted to me by the War Office. There has been great delay in the settlement of large claims for property taken by the Federal Army in loyal States. The States interested in the settlement of these claims are Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Missouri, and Maryland. Some of them are claims known as the Morgan raid claims. In all they amount to some $12,000,000. There is an utter and total inadequacy of clerical force to settle these claims within the life-time perhaps of the youngest of the claimants. I have here prepared an amendment to correct that kind of an outrage upon public justice. If it was in order now, I should desire now to offer it. As the case stands, I give notice that I will offer the provision as an amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and I ask to have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations to be considered when that bill comes before them. I do so upon the suggestion of my friend from Virginia who has the present bill in charge, who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and I bespeak his good offices for this amendment when it comes before the committee. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper will be read. mittee. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To provide for a more speedy completion of the investigation of the claims under the act of the 4th of July, 1864, for property taken by the Army in loyal States during the war of the rebellion, $150,000; of which sum $50,000 to be immediately available for use during the remainder of the current fiscal year, and also the additional sum of $1,500, to be immediately available, for contingent expenses of the Quartermaster-General's Office for 1881, the same to be used in fitting up additional rooms, purchase of furniture, and for furnishing stationery necessary for the increased clerical force.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This proposed amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VOORHEES. This is recommended by the Secretary of War and by the Quartermaster-General, and in connection with the provision I have offered, I ask that certain papers which I present be

Mr. BURNSIDE. I now ask the Senate to consider the amendment which I submitted to the bill and had referred to the committee

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 127, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That fuel shall be issued to officers of the Army in accordance with the Army regulations in force in 1856.

Mr. BURNSIDE. That amendment was offered when the bill was in committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and by them rejected. As the law stands now all officers of the Army have to purchase their fuel at a given rate, $16 a cord, and in some places officers pay as high as $30 a cord. This simply goes back to the old method of issuing fuel, issuing to any officer stationed in the South a limited amount of fuel, and to an officer stationed in the North a greater amount, graduated by a system established after long practice and which always seemed to me a very equitable one. I hope the Senate will decide to go back to the old method of issuing fuel. I have never seen any reason for a change.

Senate will decide to go back to the old method of issuing fuel. I have never seen any reason for a change.

Mr. WITHERS. I raise the point of order that the amendment is not in order, inasmuch as it changes the existing law and is not recommended by the head of a Department, so far as the committee know. If it has merit, as I am not disposed to doubt that it has, inasmuch as it has received the approval of the Military Committee, they can report a bill providing for exactly what they desire. It has no business on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICIER. It is the opinion of the Chair that MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. VOORHEES. The regular order, Mr. President. Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will state to the Senator from Indiana that another regular appropriation bill, the Military Academy bill, is ready for action. I do not know whether the Senator wishes to oppose its consideration or not.

Mr. VOORHEES. No; I do not. I say frankly I do not want to antagonize any of the appropriation bills. I want to get along as fast as we can. But while I have no desire to do that I hope the Appropriations Committee do not want to antagonize the other meas-which is the unfinished business.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator understands that no-member of the Appropriations Committee has ever objected to making his bill the regular order. There is no objection upon the part of that committee; but I wish it to be understood that there are two bills before the Senate from the Committee on Appropriations. One is a regular appropriation bill and the other a bill appropriating $2,500 to pay the expenses of the international sanitary commission now in ssion. Those are the only bills that the Committee on Appropriations have ready.

Mr. VOORHEES. What is the regular appropriation bill?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Military Academy appropriation bill, of which the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] has charge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. No. 231) for the

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senate now to proceed to the considera-tion of the Military Academy appropriation bill, which I think will take but a very few moments.

Mr. CARPENTER. Laying the other bill informally aside?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota asks that the bill for the relief of Ben. Holladay be informally laid aside for the consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill. Is there objection

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the regular order?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill for the relief of Ben. Holiaday.
Mr. EDMUNDS. How did that get up?
Mr. VOORHEES. By a vote of the Senate several days ago, and it

Mr. VOORHEES. By a vote of the Senate several days ago, and it has been up all the time since.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, it has not.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us ascertain how that is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is what I am trying to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state for the information of the Senator from Vermont that the bill for the relief of Ben. Holladay was informally laid aside this morning to take up the Army appropriation bill as the unfinished business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I submit with the greatest possible pleasure; but I wish to add that I merely want to stand by the rules, that if a bill is laid aside to-day, and is not taken up to-day, it is not the regular order to-morrow. I do not say this in hostility to Mr. Holladay's bill, because if the Chair had decided it was not before the Senate I should have voted to take it up. I only want things straight day's bill, because if the Chair had decided it was not before the Senate I should have voted to take it up. I only want things straight on the Journal; that is all.

Mr. VOORHEES. That has been done in every instance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is informally laid aside, and the Senator from Minnesota asks consent to proceed to the consideration of the Military Academy bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6614) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

Mr. WINDOM. Before the Secretary proceeds to read the bill, I wish to make a very brief statement.

The total of the bill is $322,135.37. The bill is less than the estimates by $72,307.16, and exceeds the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, by $5,901.09. The Committee on Appropriations have recommended but one amendment to the bill, and that priations have recommended but one amendment to the bill, and that not a very important one. I ask that the amendment may be considered when it is reached in the reading of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest to my colleague on the committee, if it is not a very important amendment, would it not be well to let the bill pass as it came from the House?

Mr. WINDOM. When we come to consider the amendment I shall not urge it if there is any objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill, and the amendment of the committee will be acted on when reached.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 79, after the word "dollars," to insert "one theodolite, $300;" and in line 30 to change the total of the appropriations for contingencies of the "department of instruction in mathematics" from "$150" to "$450." The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed, and that the bill be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have a word to say. I think that we ought to sit each legislative day. There is abundance of business to be done, and we see the rush here among Senators in trying to have their bills considered. I doubt very much the propriety of adjourning over.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to add to what the Senator from West Virginia has said, that this is a short session; there is a good deal of business to transact; we are here in the public service; and I think we much to devote to-morrow to public business. There is no necessary we ought to devote to-morrow to public business. There is no necessity for an adjournment over until Monday, and I hope the Senate will refuse to adopt the motion.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I think to-morrow can be better spent by Senators in looking over matters that demand attention for the purpose of facilitating the public business.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 19; no quorum voting.

Sharon, Thurman,

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 358, which is reported from the Committee on Appropriations, but is not a regular

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will allow the Chair to state the business before the Senate. The Senate will resume the consideration of the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben. Holladay np for consideration the joint resolution indicated by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 358) appropriating $2,500 to meet the expenses of the international sanitary conference invited to meet in Washington on the 1st of January, 1881.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. There is a letter here from the Secretary of State, which in justice to the committee ought to be read. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 27, 1880.

Washington, December 27, 1880.

Sin: In reply to your letter of the 21st instant, touching the joint resolution approved by the House of Representatives and now before the Senate, appropriating $2,500 to meet the expenses of the international sanitary conference, I have the honor to inform you that the amount estimated for by this Department was $10,000, or so much thereof as might be found necessary. The expenses which the Department will be required to meet under the joint resolution of May 14, 1880, will consist (besides ocean telegraphy incident to obtaining the responses of foreign governments) mainly of the employment of skilled stenographers and clerks capable of reporting speeches and propositions made in French or Spanish, and of the daily composition and printing of the protocols of the session. It is, of course, impossible to say in advance just how much these items will amount to. If the conference remains in session only a few days, it is possible that the sum appropriated by the resolution of the House of Representatives may be sufficient to defray expenses. But if the sessions are at all protracted, and especially if the discussions should take an extended range, the necessary cost of the most economical management of the conference might amount to the sum originally suggested by this Department.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. M. EVARTS.

Hon. HENRY G. DAVIS, Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Senate

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, I find myself once more compelled to sit at the feet of the democratic doctors on a constitutional question. I want to know from them what authority is conferred by the Constitution of the United States upon Congress to vote any money out of the Treasury for any such purpose. I want to know, in the second place, whether Congress can appropriate any public money for a cause over which and as to which it has no jurisdiction. I want to know, in the third place, who will vote for an appropriation of money touching a subject not committed to the Federal Gov-ernment by the Constitution of the United States. I would be very glad indeed if any Senator on any side of this Chamber would fur-nish me the information in reply to those three questions, or either one of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no amendment it will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS rose.
Mr. CARPENTER. Was the Senator going to give me the information i

Mr. HARRIS. It was my purpose to say that I had no hope of being able to give to the Senator from Wisconsin such information as will be satisfactory to him, having heard the views of the Senator upon previous occasions as well as upon this in respect to this ques-

If there be a constitutional warrant, as I have believed and still believe there is, for this appropriation and kindred appropriations that have been made, it will be found to rest upon the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States.

Mr. CARPENTER. That would be touching the communication of

Mr. HARRIS. It is touching commerce; and if the Senator will take the trouble to investigate the legislation of Congress upon the subject of commerce, (which he has doubtless done very many times, and is very much more familiar with it than I am,) he will find times, and is very much more familiar with it than I am.) he will find that there are innumerable instances in which Congress has legislated regulating commerce in the interest of health and comfort as well as in other respects, regulations as to what passenger vessels shall carry and what they shall not carry, all of which regulations are in the interest of human health and the safety of human life.

But the power to regulate commerce the Senator and I cannot possibly differ about. I do not think it probable we can differ very widely as to the extent of the meaning of the term commerce, and what is embraced in it. Intercourse, travel, and whatever is connected with the travel of persons as well as the transmission of goods is commerce and falls within the scope of the general power that Congress has to regulate it.

gress has to regulate it.

gress has to regulate it.

Upon a former occasion where a similar question arose in respect to the creation of the Board of Health and clothing it with certain powers the same question arose. Of course I do not pretend that Congress ever had the authority to appropriate money to any such purpose unless the things to be done, the powers to be exercised, are proper and legitimate regulations of commerce and falling within that clause of the Constitution, but I think that Congress has the power in the regulation of commerce to so regulate it as to strip it of elements dangerous to human health as well as those which are injurious to the neguniary interests of trade or revenue.

rious to the pecuniary interests of trade or revenue.

I think that if this appropriation, tending to furnish Congress with information, is such as will enable it to determine wisely and well how information, is such as will enable it to determine wisely and well how commerce should be regulated in respect to considerations of the safety of life as well as the safety of property if such information is necessary and this is a proper method of obtaining it, then the call of this international conference was proper and the appropriation for the necessary expenses should unquestionably be paid. At all events such is the line of reasoning that satisfies my own mind to vote for this appropriation, and for these reasons, however unsatisfactory they may be to the Senator from Wisconsin, I shall vote for the appropriation.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, nothing is more ungracious and nothing more unpleasant than to be constantly compelled to interpose objections to things which everybody will agree are desirable to have done. Take the subject of agriculture. Everybody says it would be a good thing to improve it, and to improve the conveniences for carrying it on. So with education; so with public health; so with a thousand things, which in the frame-work of our Constitution has been left to the States and not conferred upon the General Government. If the proposition were to be submitted to amend the Constitution so as to commit the regulation of education to the General Government, I would vote for it. If the proposition were to be submitted to permit the United States to provide for the public health of the Union I might vote for that; but when I came into this Chamber I was compelled under the rules of this body to go to the desk and swear to support the Constitution of the United States, by which I understood the new understand row; that I took on each that it

I understood then, and understand now, that I took an oath that in any act or thing done by me as a Senator I would observe and obey the Constitution; I would exercise my best judgment and reason and in all things act in conformity with the Constitution

Upon this question I can see no more power in Congress to enter upon the regulation of the health of the Union or to invite conventions with foreign nations to consult with and advise us any more than I can see the power to do anything in the world that you can demonstrate is desirable to have done by somebody.

I believe sincerely that the prosperity of this country depends upon an honest and faithful observance of the constitutional distribution an nonest and faithful observance of the constitutional distribution of sovereign powers between the great Republic and the States; and although $2,500 for this purpose is a mere bagatelle, yet the vote of Congress appropriating any money for such a purpose does strike a blow at the Constitution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. How about the "general welfare" clause? Does not the Senator think this is just in that direction? Mr. CARPENTER. I refer the Senator to the commentaries of Judge Story and to all writers upon that clause. If the general welfare clause gives Congress power to do what it thinks the general welfare requires, what was the object of enumerating what Congress may do? Upon that construction ours is an unlimited Government. Judge Story, federalist as he was, says that that construction would carry the Government beyond all restraint, because if Congress has but to say that the public welfare requires a certain thing to be done carry the Government beyond all restraint, because if Congress has but to say that the public welfare requires a certain thing to be done then it has the power to do it—

Mr. HOAR. The Senator does not say that Judge Story was a federalist, that is, in any technical political sense?

Mr. CARPENTER. I do not mean that; but I mean that he was a federalist in his construction of the Constitution. That is to say, he was for construing the Constitution so as to give it some power. So am I. He was for construing it so as to give full play to all the powers which the convention framing it and the people adopting it intended and attempted to confer upon the General Government, and there he stopped. Discussing this question, and the very clause to which the Senator from West Virginia refers, he says that if that construction be given to that clause, then the Government is an unlimited one; that it was utterly unnecessary to proceed and enumerate the powers which might be exercised by the General Government.

Mr. EATON. I do not think Judge Story went quite so far as to deny the Government all necessary powers.

deny the Government all necessary powers.

Mr. CARPENTER. Nobody has ever charged him with that.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if the phrase "general welfare" was not incorporated from the Articles of Confederation, where it evidently meant general interest in contradistinction to the local interests of the several colonies, and whether it has not the same import in the Constitution that it had in the Articles of Confederation ?

Mr. CARPENTER. Turn to the preamble of the Constitution:

We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

Nothing can be plainer, it seems to me, than that this is the true construction of that clause. For the purpose of securing the ends recited here, the public welfare among others, this Constitution is adopted.

Now we proceed to see what is the Constitution adopted? The Constitution creates Congress. It then gives Congress power to do all the things which they who framed this instrument believed were essential to promote the common welfare, and so of all the other ends intended to be secured and reached by this preamble in the Constitution. It was a mere statement of the reasons which induced our fathers to create this Government, of the reasons which induced them to give these certain enumerated powers to the General Government; but was not intended to so provide the means by which these ends were to be secured. That was done by the Constitution. So Congress is authorized to raise money to secure the common welfare in the way the Constitution has adopted to secure the general welfare. And in no other way.

in no other way.

Whoever construes this clause so as to say that whatever will conduce to the general welfare Congress shall have the power to do that, must do it as to all other subjects, as to everything that will contribute to establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity. I ask what can be conceived of within the scope of governmental powers that will not contribute, if wisely conducted, to one or the other of these ends? In other words, if you hold the preamble of the Constitution as In other words, if you hold the preamble of the Constitution as conferring power, this Government is as absolute as the Government of Great Britain. We have not a republic limited by the Constitution, its powers specified and their exercise regulated, but we have a Government that can do everything which it deems necessary to promote justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, &c.; and what greater power has Great Britain?

That is the argument not of myself, but of Judge Story npon this subject, and of all the men I have ever read who are regarded as authority upon the Constitution in discussing the effect of that clause.

This whole subject of the regulation of health may be important, but to say that it is a part of the regulation of commerce seems to me to be fanciful; it seems to be furnishing a pretext for doing what we have made up our mind to do and really have no power to do.

The thing under consideration is providing for the public health,

The thing under consideration is providing for the public health, but he says this may be done because it is a mere incident to commerce. If you were regulating commerce in the proper sense of the word by regulating the construction of ships, and the conveniences they should have, and all that, you would undoubtedly be authorized to take into consideration the effect of the construction upon the health of your sailors and passengers. That would be a part, a detail, an incident to the regulation of commerce in the proper sense; but we are not regulating commerce; we are not providing for the building of ships; we are not contemplating any such thing. We are contemplating the single subject of human life and of health, important, I concede. As I have said, perhaps I might vote for an amendment to the Constitution which would confer the power, but I deny most respectfully that it is conferred. I deny that any man who is supporting the Constitution can vote for an appropriation in aid of supporting the Constitution can vote for an appropriation in aid of any subject no matter how important and generally useful that is not committed to the jurisdiction of the General Government.

Mr. President, I shall ask for the yeas and nays upon the passage

Mr. President, I shall ask for the yeas and nays upon the passage of this joint resolution.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, the objections urged by the Senator from Wisconsin have been urged before, and a great many more. Some two years ago, when a similar question was up, everything that is said by him to-day and much more was said. He was not here at the time, I believe, to participate in that argument. The question was argued by a number of Senators on both sides for and against the general proposition, and every case was referred to and commented upon from Gibbons vs. Ogden, in 9 Wheaton, down to the celebrated cattle case in 5 Wallace, on the subject of commerce between the States. The general power to take care of the health of the country was put upon three different clauses of the Constitution, one of which the Senator from Wisconsin has not referred to: first. the country was put upon three different clauses of the Constitution, one of which the Senator from Wisconsin has not referred to: first, the commercial clause, which was referred to by the Senator from Tennessee; second, the general-welfare clause; but clause No. 2 of section 10 of article 1 was also referred to and commented upon to some extent by myself, and I was supported in that by Judge Story, the authority that has been referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin. That clause is as follows:

No State shall, without the consent of the Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws: and the net produce of all duties and imposts, laid by any State on imports or exports, shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of the Congress.

Judge Story said in the second volume of his Commentaries on the Judge Story said in the second volume of his Commentaries on the Constitution that there was ample authority for the exercise of this power. It is now late in the day to urge an objection of that character. We have had sanitary regulations or a quarantine law, so to speak, ever since 1790 upon the statute-book of the country. In 1879 that statute was considerably enlarged by the Congress of the United States by an act entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States." That act was passed April 29, 1879. The following year that statute was considerably enlarged by a general health bill, which was reported from the special committee by the Senator from Tennessee, and which received the sanction of the two Houses of Congress with some amendments. On the 14th of May last, Congress passed the following joint resolution:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to call an international sanitary conference to meet at Washington, District of Columbia, to which the several powers having jurisdiction of ports likely to be infected with yellow fever or choiera shall be invited to send delegates, properly authorized, for the purpose of securing an international system of notification as to the actual sanitary condition of ports and places under the jurisdiction of such powers and of vessels sailing therefrom.

As I understand, in pursuance of that joint resolution this conference was invited, and in pursuance of that invitation the conference has met, it may be; I do not know how that is.

Mr. HARRIS. It is now in session here.

Mr. GARLAND. It is now in session in the city of Washington.

Now the question comes up, Shall we simply discharge an obligation upon us to meet the exigencies of this conference, which we have solemnly invited by three laws, and the constitutionality of every one emnly invited by three laws, and the constitutionality of every one of which was discussed, if I may be permitted to use such an expression, ad nauseam? The question now is, Shall we defray the expenses of that sanitary conference that we have invited to meet here? I do not see that at this day there is any argument left in respect to that matter. As to the constitutional power to pass the original proposition, probably we never shall agree upon that, for if we should we would have to dispense in a great measure with that valuable property of the United States called the profession of the law, and the gentlemen belonging to it.

property of the United States called the profession of the law, and the gentlemen belonging to it.

The Senator from Wisconsin and other gentlemen doubt as to this power. I have no doubt of it, and tried to make myself understood in vindicating the power. The power has been exercised by two different laws within so many years. The conference has been invited under a joint resolution, and the question is, Shall we pay its expenses? This joint resolution provides for that, and nothing more.

Mr. CARPENTER. That is not the question I put. The question

I put was whether the Constitution authorizes us to do it?

Mr. GARLAND. I think it does.

Mr. CARPENTER. Then I do not see that the other is the ques-Mr. CARPENTER. Then I do not see that the other is the question. I agree with the Senator that if we ask a man to work for us, if we can pay him we ought to do it; but the question with me was, Where do we get the authority to do this? We are not giving our own money to pay these men. That would be very proper, and I should be very willing to contribute half of all I have got, (and I should not be out more than the price of a cigar at that,) but the question is whether I have got any right to vote the money of the people of New York for such a purpose.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amenda-

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. CARPENTER. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FERRY (when Mr. BALDWIN's name was called.) I desire to state on behalf of my colleague [Mr. BALDWIN] that he is unable to attend the session of the Senate to-day on account of sickness.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 30, nays 11; as follows:

FREEDMAN'S BANK BUILDING.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben. Holladay.

Mr. BRUCE. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1581, which was reported a long time ago. I hope the Senate will allow it to be passed.

Mr. VOORHEES. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will say this: if the regular order is inserted in its place I shall be willing that the Senator from Mississippi shall take up any bill he wants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Ben. Holladay bill is before the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. What does the Senator from Mississippi ask?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He asks unanimous consent to take up a bill.

Mr. BRUCE. Not to displace the regular order.
Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Mississippi knows that I would yield to him quite as soon as I would to any Senator in this body to take up any measure that he is interested in; but I fear to yield to that measure because it will lead to discussion. I say to him that I will assist him to get it up just as soon as the regular order is dis-

Mr. MORRILL. I hardly think it will lead to much discussion. It has been favorably reported upon by the Finance Committee heretofore and the Senator from Mississippi represents a special committee that has been considering the whole subject involved for over a year. I think it is an important bill. I do not believe there is much difference of opinion among Senators as to the proper course that ought to be pursued, that we really ought to take that building and let the amount be paid out to the depositors of the old Freedman's Bank.

Mr. BRUCE. I think if the regular order is laid aside informally, it will not require more than five minutes to pass this bill. I think the Senator from Indiana is mistaken as to its being much debated.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will consent, then, that the regular order be

Mr. VOORHEES. I will consent, satisfied aside informally.

Mr. BRUCE. That was my proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent of the Senate to informally lay aside the unfinished business, which is the bill for the relief of Ben. Holladay, and take up the bill which he has indicated. Is there objection? The take up the bill which he has indicated. Is there objection?

take up the bill which he has indicated. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1581) authorizing and directing the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the public use, the property known as the Freedman's Bank, and the real estate and parcels of ground adjacent thereto, belonging to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and located on Pennsylvania avenue, between Fifteenth and Fifteenth-and-a-half streets, Washington, District of Columbia.

Mr. BRUCE. I will state that we are now paying under a lease $17,000 a year for the Department of Justice, occupying the upper portion of the building. We are paying also for the Court of Claims, occupying the lower floor, $3,600. Thus we are paying $20,600 a year for the rent of the building. It would be better, I think, for the Government to purchase the building at the sum proposed in the bill, not exceeding $250,000. We ask in the bill that you shall pay not more than $250,000, but as much less as may be agreed upon between the Government and the representatives of this trust. I think it the Government and the representatives of this trust. I think it would be a saving of money to the Government to make the pur-

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I desire to know how much land is embraced; whether the purchase is to embrace all from the building up to the square and back to the alley? I have not myself knowledge on that subject

Mr. MORRILL. I will say as a member of a committee that has Mr. MORRILL. I will say as a member of a committee that has investigated this, that it does include all the land clear up to the corner, and very valuable land it is, with all the buildings thereon.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. And back to the alley that runs in the rear? Does it go to that alley?

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot say as to the rear boundary, but I suppose the alley is the boundary. I know it extends from the back building clear up to the corner and around.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the Senator know how many feet of land the lot contains?

feet of land the lot contains?

Mr. MORRILL. I do not now recollect.
Mr. BRUCE. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that there are 186 feet 10 inches on Pennsylvania avenue, 136 feet on Fifteen-and-a-half street, fronting La Fayette square, and of the whole teen-and-a-half street, fronting La Fayette square, and of the whole front 62 feet 6 inches on Pennsylvania avenue are occupied by the bank building. All the property from that point up to the corner fronting La Fayette square belongs to the institution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Belongs to the Freedman's Bank?

Mr. BRUCE. To the Freedman's Bank. I will say further that the original cost of the whole ground was $80,000, the appraisement papers, &c., $2,060; aggregating $82,060. The cost of the bank building was $176,255.66. The total cost of the building and the ground which it occupies was $207,585.66. I am speaking now of the building and the ground which it occupies. We propose that the Government shall not only purchase the building and the ground upon which it is located, but all the ground and property from that point up to the square.

square.

Mr. TELLER. This statement is only as to the big stone building?

Mr. BRUCE. The stone building. Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the Senator know whether it is encumbered in any way

Mr. BRUCE. It is not. Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In no form? Mr. BRUCE. There is no incumbrance.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is there any question about the

Mr. BRUCE. There is no question about the title. I will say to the Senator that there is a question about the rent. The Government leased the upper part of the building for $17,000 per year, and paid that rent till June 30, 1874. After that time Congress refused to appropriate the $17,000, and only appropriated $14,000 from July 1, 1874, to June 30, 1878; and since July 1, 1878, only $10,000 per annum. The case is to-day before the Court of Claims. The Government having leased the building for $17,000 and used it four years, and paid that amount, and after that time Congress having refused to make the full appropriation, and only appropriated $14,000, and afterward but $10,000, the commissioners have gone before the Court of Claims, and the case is there pending. There is no cloud on the of Claims, and the case is there pending. There is no cloud on the

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the bill provide that the Government shall have a clean and clear title, or what is the provision of the bill in that particular?

Mr. BRUCE. Let the bill be reported. It will show.
The bill was read.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I notice that there are no dimensions given in the bill. It speaks of whatever the Freedman's Bank own. I think the bill should be careful about that. The Freedman's Bank may own only a small part or may own the entire square. The bill as I heard it read makes no mention of the number of feet to be acquired either on Pensylvania avenue or on Fifteen-and-a-half street, so that we may get a very small lot or a very large one under the bill. The Senator from Mississippi has stated that it includes the entire part of the square from the Freedman's Bank building, as we entire part of the square from the Freedman's Bank building, as we call it, to Fifteen-and-a-half street and back to the alley. That being the case, I have no objection to the purchase. I believe that it is valuable property and needed by the Government, and I think perhaps there ought to be something done in the way of aiding the institution by the Government. I do not say it ought to be so, but perhaps it should be so. I make no objection, but I want to be sure that we get what we expect.

I make these remarks now so that it will be understood that this

I make these remarks now so that it will be understood that this bill means that the entire half square from the building known as the Freedman's Bank on to the next street, which is Fifteen-and-a-half street, and back to the alley, is to obtained by this purchase.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I think the suggestion of the Senator from West Virginia is entitled to great consideration. Here is a very valuable piece of property for which we are to pay a large sum of money. No private purchaser would buy without a description of the land, and I move to amend the bill by inserting in the proper place a description of the land by metes and bounds. I presume the Senator from Mississippi can furnish the necessary description.

Mr. GARLAND. The suggestion of the Senator from West Virginia was before the committee at the time of the drawing of the bill, and they considered this point very carefully. It was deemed best though.

was before the committee at the time of the drawing of the bill, and they considered this point very carefully. It was deemed best though, as the law is in reference to the conveyance of property to the Government, that the Attorney-General is required to examine and approve the title, to report the bill in its present form. The Attorney-General examines and sees that the property intended to be purchased is conveyed. We thought that better than to incorporate in the bill by metes and bounds a description of the property. On examination I found there were a good many precedents in that line, a good deal of property had been sold in that way, and the conveyance approved by the Attorney-General. The Attorney-General under the general law looks into the whole matter. But if the Senator from West Virginia and others think it better to put a description in the bill. I have no and others think it better to put a description in the bill, I have no objection.

Mr. INGALLS. I never knew until this debate occurred that the Mr. INGALLS. I never knew until this debate occurred that the Freedman's Bank property, with which I am as familiar as I am with my own, ever covered anything except the ground on which that building stands. I never understood that the wooden building to the west and the two-story brick building on the corner were a portion of the Freedman's Bank property. Of course, unless there is some specification in the bill by which the party who is required to examine the title can ascertain what it is that we intend to purchase, in my judgment it will be fatally defective. It would be so in the title papers of a private purchaser.

title papers of a private purchaser.

Mr. DAWES. I understood the bill to say all the property owned by the Freedman's Bank there.

Mr. INGALLS. Where?

Mr. DAWES. In that particular locality.

Mr. GARLAND. That is the general description which runs through all such authority given; but of course when the deeds are made, when the muniments of title pass, a minute description is incorporated specifically. If there is any necessity for being more specific in the bill in this than in other cases, I am perfectly willing to have a complete description inserted.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds

heretofore have examined this matter. There is no doubt but that the Freedman's Bank owns from the easterly point clear to the corner and then up Fifteenth-and-a-half street to the next brick building there. It is well defined. Perhaps the phraseology in the bill "all the property owned by the Freedman's Bank" would be sufficient to govern the conveyancer, and when the conveyancer made the deed he would probably be more specific, but that would be sufficient to control him, I should think.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator from Mississippi state what is the length of these lots on Pennsylvania avenue?

Mr. BRUCE. The total number of square feet of ground is 23,121; the number of feet occupied by the building, 8,825. This will be found also in the report made by the committee who recently investigated the Freedman's Bank. I have not a full description before me.

Mr. INGALLS. The point is, the length of the lots on Pennsylva-

Mr. THURMAN. Senators all know the necessity of being perfectly accurate. Certainly the papers belonging to this company will show precisely what the amount of the lots is. I am in favor of the bill; but I suggest that the bill had better be recommitted or There is no difficulty about passing the bill; I think everybody is in favor of the bill; but I suggest that it had better lie over until Monday to let the title be looked at and an exact description obtained; otherwise the bill may defeat itself. If you put in the wrong description here the Attorney-General cannot pass the title. Get the description here the Attorney-General cannot pass the title. Get the description perfectly accurate, and in the morning hour on Monday the bill can be passed without trouble. I suggest, therefore, to the Senator from Mississippi to let it go by until Monday, and in the mean time he can get the information and then the proper amendment can be

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks that the bill be laid aside with the understanding that it be taken up-

Mr. THURMAN. There will be no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection. The bill for the relief of Ben. Holladay is the regular order.

ation of executive business

The motion was agreed to.

BEN. HOLLADAY.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before the doors are closed, I ask that an order be made for printing the communication received to-day from the Post-Office Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made in the absence of objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, in that connection, I submit the following resolution:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Treasury be required to cause to be furnished to the Senate as quickly as possible detailed statements of any and all sums of money paid between January 1, 1861, and this date, by the United States or any of its officers, including dates of such payments, to John Butterfield, William B. Dinsmore, and associates, to the Overland Mail Company, its officers or agents, and to Ben. Holladay, and to any persons for them, under contracts No. 12578, dated about September 16, 1257, and No. 14626, dated about August 19, 1864, and any and all changes, modifications, &c., of same made by the Post-Office Department or any other authority, or in pursuance of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1861, for services, losses, expenses, &c., in carrying the mails.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am the most liberal man in this body, I expect, and the most forbearing and the most patient. There has been so much of this on the part of my good friend from Missouri that I think the line must be drawn somewhere, and I believe I will do it think the line must be drawn somewhere, and I believe I will do it here. I object.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply desire to state that there has not been so much of it, but there has been an inability on the part of the Senate to get the information. There stands upon the record a letter from the Postmaster-General in answer to a resolution calling for information, stating that we could get this information that I am asking for by going to the Treasury Department; and it was not given by the Post-Office Department when the Sixth Auditor's Office is right there within ten feet of him.

right there within ten feet of him.

Mr. VOORHEES. We have often heard of scurrying to and fro.

At different times this matter has been here about nine years. During this Congress, two years ago, this bill was introduced, and a year ago it was reported, and, now that inevitable action is pending, people begin to get in a hurry, scurrying around to find something. They have had ample time to find it before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana objects, and the resolution goes over.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it go on the Calendar and be printed. I shall call it up on Monday.

Mr. VOORHEES. What is to go on the Calendar?

Mr. COCKRELL. That resolution.

Mr. VOORHEES. Where did it come from that it is to go on the Calendar?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it lie on the table and be printed. olution is offered and objected to, the objection does not kill it; it only defers action on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the galleries.

Mr. VOORHEES subsequently withdrew his objection, and the res--olution of Mr. Cockrell was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-four minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and forty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment that I may offer a resolution?

Mr. BELFORD. I insist on the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order, this being Friday, is the call of committees for reports of a private nature.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I move to dispense with the call of committees for reports. All the committees were called the other day.

The SPEAKER. It requires a two-thirds vote to dispense with the call of committees. The object of the gentleman from South Carolina no doubt is to reach the Private Calendar.

The question being taken on Mr. O'CONNOR's motion, the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds had voted in the affirmative.

Before the count of the negative vote was completed,

Mr. COFFROTH withdrew the call for further count.

Mr. COFFROTH withdrew the call for further count So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the call of committees was dispensed with.

AMENDMENTS TO THE FUNDING BILL.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a modification of the amendment to the funding bill which I offered in the Committee of the Whole yesterday; and I give notice that I will offer it as modified when we again get into Committee of the Whole and resume the consideration of the funding bill.

There was no objection.

The addition to the proposed amendment is as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall, as currency notes are issued by him, set apart an equal amount of the coin then in the Treasury, and not otherwise appropriated, for the redemption of the bonds redeemable during or subsequent to the year 1881. And the amount of the bonds so redeemed by him prior to the sale of the last of the bonds and certificates authorized in this section shall be deducted from the aggregate amount of such bonds and certificates herein authorized, nor shall be issue an aggregate amount of said bonds and certificates greater than the sum remaining after such deduction. So much of said coin so set apart as is not used in the redemption of bonds shall be applied by the Treasurer to the sinking fund.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an amendment I desire to offer to the funding bill. It is an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN.]

There was no objection.

The proposed amendment is as follows:

That on and after July 1, 1881, no duty shall be levied, assessed, and collected on merchandise imported into the United States in excess of 50 per cent. advalorem on any article embraced in section 2504 of the Revised Statutes, and not subject to tax under the internal-revenue laws, except perfumery of which alcohol forms a component part, rum essence or oil, and bay-rum essence or oil, fusel-oil, or amylic alcohol, opinm and all preparations of opium, and playing cards.

EDWIN R. FARMER.

Mr. BURROWS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6852) granting a pension to Edwin R. Farmer, late captain Twenty-eighth Michigan Infantry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOUCK and others called for the regular order.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. McLane in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Cal-

ASA WEEKS.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3784) to compensate Asa Weeks for his labor and expenses in perfecting torpedoes, torpedo machinery, and the art of torpedo warfare for the sole and exclusive benefit of the United States, and for other purposes, reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs by Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts.

Mr. FINLEY. In the absence of the gentleman from Massachusetts,

[Mr. Harris,] I ask that that bill be passed over for the present. I am opposing it.

There being no objection, the bill was passed over for the present.

JOSEPH CLYMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2705) for the relief of Joseph Clymer, introduced by Mr. Wellborn, and reported from the Committee on Claims by Mr. Bright.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $18,325 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay Joseph Clymer, of Texas, the amount due him from the United States on a contract for transportation of Army stores made between said Clymer and the United States, on the 18th day of April, 1851.

Mr. HAYES. Let the report be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report. Before the reading was concluded

Mr. HAYES said: I do not see the necessity of reading the details of all those accounts. I move that the further reading be dispensed

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the further reading of the report will be dispensed with.

Mr. LOWE. I object. I want to hear it all read.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the report; which is as follows:

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the report; which is as follows:

This claim was reported favorably by the Committee of Claims in the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congresses, which reports are as follows, and recommended as the report of this committee:

"Mr. Bright, from the Committee of Claims, submitted the following report (to accompany bill H. R. —;)

"The Committee of Claims baving had under consideration the claim of Joseph Clymer, formerly a citizen of Missouri, now of the State of Texas, bill H. R. —, beg leave to report:

"That on the 18th day of April, 1851, Joseph Clymer entered into contract with Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas Swords, quartermaster in the Army of the United States, and acting for the United States of Texas, Dona Ana, Don Fernando de Taos, in the Territory of New Mexico, according to the instructions he might receive from the assistant quartermaster at Fort Leavenworth.

"That the wagons to be used for such transportation should be good and strong, have two new substantial duck covers; no wagon to be loaded with more than 5,000 pounds; and each to be drawn by six yoke of good, strong work-cattle, or five pairs of good, strong mules.

"That he was to employ at least one man in addition to the teamsters for very five wagons in each train, each man to be armed and equipped and provided with ammunition.

"That he was to be paid at Fort Leavenworth at the following rates: $12.84 per hundred pounds for all freight delivered at El Paso. Texas; $12.50 for all freight delivered at Dona Ana, New Mexico; and $8.83 for all freight delivered at Fernando de Taos, New Mexico; and season of the two years.

"That on the 7th January, 1851, Lieutenant-Colonel Swords published in a Saint Louis paper that bidders would be requ contract, nor is itmaterial to know, as they are not claiming anything, they having been paid $500 by Clymer to cancel their contract.

"On the 22d March, 1852, Major Ogden, assistant quartermaster, sent notice to Mr. Clymer, which notice was not received by him until, perhaps, a month thereafter, that he had received a telegraphic dispatch from the Quartermaster-General that no transportation would be required that year, and in fact none was required that year under said contract.

"It has been conceded on all hands that such default on the part of the Government was a palpable violation of the contract, and the said Clymer was prepared, ready, and willing to perform his part of the contract.

"It appears from the history of this case that the said Clymer has been persistent and indefatigable in the prosecution of his claim for indemnity against great losses flowing from the breach of the contract.

"The Third Auditor of the Treasury, Mr. Robert J. Atkinson, investigated this case, and on the 27th December, 1854, he made an elaborate report, giving it as his opinion that the published proposals inviting bids for transportation of Army stores and fixing the minimum quantity to transportation, though not carried into the contract, nevertheless should be considered a part of the contract; and while he conceded the right of the claimant to relief, he held that he had no jurisdiction to grant it.

"Congress referred the case to the Court of Cleims for the contraction of the contract.

stores and fixing the minimum quantity to transportation, though not carried into the contract, nevertheless should be considered a part of the contract; and while he conceded the right of the claimant to relief, he held that he had no jurisdiction to grant it.

"Congress referred the case to the Court of Claims for the construction of the contract and the investigation of the facts, and the court held that the published proposals for bids for transportation ought not to be regarded as a part of the written contract, which omitted to mention the minimum amounts stated in the proposals for bids, and, while affirming the breach of the contract on the part of the United States, the court declined to ascertain and award damages for the want of jurisdiction, and referred the case back to Congress for relief.

"It further appears that on the 22d February, 1835, the House Military Committee made a favorable report, which failed of passage for want of time.

"That on the 4th June, 1858, the Senate Committee on Claims made a favorable report, accompanied by a bill, which bill passed the Senate, but did not reach the House in time for action.

"That the House Committee of Claims have made several other favorable reports of a recent date, but the same were not acted on by the House; and several reports with favorable recommendations have been prepared by sub-committees of the House Committee of Claims, but the same were not acted on by the committee.

"It is most remarkable that a claim with so many recognitions of its justice should have been so long delayed of payment.

"The only material question left open is what amount of damages should be paid to Mr. Clymer. The till provides for the payment of $18,325.

Mr. HAYES. It seems to me that bill ought not to be passed.

33,507 76

Mr. HAYES. It seems to me that bill ought not to be passed. If this claim has been running for twenty-five years, I think if there was any justice in it it would have been settled long ago. I wish to ask the Chair whether, under our new rules, there is an objection day, and if this be objection day?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the present rules there is no objection day. Mr. HAYES. Then I hope the majority on this floor will vote against a bill of this kind.

Mr. REAGAN. I will suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that if he had listened to the reading of the report—

Mr. HAYES. I listened to it very attentively.

Mr. REAGAN. He would have observed the committee state that the claimant has continuously pressed his claim, and has had it reported from time to time. And now I submit if there is no objection to the claim, when the report of the committee shows it has been pursued steadily and constantly with repeated action of Congress, it is not the fault of the claimant that, by the delays of legislation, he has not been able to get, at an earlier period, final action on the bill.

Mr. HAYES. The very fact that the claim has been pressed continuously for twenty-five years and has not received favorable action innously for twenty-five years and has not received favorable action is prima facie evidence that the case is not a fair and just one. It is the strongest argument why we should reject the bill.

Mr. WELLBORN. I desire to state, in addition to what has already been stated by my colleague from Texas, and in answer to the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, that this bill has twice passed the Senate and failed in the House for want of time. The report of the Senate and failed in the House for want of time. The report of the Committee on Claims just read shows that it has been five times favorably recommended with absolute unanimity by the committees of the House, but, like many other private claims, has failed for want of time. Every report that has been made on this claim in the Senate time. Every report that has been made on this claim in the Senate and in the House has been favorable and without any dissenting opinion. I repeat, it has twice passed the Senate and failed in the House only for want of time. I read from the report:

It further appears that on the 22d of February, 1855, the House Military Committee made a favorable report, which failed of passage for want of time.

That on the 4th of June, 1855, the Senate Committee on Claims made a favorable report, accompanied by a bill, which bill passed the Senate, but did not reach the House in time for action.

That on the 23d June, 1861, the Senate committee again reported favorably, and the bill passed the Senate. It was made a special order in the House on the second day before the adjournment, but was not reached.

And there has never been in either branch of Congress any unfavorable properties.

And there has never been in either branch of Congress any unfavorable action on this claim.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MRS. MARTHA BRIDGES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4434) for the relief of Mrs. Martha Bridges, of Bartow County, Georgia, reported from the Committee on War Claims by Mr. Bragg.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $72.06 be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay Mrs. Martha Bridges, widow of Balaam A. Bridges, deceased, of Bartow County, for work done by him on the Western and Atlantic Railroad, in the State of Georgia, during the months of August, September, and October, in the year 1864, while said railroad was in the hands of the United States military authorities.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (II. R. No. 399) for the relief of Balaam A. Bridges, submit the following report:

It appears from the records of the Quartermaster-General, as per letter herewith attached, that there is due the claimant $72.06 for services as a laborer on the military railroad, Military Division of the Mississippi, in August and September, 1864, and payment thereof is recommended by the passage of a bill by Congress for his relief.

Since this claim has been pending in Congress the claimant, Balaam A. Bridges, has deceased, leaving a widow, Mrs. Martha Bridges, in impoverished circumstances. The amount being so small, your committee report in favor of paying the same to Mrs. Martha Bridges, widow of Balaam A. Bridges, without her incurring the expenses of administration, and report herewith a substitute for bill (H. R. No. 399) to that effect, and recommend its passage.

WAR DEPARTMENT QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE, Washington, D. C., March 15, 1878.

Washington, D. C., March 15, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith a communication from Hon. W. H. Felton, House of Representatives, dated March 11, 1878, asking status of claim of B. A. Bridges for work done on Western and Atlantic Railroad, and to report that no such claim can be found of record in this office.

I inclose, however, printed copy of bill (H. R. No. 969, Forty-fifth Congress, first session) introduced by Mr. Fellow, and referred to the Committee of Claims, for the relief of Balaam A. Bridges, of Bartow County, Georgia, appropriating $117 to pay said Bridges for work done by him on the Western and Atlantic Railroad during August, September, and October, 1864, while said road was in the hands of the United States military authorities.

It is found on investigation of the records of this office that Captain F. T. Starkweather, assistant quartermaster at Chattanooga, Tennessee, in charge of United States military railroads, Military Division of the Mississippi, reports the services of B. Bridges as trackman, under Thomas L. Frost, foreman, from August 1 to 31, 1864, twenty-five days, at $1.25 per day, $37.50; and B. A. Bridges, in the same capacity, from September 1 to 30, 1864, nineteen and three-quarter days, at $1.75 per day, $3.55; and there is no record in this office that payment has been made for such services.

Captain Starkweather also reports B. A. Bridges as trackman, beautiful the such services.

day, $34.56; and there is no record in this office that payment has been made resuch services.

Captain Starkweather also reports B. A. Bridges as trackman, from October 1 to 6, 1864, six days, at $1.75 per day, $10.50, but the records show that Bridges was paid this amount ($10.50) for these services by Captain W. R. Hopkins, assistant quarkermaster, Chattanooga, Tennessee, in April, 1865.

It therefore seems, from the records of this office, that the sum of $72.66 may be still due to Mr. Bridges for work done by him on military railroads in Angust and September, 1864, and I would have so reported to the accounting officers of the Treasury if he had filed a claim therefor in this office.

But as the case is now before Congress, and as there is no money in the Treasury from which payment of such a claim could be made, I recommend that the Committee of Claims, House of Representatives, be advised to act favorably on the bill, after amendment in accordance with the facts above set forth, and that Mr. FELTON be informed of this action.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

M. C. MEIGS,

Ouartermaster-General, Brevet Major-General U. S. A.

M. C. MEIGS,

Quartermaster-General, Brevet Major-General U. S. A.

There being no chiest. There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM E. GERE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4436) for the relief of William E. Gere, reported from the Committee on War Claims by Mr. ATHERTON.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the claim of William E. Gere be, and the same is hereby, reopened, and the same is ordered to be sent back to the Treasury Department for re-examination and adjustment in case it shall now appear that he is entitled to the payment of the same or any part thereof.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 857) entitled "A bill for the relief of William E. Gere, of Madison County, Illinois."

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. 14. No. 851) entitled "A bill for the relief of William E. Gere, of Madison County, Illinois," beg leave to report:

That on the 10th day of May, 1872, William E. Gere filed in the office of the Third Auditor of the Treasury Department a claim for $4,007.14, for ice alleged to have been furnished to the United States for the use of the Army in September, 1862, at Helena, Arkansas.

The claimant had a barge of ice at that point at that date, and was negotiating with Lieutenant Garvens, of the Twelfth Missouri Volunteers, for the sale thereof, and pending the negotiation the same was taken possession of by Captain Winslow, quartermaster of the post, who claimed to have had it measured, and ordered it paid for at $20 per ton, including the barge. The measurement reported was 225 tons. The claimant protested against the measurement, claiming 2929 tons instead of 225; but, being pressed for money and in debt for the cargo, he received a voucher for 225 tons, at $20 per ton, and received thereon $4,500 for the same. He did not receipt in full for all the ice, but receipted for 225 tons of ice in full.

He claimed that he should have $27 per ton for 2292 tons instead of 225 tons at $20, making still due him $4,007.14; and after pressing his claim upon the officers who took his ice, and upon General Curtis, who refused to act, shortly thereafter Winslow, the quartermaster who ordered the ice seized, caused a new voncher for fifty tons of ice, at $20 per ton, to be executed and delivered to the claimant to settle the claim, and he indorsed on the voncher that it being plainly proved that Gere had lost $900 on the purchase and sale of the ice, he had ordered the voucher to be made. He does not say that there was in fact any more ice actually delivered than he caused to be paid for, and there is not with the papers any proof as to whether there was in fact more ice than was paid for, nor any evidence of the market price of the ice.

In 1875, or about that time

mended that the amount shown by the additional voucher, to wit, $1,000, be paid to the claimant in full settlement of his claim. He states in this report that his former rejection of the claim was solely on the ground that having receipted in full for the 225 tons of ice and the barge he could have no further claim, following the decision of the Supreme Court in case of Clyde. Your committee do not think that a receipt in full, under the circumstances existing at the time of this seizure, and payment, necessarily precludes the further consideration of the claim. The property was taken from him by superior force, and he acted largely under duress, and he had no adequate remedy by a suit at law. Neither 60 the committee believe that on the proof, as it now stands, should any further sum be paid the claimant. The receipt is prima facie evidence of the payment in full of the entire claim, and the onus probandi rests upon the claimant to show with reasonable certainty what additional sum he is entitled to. Having receipted in full, the second voucher is prima facie at least, without consideration, because executed when nothing was furnished and after the claim was receipted in full.

In view of all the facts, while the committee are constrained to report adversely to the passage of the bill, they recommend that the cause be reopened and sent back to the Treasury Department for further examination, and for adjustment in case the claimant can show the additional fifty tons of ice, or any other amount, was taken for the use of the Government; and this report is accompanied with a bill for that purpose.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

PIERRE JOSEPH MAES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4437) for the relief of the heirs of Pierre Joseph Maes, reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims by Mr. GUNTER.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That certificates of location in such denominations as the confirmees or their legal representatives may elect in conformity with the legal subdivisions of the public surveys, shall be issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office as indemnity for lands heretofore or hereby taken by the United States from the private land claim of Pierre Joseph Mais, known and designated as confirmed per confirmation-certificate No. 1630, "A," dated December 13, A. D. 1811, issued by Garrard, Wailes, and Fitz, commissioners for the western district, Orleans Territory, now State of Louisiana, under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1807, entitled "An act respecting claims to land in the Territories of Orleans and Louisiana."

SEC. 2. That said certificates of location shall issue to the heirs, assigns, or legal representatives of Pierre Joseph Mais for one thousand three hundred and fifty-four acres and four hundredths of an acre of land; and said certificates of location may be located upon any public lands of the United States (not mineral) subject to sale at ordinary private entry and not exceeding $1.25 per acre, and shall be, and hereby are, declared assignable by deed or instrument in writing, according to the form and pursuant to such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, so as to vest the assignee with all the rights of the original owner, including the right to locate such certificates of location in his own name, and to receive a patent therefor, based upon a certificate of entry issued by the register of the proper district land office.

SEC. 3. That such scrip shall be attested by the seal of the General Land Office, and shall be received from actual settlers in payment of pre-emption claims, or in commutation of homestead claims only, in the same manner and to the same extent as is now authorized by law in the case of military bounty-land warrants.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1916) for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Pierre Joseph Mais, have fully considered the same, and make the following report:

The bill in question proposes to authorize and direct the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue certificates of location to the heirs and legal representatives of Pierre Joseph Mais for 1,354.04 acres of land claimed by them under a French grant dated July 14, 1757, and appropriated by the Government of the United States on the — day of October, 1824, contrary to their legal and equitable rights. The patent from the French authorities being in the actual possession of claimants, they presented it to the board of land commissioners for the western district of Louisiana, regularly appointed and acting under the act of Congress approved on the 2d day of March, 1805, entitled "An act for ascertaining and adjusting the titles and claims to lands within the Territory of Orleans and Louisiana," and was confirmed by them for 1,334.04 acres December 11, 1811, by virtue of authority vested in them by the fourth section of the act of Congress passed on the 3d day of March, 1807, entitled "An act respecting claims in the Territory of Orleans and Louisiana."

The certificate of confirmation is in words and figures following:

The certificate of confirmation is in words and figures following:

No. 1650.

"The commissioners appointed for the purpose of ascertaining the rights of persons to lands within the district and Territory aforesaid, do certify that Pierre Joseph Mais, of the county of Natchitoches, is confirmed in his claim to a tract of land containing 1,600 superficial arpens, equal to 1,354.04 American acres, being for forty arpens front by the depth of forty. The grant not being produced is found of record, bounded at the date of the patent on all sides by vacant land, situate in the county of Natchitoches, on the west side of Bayou Quisaschie, and held by virtue of a patent, under the authority of the French Government, to Gucheran St. Denis, bearing date the 14th day of July, in the year 1757, and being signed by Kerlenac and Robert Wurna, acting as governor and the other intendant, having such forms and marks, natural and artificial, as shall be represented in a plat thereof to be returned by the principal deputy surveyor of the said district.

"Attest:
"L. POSEY,
"Clerk of the Board."

After the confirmation of the claim in question by the board of commissioners as aforesaid, the lands embraced in the original patent to Mais and in the certificate of confirmation above recited were disposed of by the Government of the United States to other parties without consideration or satisfaction, either in whole or in part, to claimants.

The committee, after a full investigation of all the facts bearing upon the case, are unanimous in the opinion that the original grant from the French authorities to Pierre Joseph Mais was a legal and valid grant; that a confirmation of the same was obtained in 1811 from the board of commissioners established by act of Congress for that purpose; that the United States appropriated the lands embraced in the patent and certificate contrary to the rights of claimants, and that they have not received any consideration therefor.

We therefore report back the accompanying bill as a substitute for raid bill No. 1916, and recommend its passage.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon ordering this bill to be laid acide to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. WARNER. Before the vote is taken upon that question, I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of this bill what is the amount of land involved?

Mr. GUNTER. I will state that in round numbers it is about thirteen hundred acres, a few acres over.

Mr. WARNER. No money involved?

Mr. GUNTER. No money consideration at all. These parties were entitled to land under a French grant, and the land to which they were entitled was appropriated by the Government. Their claim was reported upon favorably in due form by a commission appointed to investigate the matter, which report was made to the Commissioner of the Land Office and afterward submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for confirmation.

Interior for confirmation.

Mr. WARNER. Has the Government used any portion of this land?

Mr. GUNTER. The Government has utilized or appropriated all

Mr. WARNER. For what purpose?
Mr. GUNTER. The Government sold it to settlers, not being aware that the claim under the French grant was a valid one, or that there was such a claim.

What was the date of the action of the commis-Mr. WILLITS.

sioners ?

Mr. GUNTER. The commission reported upon the claim in 1811.

Mr. GUNTER. The commission reported upon the claim in 1811.
Mr. WILLITS. What was the size of the grant?
Mr. GUNTER. In round numbers thirteen hundred acres.
Mr. WILLITS. Had it been surveyed?
Mr. GUNTER. It has been surveyed, and the commission appointed under an act of Congress passed in 1805 reported that the grant was valid and recommended its confirmation.
Mr. WILLITS. When was it surveyed?
Mr. GUNTER. It was surveyed about the time of the report of the commissioners.

commissioners.
Mr. WILLITS. Before
Mr. GUNTER. Before.

Before or after?

Mr. WILLITS. Under what authority?

Under the act of Congress passed in 1805. Mr. GUNTER.

Mr. WILLITS. Do not these surveys always come after the action of the commissioners? When they agree that the title is in the claimant, and in order to fix the locality, there must be a regular survey? Mr. GUNTER. That is always done beforehand, unless there is a controversy.

Mr. WILLITS. Done by whom?

Mr. GUNTER. By the surveyor-general.
Mr. WILLITS. Then, if the surveyor-general surveyed this grant, why is it that there is not a record of it in the Land Office?
Mr. GUNTER. I suppose there is.
Mr. WILLITS. Then how can it be claimed that the Government deeded it away to other parties in ignorance of the existence of other claimants?

Mr. GUNTER. I do not know as to that.
Mr. WILLITS. Has it ever been before Congress before?
Mr. GUNTER. Not that I know of.
Mr. WILLITS. Then why—
Mr. GUNTER. It has been here for a considerable length of time

Mr. GUNTER. It has been here for a considerable length of time and not acted upon.

Mr. WILLITS. Why has it lain dormant?

Mr. GUNTER. It is like many other claims of this character. It has been investigated by committees and reported to the House for action, but no final action being had upon it, it must again come before Congress. Another reason why there has been a delay is this, the original grantees died and this land continued in possession of their heirs until after the transfer by the Government to other parties ties.

Mr. WARNER. Is this land now in possession of actual settlers?

Mr. GUNTER. It is, having been placed there by the Government.

Mr. WARNER. Then if this bill shall pass, will it not give rise to claims against the Government on the part of these settlers?

Mr. GUNTER. By no means. The object of this bill is to give the heirs of the original grantees land certificates, in place of the land which belonged to the grantees, but which was utilized by the Government; that is all there is of it.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. GUNTER. Very well.

Mr. PAGE. Where was this grant located?

Mr. GUNTER. It was located in Louisiana.

Mr. PAGE. Does this bill provide for the issue of scrip to these

Mr. PAGE. Does this bill provide for the issue of scrip to these

Mr. GUNTER. It does.

Mr. PAGE. To be located anywhere? Mr. GUNTER. To be located on land which is subject to entry at a dollar and a quarter per acre; not otherwise.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. How many acres does the gentleman think this bill covers

Mr. GUNTER. A few acres over thirteen hundred. It is evidently a correct claim, and recommended by the Land Office and the Interior

Mr. PAGE. One word more. On general principles I am not in favor of issuing scrip to any party in lieu of lands occupied or disposed of by the Government, except that to which no title has been acquired under homestead and pre-emption laws. I am opposed to this bill as a precedent, but as it appears to cover but a small amount I will make no objection to it. If it was for any large amount of land, I should certainly object to any bill providing for the issue of scrip to be located wherever the parties may select.

Mr. GUNTER. There is no question with the Commissioner or with the Secretary of the Interior as to the validity of the original grant from the French Government, under which these parties claim. They recommend that this bill shall be passed giving scrip in lieu of land that really belonged to these parties under the grant, but which was utilized by the Government.

Mr. WILLITS. I should like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas one further question. The reason I asked about this screep was this: the grant, as generally made, fronts on some bayon or river, is located definitely. But I see that in this case the report of the commissioner says:

missioner says:

The grant not being produced, is found of record, bounded at the date of the patent on all sides by vacant land, situate in the county of Nachitoches, on the west side of Bayou Quisaschie, and held by virtue of a patent.

Now, this grant does not seem to have been located at all; it had vacant lands all around it. I submit that these parties have no claim unless the grant was definitely located by a survey. The question I wish to ask is, whether the committee has such a survey before them?

Mr. GUNTER. I will state that the report from which the gentleman reads shows very clearly that the commissioner knew the grant was located. He states that it is surrounded on all sides by public lands. That is a clear indication that it had been legally and properly located; that the commissioner appointed for the purpose of passing upon the validity of the title had so reported to him.

Mr. WILLITS. The report here says that the surrounding lands were vacant lands.

were vacant lands.

Mr. GUNTER. That is true enough. The commissioner speaks of that very fact as showing that there are no conflicting claims as to the boundary of this identical land; that there is no question about it.

Mr. PAGE. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the scrip is limited to lands of the Government for sale at $1.25 an acre?

Mr. GUNTER. We have reported no bill of this character without authorizing the location of the scrip upon such lands only as are subject to report of the scrip upon such lands only as are subject to report of the scrip upon such lands only as are subject to report of the scrip upon such lands only as are subject to report of the scrip upon such lands only as are subject to report of the scrip upon such lands only as are subject to report of the scrip upon such lands only as are subject to report of the scrip upon such lands only as are subject to report of the scrip upon such lands only as are subject to report of the scrip upon such lands only as are subject to report of the scrip upon such lands only as are subject to report of the scrip upon such lands only as are subject to report of the scrip upon such lands only as are subject to report of the scrip upon such lands only as are subject to report of the scrip upon such lands on the scrip upon such lan authorizing the location of the scrip upon such lands only as are subject to private entry at $1.25 per acre.

Mr. WILLITS. On further reading of this report it appears that this land had to be surveyed in order to be located; for the confirmation certificate closes in these words:

Having such forms and marks, natural and artificial, as shall be represented in a plat thereof to be returned by the principal deputy surveyor of the said district.

Mr. GUNTER. Yes, sir; that was done, and the plat was before the committee.

the committee.

Mr. WILLITS. That does not appear in the report.

Mr. GUNTER. Yes, sir; and I will state that the committee was unanimous in reporting this bill.

Mr. WILLITS. I do not dispute that. The gentleman says that the committee had before them a plat of the deputy surveyor.

Mr. GUNTER. Yes, sir; that is a prerequisite to a recommendation by our committee of the confirmation of title in a case of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN. If there he no objection the bill will be leid said. The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the bill will be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

TITLE TO AN ISLAND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 936) relinquishing the right of the United States to an island therein named, reported by Mr. Norcross, from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. NORCROSS. I ask that this bill be passed over for the present.

There being no objection, the bill was passed over.

WILLIAM REDUS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4438) for the relief of William Redus, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs by Mr. Poehler.
The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to William Redus the sum of $3,600, out of any money belonging to the nation of Osage Indians not otherwise appropriated, in payment in full for one hundred and forty-four beeves taken from him by said Indians on the 28th day of June, 1872: Provided, That said sum shall be taken in full satisfaction of all claims on said Indians on account of the beeves so taken.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred a petition of William Redus, asking for relief, respectfully report:

That they have had the same under consideration and recommend the passage of the bill herewith submitted; and your committee beg to submit in support of such recommendation the following statement:

William Redus, who is the claimant, testifies that on the 28th day of June, 1872, he was the owner and in possession of a certain drove of cattle, numbering six hundred and eighty-six head, and was driving the said cattle from the State of Texas to the State of Kansas, over what is commonly known as the Texas cattle-trail through the Indian Territory, and about forty miles south of the south line of Kansas a party of Osage Indians, to the number of one hundred or more, all armed, without any parley, and without halting, dashed into his herd and cut out one hundred and forty-four of the best beeves in the drove, killing about fifty head in sight of the herd, and driving the remainder of the one hundred and forty-four the best beeves in the drove, killing about fifty head in sight of the herd, and driving the remainder of the one hundred and forty-four them, he found that he was short one hundred after the stampede and counting them, he found that he was short one hundred and forty-four pitchem, he found that he was short one hundred and forty-four head, all of which must have been killed or driven off by the Indians. He further states that he had but seven men with the herd; that they offered no resistance to the Indians, for from their great number and hostile appearance he thought it would be useless.

Westley Roberts testifies that he knows William Redus, and saw his herd of cattle; that the cattle in said herd were large and were from four to seven years old; that they were the best beeves he had seen on the trail that season; that he was the owner of a drove of cattle, and was driving them at the same time over the same trail in the Indian Territory; that when about forty miles south of the south line of Kansas, on the 28th day of June, 1872, the same day that Redus lost his cattle, a band of Osage Indians, about one hundred and twenty in number, well armed, who seemed bent on mischief, came to my herd of beeves and demanded one hundred head. I refused to comply with their demand, but finally, in order to save shedding blood, I offered them ten head, and as soon as they found I would not let them have any more without a fight, they left and went in the direction of William Redus's drove, which was about one mile distant.

I. B. Harris, of Bexar County, Texas, certifies to having purchased of William Redus four hundred and thirty-seven head of cattle, at $22.50 per head, being all the cattle that Redus had at Wichita at that time. The certificate is acknowledged before the clerk of the court of Bexar County, with the seal attached.

W. O. Woodley testifies on the 9th day of July, 1872, that he was in the employ and had charge of the herd of cattle belonging to William Redus; that he came with said herd from the State of Texas; that on the 28th day of June, 1872, a party of Indians, calling themselves Osage Indians, came up and, without asking any questions, dashed into the herd, yelling and shouting, and cut out one hundred and forty-four of the best beeves, and caused the herd to stampede; that said Indians shot from forty to fifty of said beeves within a short distance of the herd, and drove off the blance; that he followed said Indians to recover some of the cattle that might be left by them, bu seven or eight men with the drove at the time the Indians drove off the cattle, and no resistance was offered.

George F. Hindes testifies that he is a drover, and was present near the herd of William Redus on the 28th day of June, 1872. This witness corroborates the testimony of William Redus, Westley Roberts, and W. O. Woodley as to time and place where the cattle were taken, but could not state the number taken.

The following is a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Secretary of the Interior on the same matter:

"To the honorable the Secretary of the Interior:

"To the honorable the Secretary of the Interior:

"SIR: I have the honor to present herewith a claim of William Redus for $5,100, on account of a depredation alleged to have been committed in 1872 by Osages.

"From the statement of Mr. Redus, it appears that his business is that of a drover and that on the 28th day of June, 1872, he was taking a herd of six hundred and eighty-six beef-cattle over what is called the Texas cattle-trail through the Indian Territory, to Kansas, and that when about forty miles south of the south line of that State a party of Osage Indians, to the number of one hundred bromore, well armed, dashed into the herd and captured one hundred and forty-four of his best beeves after stampeding the herd. He claims that the herd of cattle was well worth, on an average, $35 per head; and that when the best are selected out, as in this case, it greatly injures the sale of the herd, as does also the stampeding of the herd. He therefore claims that he was damaged in all to the amount of $5,100.

"The evidence in regard to the attack made by the Indians upon the herd is deemed sufficient to fully establish the fact of the depredation. Two persons who were eye-witnesses of the transaction confirm the statement of claimant on this point.

deemed sufficient to tany teaches a confirm the statement of claimant on this point.

"The evidence in relation to the damages sustained, apart from the loss of the cattle, is not so satisfactory. Several persons who claim to be drovers join in a statement to the effect that a selection of a few of the best beeves from a herd injures the sale of a herd from 20 to 25 per cent; but this statement cannot be received as evidence, as it is not verified by the oaths of the parties making it, as is required by the rules of the Department.

"The agent reports that the Indians in council admit that they took twenty-nine head of cattle, and are quite 'positive that claimant has largely exaggerated his loss in numbers and value per head."

"The number of cattle lost is believed, from the testimony, to be correctly stated by him, but in the judgment of this office he has overestimated their value, and has not shown by any reliable evidence that he was damaged otherwise than by the loss of the one hundred and forty-four cattle. As claimant admits to the agent that the balance of the herd averaged him about twenty-five dollars per head, I respectfully recommend that he be allowed that amount per head for the one hundred and forty-four lost, making an aggregate of $3,600.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,"

"EDW'D B. SMITH, "Commissioner."

"EDW'D B. SMITH, "Commissioner."

Mr. HAYES. I would like to know whether this bill proposes to take this money out of any annuities that may be due the Osage Indians?

Mr. UPSON. Yes, sir; it comes out of the money belonging to them. Mr. HAYES. Let the bill be again read.

The Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. WILLITS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr.

Urson] a question: Is the Interior Department under the law in the habit of paying this class of claims?

Mr. UPSON. I believe not; but I can say that in this case the Indians admit the taking of the cattle; the Commissioner so reports; and the bill provides for payment out of money belonging to the Indians.

Mr. WILLITS. I understand the Indians admit that they did take twenty-nine cattle.

Mr. UPSON. Yes, sir; they admit taking twenty-nine; but the Commissioner says that the evidence abundantly establishes the fact vides that payment shall come out of moneys belonging to these Indians.

Mr. WILLITS. Another question: I would like to know whether this Government or Congress has been in the habit of paying this class of claims?

Mr. UPSON. I cannot say that it has; but this bill has been heretofore reported upon favorably in this House, and it is a just claim and should be paid.

Mr. WILLITS. Was it acted upon?

Mr. UPSON. No, sir.

Mr. WILLITS. Was it not rejected during the Forty-fifth Con-

Mr. UPSON. Not to my knowledge. I do not think it was.

Mr. WILLITS. I would like to know whether there are not piled up in the Departments to-day claims of this character to the amount of $4,000,000?

Mr. UPSON. As to the amount of Indian claims I cannot say. In this case the Government is not asked to pay the money. Mr. UPSON.

Mr. WILLITS. I understand that.
Mr. UPSON. It comes out of the money belonging to the Indians.
They admit that they did take twenty-nine of the cattle; and the Indian Commissioner who has investigated the case reports that according to the evidence one hundred and forty-four were taken. I grant that if the Government were asked to pay this money the claim would come under the same head with a large number of Indian claims that remain unsettled.

Mr. WILLITS. But I wish to know whether there are not claims of this kind to the amount of $4,000,000 which the claimants are asking to have paid in this same way?

Mr. UPSON. I am not aware as to that.

Mr. WILLITS. Is there not a large amount of such claims?

Mr. SCALES. I will state to the gentleman that he is correct.

There are such claims to the amount of about four million dollars.

Mr. WILLITS. Now I wish the property that the Constitution of the Constitution of

Mr. WILLITS. Now, I wish to know whether the Committee on Indian Affairs are ready to-day to inaugurate a system which will ultimately result in the payment of millions of dollars of claims of this character out of the Indian funds. Let us know what we are

Mr. POEHLER. Mr. Chairman, as one of the committee which had this matter in charge, I wish to say to the gentleman from Michigan that I have not considered the amount which may be claimed by different individuals against the Government or the Indians. We investigated in that committee the question of right and justice in this case. There was no question on the part of the Department or any agent of the Indians but that these Indians did commit the department of the Indians but that these Indians did commit the department of the Indians but that these Indians did commit the department of the Indians but that these Indians did commit the department of the Indians but that these Indians did commit the department of the Indians but that these Indians did commit the department of the Indians but that these Indians did commit the department of the Indians but that these Indians did commit the department of the Indians but that these Indians did commit the department of the Indians but that these Indians did commit the department of the Indians but that these Indians did commit the department of the Indians but that these Indians did commit the department of the Indians but that these Indians did commit the department of the Indians but that these Indians did commit the department of the Indians but that these Indians did commit the department of the Indians but that these Indians did commit the Indians but that these Indians did commit the Indians but that these Indians did commit the Indians but th redations for which damages are claimed and allowed in the pending bill. The only point at issue was in reference to the value of the cattle, and that value is fixed in this proposition at the very lowest rate claimed by any one in the different Departments. I believe it is just and right that the Indians should pay as far as possible for departments.

redations which they commit.

Nor, sir, do I think we should reject any bill on the ground merely that there are other bills which may come forward making claim for damages in like cases. This is just and right, and ought to be allowed; and therefore I hope that the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I believe this bill to be just;

I believe it ought to pass, but I do not understand the policy of this Committee on Indian Affairs, which selects out from a mass of claims amounting to over four million dollars this, and this alone, for allowance and payment by the Government. There are now piled up in the room of the Committee on Indian Affairs claims reported from the Department as being in all respects just and proper amounting Mr. SAPP. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?
Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. RYAN, of Ransas. Certainly.

Mr. SAPP. Even assuming that to be so, does the gentleman urge that as any argument against the payment of this claim, which is admitted on all hands to be a just and proper one?

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. No; it is not so urged. This claim should be paid. I hope the policy of paying this class of claims will be inaugurated. I trust the Committee on Indian Affairs will bring these claims forward, and that every single dollar justly due will be paid, and paid out of the funds allowed the Indians annually. When Indians commit these depredations they should be compelled to pay for dians commit these depredations they should be compelled to pay for them out of their annuities.

them out of their annuities.

Mr. SAPP. I wish to ask another question, and it is this, whether, under the law as it now stands, the parties who have suffered loss have any other remedy except by appeal to Congress?

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. None whatever, sir.

Mr. SAPP. The Department has no authority under the law to deduct from the annuities the amounts necessary to satisfy these claims for degree when the following support of degree along the resulting out of the resulting out of degree along the resulting out of the resulting out duct from the annuities the amounts necessary to satisfy these claims for damages arising out of depredations committed by the Indians.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. The Department has no authority to pay a dollar, and these claims can only be paid by the action of Congress.

Mr. HUMPHREY. I wish to say one word. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask whether this Congress is ready to make the Government of the United States become in law an insurer for every man who shall enter into any enterprise or hazard in this country? It seems to me by passing such a proposition as the one now pending the question will resolve itself at last into precisely one of that character. These claims may be just, but why should Congress, after making treaties with the Indians, take the power into its own hands and pay whatever it shall see fit out of the annuities provided for by Indian treaties for depredations committed by some individual mem-Indian treaties for depredations committed by some individual member of an Indian tribe? Is it not in reality a punishment of the whole mass of Indians for the bad conduct or wrong-doing of a few members of it? And I wish to know whether that point added to the other that these men who are engaged in enterprises which are hazardous in their character should not be allowed to come to Congress for indemnity when their undertaking ceases to be profitable, is not afficient to induse us to wiset the reading bill sufficient to induce us to reject the pending bill.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, it is incumbent upon the tribes to be responsible for the acts of depredations committed by individual members of those tribes.

Mr. SCALES. I desire to state for the benefit of the House, Mr. Chairman, the condition of these claims for Indian depredations. There are now on file in the room of the Committee on Indian Affairs and elsewhere claims of this nature to the amount of $4,000,000 and upward.

'Mr. POEHLER. Do I understand you to say that that amount of claims is filed with the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. SCALES. I say there are in the Committee on Indian Affairs and elsewhere claims amounting to $4,000,000. That is the report we get from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. POEHLER. In the committee and elsewhere?
Mr. SCALES. Yes, sir.
Mr. POEHLER. If the gentleman only included the claims before the Committee on Indian Affairs I wished to correct his statement, for I do not know of claims amounting to more than $500,000 before that committee.

Mr. SCALES. I will inform the gentleman that a few days ago when it was understood that one of these bills passed the House an additional number was sent down to the committee-room.

Now, sir, it has been the policy of this Government for years to pay these claims when they come well sustained by evidence. That was a policy inaugurated many years ago. The Government undertook by its treaties to indemnify white settlers for damages committed by by its treaties to indemnify white settlers for damages committed by the Indians, and to indemnify the Indians for damages committed upon them by white men. It is on this principle the committee has been acting in reference to these cases. I do not know how we can get around them when well sustained by evidence. But I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that these claims rarely come before us sustained by such evidence as would justify, in my opinion, their indorsement by the committee. How, as a matter of fact, are these claims supported? By ex parte evidence exclusively, without any cross-examination whatever. We hear, as a consequence, only one side. On the evidence presented and with no other we are bound to say they are just. I have uniformly voted against any claim sustained exclusively by ex parte evidence, and that is the condition, as I have said, of nearly every one of these claims before the House. That is the condition of this claim. It may be just but the evidence is not satisfactory. It is purely ex parte, and any claim could be made out by such evidence. This is a case where one party has been heard and the other parties have not been heard at all. I want this matter fully investigated. On the other hand, I am bound to say it stands on about as good a footing as any other claim of like character presented to us, and if it is the policy of the Government to pay them on such evidence, then there is no good reason why it should them on such evidence, then there is no good reason why it should not be paid as well as any other.

Mr. HAYES. I want to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question.

Mr. SCALES. Very well.

Mr. HAYES. I wish to ask whether it has been the policy of this Government to hold itself responsible for losses sustained by depredations of the Indians committed in that way?

Mr. SCALES. Yes, sir; I think so.

Mr. HAYES. That has been the policy?

Mr. SCALES. Yes, sir; that has been the policy. I desire to say, however, in addition that I do think that policy ought to be changed as far as we can consistently with our treaty obligations. I do not believe the Government ought to be an insurer for any white many that reads against the Lagrangian. as far as we can consistently with our treaty obligations. I do not believe the Government ought to be an insurer for any white man that goes across the Indian Territory. I do not believe in the Government becoming the insurer of Indians against losses sustained by them from white men. If you continue that policy you will always have the committee-rooms filled to overflowing with such claims and we called upon to appropriate millions, session after session, and that, too, upon evidence that would in many cases not be received in a court of justice, and all of it ex parte. I do hope, Mr. Chairman, that some steps will be taken so far as it can here be taken to suspend the payment for this large class of claims, and that this Government will say that from this time forward it will pay no such claims or damages to Indians or white people, but let them stand before the law like every other citizen of the United States. Let them run risks who will, but let them when they do sustain the loss themselves and not call upon the Government after they have failed in their efforts. In this case they have made a venture into that Territory for the sake of gain, and having done so and run the risk the subsequent loss ought to be their own. All the Government can agree to do is that in a case where the Indians have a fund it will see that the damage done by such a depredation is restored out of the fund to the party injured. But in many cases the Indians have no fund on hand, exdone by such a depredation is restored out of the fund to the party injured. But in many cases the Indians have no fund on hand, excepting those which the Government has furnished for their necessary support, and if you take away from the Indians this fund the Government must supply it for their support, and therefore it comes out of the Government in the end.

Mr. HAYES. I understand the gentleman to say that these claims amount to $4,000,000.

Mr. SCALES. Yes, sir; over four millions.

Mr. HAYES. And if this claim is passed, it will simply establish a precedent?

liquidation of the damages claimed. Now, in the present case this happens to be a rich nation. This tribe, the Osages, is well able to pay the damages, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommends the payment. In this particular case, therefore, of the Osages, which has a large fund to their credit, the payment could be made without detriment to the Government or to the Indians. But there are many claims against Indians, for instance, against the Kiowas and Comanches, who have no fund, and if you take from their annuities the amount necessary to pay the damages, then you deprive them of what is necessary for their support and the Government must provide it in some other way.

what is necessary for their support and the Government must provide it in some other way.

Mr. UPSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina to the fact, when he states that this claim is based entirely upon ex parte testimony, that there is a letter from the Indian Commissioner corroborating claimant's testimony.

Mr. SCALES. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that, while there is a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs indorsing it, his recommendation is founded exactly on the same sort of testimony, which ommendation is founded exactly on the same sort of testimony, which ommendation is founded exactly on the same sort of testimony, which is solely ex parte.

Mr. UPSON. That I do not know, but at all events there is a letter from the Commissioner, from this officer of the Indian department, recommending the payment of this claim. It seems to me that the question is not whether this Government shall establish the policy of guaranteeing the claims of private individuals for all depredations committed by Indians, but the proper question now before us is, is this claim legitimate, just, and proper? In other words, instead of its being the establishment of a policy to pay all claims indiscriminately, the question now presented to this committee is, will this House of Representatives or the American Congress establish the principle and policy of declaring that an American citizen can be principle and policy of declaring that an American citizen can be robbed and plundered of his property by Indians who are fed, supported, and sustained by this Government and have no redress? Is the policy to be adopted that Indians can wantonly seize the property the policy to be adopted that Indians can wantonly seize the property of private individuals quietly and peacefully passing through the Indian country, and because they are simply the wards of the nation the owners of such property shall have no remedy when they come before Congress and ask for relief? Is it intended to be declared as the policy of this Government that these Indians, out of the money given by the generosity of the American Government, shall not respond and pay for the damage which they have wantonly, outrageously, and treacherously caused, or for property which they have stolen from an American editizen? American citizen?

It matters not, Mr. Chairman, whether the claims presented for this class of damages amount to $4,000,000 or $10,000,000, so far as concerns our action as to the bill under consideration. Our inquiry should be, is this claim just in itself, is it a proper claim to be presented to Congress for payment?

Has this American citizen been wronged and outraged? Has his property been unlawfully taken by the Indians? Was it worth the amount set forth in the bill? And should it not be taken from the amount set forth in the bill? And should it not be taken from the moneys belonging to the Indians? It seems to me it would be very unwise and unjust for this Government, toward its citizens, to lay down or sanction any such policy as has been indicated by gentlemen here to-day, in opposing this bill, and I trust and hope for the credit of our country that it will not be done.

Mr. POEHLER. In answer to the inquiry made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] why this was selected out of the great mass of bills of a similar character pending before the Committee on Indian Affairs, I wish to say that this was not selected from any mass of bills, but was one of the first presented, and was the first acted upon. It was not selected from any others or taken special charge of. In answer to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES,] I say this: if a white man to-day commits depredations or inflicts damages on another white man he can be prosecuted in the courts and say this: it a white man to-day commits depredations or inflicts damages on another white man he can be prosecuted in the courts and the damage collected. This is the only court to which this man can come to collect his damages against those Indians. I know of no other, and I think the damages have been so clearly established that there should be no question about them.

Mr. SCALES. Will the gentleman from Minnesota allow me a question?

Mr. POEHLER. Yes, sir.
Mr. SCALES. Does not my friend think that justice would be much more completely done if we had a court established for the purpose of ascertaining what these claims are, and hearing the evidence pose of ascertaining what these claims are, and hearing the evidence on both sides?

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. You will never get such a court.

Mr. POEHLER. I agree entirely as to that with the gentleman from North Carolina. I am sorry we have not such a court, and I would vote for a bill to-morrow the object of which was to establish it. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES] asks are we going to pass this bill to establish a precedent? That precedent, sir, has been established many years ago, and many bills have passed Congress of a similar character, and I have no doubt the gentleman himself has voted for them.

voted for them.

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill illustrates more than any others per-Mr. SCALES. Yes, sir; over four millions.
Mr. HAYES. And if this claim is passed, it will simply establish a precedent?
Mr. SCALES. Yes; for that character of claims. If the Government is owing any annuity to the Indians, it may pay the annuity in great injustice—perhaps that is not the expression to use, I will rather say a denial of justice—that persons having so large claims of this kind should have no place at which they may prosecute them except in Congress where private legislation has accumulated to such extent as to make it impossible to get a claim through during the two years to which the prosecution of such claims is limited.

And of all courts for the trial of claims this Congress—if it may be called a court for that purpose, and I presume it may be, for it is exercising quasi judicial power—is the worst for the Government and for the claimant. For the Government is liable to be muleted upon ex parle testimony, where the witnesses are not cross-examined, and no evidence is brought forward to traverse the statements made by the claimant. For the individual it is also the worst, because the claimant is thrown into the midst of a great mass of business, and is compelled to dance attendance in the lobbies of Congress for two compened to dance attendance in the lobbles of Congress for two years, and may then probably be sent home without having had his claim reached. It seems to me this state of things is almost an im-peachment of the intelligence of the American Congress, that would permit it from year to year to be continued in a civilized country, a country which has in its Constitution a clause which says that justice shall not be denied to its citizens.

I have introduced into this House, and it is now pending before the Judiciary Committee, an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting special legislation, as follows:

Resolved. That the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said Legislatures, shall be valid as a part of the Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE -

SECTION 1. The legislative power of the United States is limited to the enactment of laws general in their application and effect to all sections and persons within the jurisdiction of this Constitution. All laws, private or special enactments, hereby prohibited, shall be null and void.

SEC. 2. All claims against the United States shall be adjudicated and determined by such tribunal or tribunals as Congress may establish for that purpose.

While I would be glad to see this constitutional amendment reported by the Judiciary Committee and adopted by Congress, I am at the same time of the opinion that a general law could be passed providing that this class of claims could be prosecuted in the United States circuit courts of the nearest States to the Territories of the United States; and that it would be better for those persons who are interested in such legislation to unite in favor of a general law which would open the doors of the courts of Kansas, and Texas, and Colorado, and Nebraska to the adjudication of cases of this kind, where the claimant can get a speedy hearing and a judgment which will have the force of law to enable him to go to the Department and stop so much of the claims of the Indians as are embraced in his judgment and have that amount paid to him.

stop so much of the claims of the Indians as are embraced in his judgment and have that amount paid to him.

I hope, therefore, gentlemen interested in this subject will press during this session the passage of a bill of that kind in order that the persons entitled to the payment of the $4,000,000 may have a place where they can be heard and have their rights properly adjudicated. So far as this case is concerned, I think the evidence shows it is a good one. The evidence is of course ex parte.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Is that not so in all claims

Mr. SPRINGER. It is the case in reference to all claims before this body. It is the best we can have. I always feel some hesitation in voting for a claim supported by such testimony, but it is the best we can have under the circumstances. And it seems to me that when such a claimant as this comes to this Congress asking to be heard, as we have furnished no other tribunal in which he can be heard, he ought to have justice when he comes to this one however late it may be or whatever may be the difficulty.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I will call the attention of the committee briefly to the manner in which these Indian depredation claims come to be a subject for congressional action. We are told that Indian depreda-tion claims have no business here, and that the Government is not rightly obligated to pay any of them—a proposition which the people of the West and their representatives contest. We are told that if men place themselves in positions of risk, they must take the consequences; that, as in cases of damage from riot or from war, the Government is not responsible, having exercised due diligence and done its duty. We are told that if people are robbed or murdered by white men the State does not make pecuniary recompense to the sufferers or their heirs, and we are asked why should it do so because the depredation is committed by an Indian. I will endeavor to explain the difference, and to show that depredation claims stand on an entirely different ground. The Government sets up in the Territories these independent principalities known as reservations. They are occupied by people recognized in a sense as independent nationalities, under the control and protection of the General Government. The laws of the commonwealths in which they are situated do not cover them. The process of the civil courts cannot invade them. They are cities of refuge, and the Government declares to all surrounding people that they shall not disturb its wards, and assumes the position of guardian and arbiter between them and all others. You say that people who trade or settle in such countries should take the risk of their ventures. So they should under the laws. But if a white man burns your house or steals your horse you can follow him anywhere with the law. You can arrest him, punish, and perhaps recover your property. But when these Indians make a raid off their reservations, the depredation is committed by an Indian. I will endeavor to ex-invade a settlement, and take your horses and cattle and drive them, under your very eyes, to their reservation, what can you do with the law? Suppose they murder and destroy and then retreat to their own dominions, and your marshals and sheriffs follow them in hot own dominions, and your marshals and sheriffs follow them in hot pursuit to the very boundaries of their reservation, what remedy have you? Your law no longer follows the Indian. The process of your court falls dead as soon as your pursuit reaches the line of his reservation, which the Government orders you not to cross, and safe in his city of refuge the depredator laughs at you and is safe from your law officers, and can exhibit your stolen property before your outraged face and you have no right to reclaim it and no remedy for your wrong except through the General Government.

The Government in pressurance of its extited realizer even that we have the control of the con

The Government, in pursuance of its settled policy, says that you shall not cross that line, nor shall your courts or their officers or your local laws. It says these people are the wards of the Government, and if you have any cause of complaint you must come to the Government of the United States, and it will arbitrate your differences and settle the measure of your damages.

Having no other recourse, and being forbidden to resort to any, the settler therefore comes to the Government of the United States to right his wrong and to obtain justice for the acts which have been committed by those whom the Government excludes from the operations of the local law, and for whom, as its own wards, it assumes tions of the local law, and for whom, as its own wards, it assumes the responsibility.

Grounded on these principles of justice, and for these reasons, a law was rightfully framed and passed, and for many, very many years stood on your statute-books, providing that in all cases of depredation committed by Indians, such depredations being duly proven, the Interior Department should award damages to the person trespassed against, and the amounts so awarded should be deducted from the amounts are not as a superson to the Indiana service and the Indiana service and the Indiana service and the Indiana service and Indiana se annuities paid by the Government to the Indians committing such depredations.

In 1871-72 there was a great revolution attempted in the Indian policy of this country, and a new policy was established, which has sometimes been denominated the peace policy. We were told at that time by certain eastern philanthropists that the time had come when we could dispense with the armies of the United States so far as the Indians were concerned and could govern these wild people by moral leading and the effects of missionaries selected by the charges and lectures and the efforts of missionaries selected by the churches of the country and appointed agents by the President. How wild was such a proposition as that—to attempt to govern savages by means that would not hold together the frame-work of civilized society! Take the city of New York or this city or any other city on the continent that has had the advantages of 4,000 years of civilization and 1,800 years of Christianity. Could you properly govern such a city and protect property and life if you were to dispense with the police and rely entirely upon the churches for that purpose? If such a proposition as that is an extravagant one when applied to a civilized people, how utterly absurd is it when applied to the savage people who are without training in civilization, without teaching in religion, and who have been taught from their earliest infancy that their highest ambition, their chief glory lay in the direction of becoming robbers, spoilers, and conquerors of every tribe and people but their own.

During the time that that wave of pseudo-philanthropy was washing out the common-sense ideas of this Congress and of the country, there was an unjust and unwise restriction placed upon the ancient statute. This new enactment provided that thereafter no Indian city of New York or this city or any other city on the continent that has there was an unjust and unwise restriction placed upon the ancient statute. This new enactment provided that thereafter no Indian depredation claim should be paid, although audited and adjudicated by the Indian Department, without an appropriation therefor made by the Congress of the United States. That provision, unjust and unwise as it was, virtually put a stop to the process of the adjustment of these claims which had been going on under the law ever since our Indian policy was inaugurated. The claims which have ever since been piling up in the Interior Department were then sent here to Congress, and the remedy which the people had before that time was taken away from them by the Government, and Congress, by non-action, has been saying that it would not pay these claims out of the Treasury, although it had repealed the law under which Indian depredations were paid out of their annuities.

redations were paid out of their annuities.

Now, observe the position in which that policy leaves the settler. See what a provocative it is to conflicts between the settlers and the Indians. Time and again I have known depredation claims presented which have gone to the Secretary of the Interior, been sent back to the Indian tribes, the Indians summoned to consider the matter, the proceedings being all against the settler, and finally an adjudication has been made and sent to the Interior Department, by which it was approved, and then it was sent here to Congress to be added to the hundreds of claims already here and unacted upon.

hundreds of claims already here and unacted upon.

A man has a herd of cattle or of horses, and the Indians come in and kill them or steal them. That man has no remedy, by law or otherwise. What, then, must he do, if you deny him a remedy in court or Congress? He is compelled to fall back on the right which every man has to defend his property. The result of that may be to bring on a war with the Indians, involving the Government in a tremendous expense. Sir, the time has come when this Congress should look at these facts and deal justly by these people. If men are denied redress, they will take means to redress themselves; this will bring on conflicts and destroy the peace which you are bound to preserve, and which you are spending so many millions to preserve, and it will involve you in expense far beyond that which is necessary to pay such claims as you justly owe the people who have been despoiled by your wards. Mr. HASKELL.

by your wards.

Mr. HASKELL. I would like to say a word or two in reference to this special claim. I agree, of course, largely with the remarks made by gentlemen who have spoken in favor of the payment of these claims. But I would like to have this particular claim understood, since it is the business immediately before this committee.

The Osage Indians were under treaty obligations with the Government to keep open through their territory a track along which Texas cattle could be driven to market; that is their agreement with the Government. In a general law of Congress, passed about the beginning of this century, and incorporated into every Indian treaty made since that time, there is a provision that white men, not trespassing upon Indian property or intruding upon Indian rights, shall be paid by the Indians themselves for any damages inflicted upon them by the Indians. the Indians.

This is a case in point. This man was not a trespasser, he was pro-

This is a case in point. This man was not a trespasser, he was protected by the treaty, was driving his cattle through the Indian country, when he was set upon by these Indians and robbed. They admit the robbery, and in pursuance of law a claim comes up to Congress for the payment, not out of the United States Treasury but out of the annuities of this tribe, for the damages inflicted by them.

The annuities of the Indians are sufficient for the payment of these claims. They have a million or two of dollars in their fund. They are able to pay this loss, which the law says they shall pay. That is all there is of the claim. The Osage Indians, having by their own treaty, which is the law of the land, agreed to pay claims of this kind, the justice of the claim being admitted, the Committee on Indian Affairs could of course do nothing else than decide that this claim ought to be paid. That is what this bill provides for.

Mr. GUNTER. It is intimated by the chairman of the Indian Committee [Mr. SCALES] that this claim and others of a similar character are founded upon the custom of Congress. I beg leave to differ with him in that regard. This claim is not founded upon custom or upon the past rulings or action of Congress, but it is founded upon treaty stipulations made between the particular tribe mentioned in the bill and the Government of the United States.

Mr. SCALES. I wish to correct my friend. I did not make any such statement as he mentions.

Mr. GUNTER. I thought the gentleman did. It was made by others.

Mr. SCALES. I spoke of the policy of the Government under

Mr. SCALES. I spoke of the policy of the Government under treaty.

Mr. GUNTER. Well, sir, it is not a policy. The payment of these claims is not founded upon policy or custom, but upon express treaty stipulation between the Government and the various Indian tribes. In every Indian treaty with which I am familiar, it is expressly stipulated upon the part of the Government of the United States that if any white man shall trespass or depredate upon the property of Indians, the Government shall, under certain circumstances mentioned, be responsible for reimbursement. It is stipulated on the part of the Indians that if any Indian shall depredate on the property of white men, under certain circumstances, the tribe shall be responsible to the extent of the depredation extent of the depredation.

Mr. HAYES. Right there I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Suppose that in case of depredations by Indians the Government does not owe the Indians any money, is the Government responsible?

Mr. GUNTER. No, sir; not at all. There is no obligation on the part of the Government to pay any depredation claim otherwise than to take it, under certain circumstances, out of the funds belonging to the tribe whose members have committed the depredation. That is all this bill propose

Now, one word in reply to remarks made by the chairman of the Indian Committee, [Mr. SCALES.] He states that the proof in regard to most of these claims is ex parte. That I will admit; but he must concede that the proof in this particular case, and in most of the others presented to us for consideration, is taken in strict compliance with the treaty stipulations between the Communication that United with the treaty stipulations between the Government of the United States and the tribe.

States and the tribe.

Now, there being in existence a law (for the treaty is a law) making it the duty of the Indians, or rather of the Government out of the Indian funds, to pay these depredation claims, the manner of taking proof having been prescribed by the law, and this depredation having been committed as shown by the proof taken in the case, how can Congress, if it acts in accordance with the treaty, decline to pay the claim? Either the treaty stipulations recognizing claims of this kind and providing the manner of taking proof must be abrogated, or else Congress is bound in accordance with the provisions of the treaty to pay these depredation claims. It is not a mere question of policy whether they shall be paid; the question is whether the Congress of the United States will enforce positive treaty stipulations made between the Government of the United States and the Indians. For one, so long as I am a member of Congress and a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I will do what I can to enforce strictly every treaty stipulation made between the Government and the Indians; and I believe it is the duty of every other member of Congress to do the same.

The particular case now under consideration is a depredation claim. The depredation has been committed in violation of the treaty. The proof taken in accordance with the treaty shows clearly that the Indians did commit the depredation. For one I shall vote to pay the claim. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken, the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The next business on the Frivate Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1047) for the relief of Henry Warren, reported by Mr. HASKELL from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HASKELL. Before the clerk occupies time in reading this bill, I wish to say that according to my recollection a Senate bill providing for the payment of this claim has already been passed by the House and the claim paid. Therefore I suggest that this House bill, while properly on the Calendar, had better be stricken from the Calendar, as the legislation proposed in the bill has been accomplished. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the fact to be as the gentleman states.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the fact to be as the gentleman states.

Mr. HASKELL. If I am correct, the bill should be passed over; but I would like the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Wellborn] to assume the responsibility of such a motion.

Mr. WELLBORN. The statement made by the gentleman from Kansas is correct. This bill should be stricken from the Calendar.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, having had under consideration bill II. R. No. 356, submit the following report, together with a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, bearing date of March 29, 1878, giving the history of the case as presented in this bill.

Your committee, however, beg leave to differ with the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs as to the justice of his conclusion, when he says that—

"It is safe to assume that the several tracts were in 1873 worth the full amount at which they were appraised, and that in view of the rapid development of the country and the present price of uncultivated lands in that vicinity there has at least been no depreciation of their value."

Your committee are of the opinion that there has been a marked depreciation in the value of western lands since 1873; that the appraised value of the lands under which they are made to average $5.02\frac{1}{2}$ per acre is much above the price at which unimproved lands in Kansas can now be purchased for, and that the price named in the bill. $3 per acre, is a fair and just valuation.

Your committee agree with the statement of the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs that "it is very desirable that adequate legislation be had insuring the sale of these lands and the final settlement of all questions in connection therewith," and therefore recommended the passage of the bill advised by the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs, changed only as to the price per acre that the occupants shall be obliged to pay.

Your committee further state that in their judgment the price that should be considered adequate for these lands should be that price the lands were worth when abandoned by the Indians nearly twenty years ago; that the act of Congress of 1873 provided for the patenting to the Indians then living upon the lands the selections they had made under treaty, and that those who were at that time living on the lands also signified their willingness to purchase at

Mr. SCALES. There is a minority report which I ask to be read.
Mr. HASKELL. Will the honorable gentleman instead of reading the entire letter, which is very long, merely state to the committee that the difference of opinion between the minority and the majority is upon the price per acre to be paid for the land?
Mr. SCALES. That is so.
Mr. HASKELL. The letter is so long it will take thirty minutes to read it, and that being the only point of difference, the question could be submitted to the committee intelligently without reading the entire letter the Scentary of the Interior having agreed to every

the entire letter, the Secretary of the Interior having agreed to every provision except the price per acre.

Mr. SCALES. I will answer the gentleman after the report has been read.

Mr. HASKELL. The report of the committee has been read, but the minority report is only about four lines in length, and then there is incorporated in it a long letter. Mr. SCALES. Read that part of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The minority recommend the passage of the original bill without amendment, except, in the thirtieth line, to insert "five "for "three" years; and to sustain them in these conclusions they herewith present the letters of the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which they have adopted as their report, and which they ask, with the accompanying papers, shall be printed.

Mr. SCALES. I will now hear what the gentleman has to say Mr. SCALES. I will now hear what the gentleman has to say.
Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, having reported the bill I have said in the report accompanying it substantially all that I can say now on the subject. Originally there was laid off for New York Indians in Kansas an immense reservation, lying, in the terms of the original grant, just west of the State line of Missouri. These Indians, however, refused to go upon the reservation with the exception of thirty-two heads of families. These thirty-two heads of families did move out there, but finding the other Indians would not follow, and the grant of their reservation being on the condition of their going out and living there, the whole reservation was receded to the Government with the exception of these thirty-two selections. Subsequently an act of Congress was passed almost precisely like this, providing for the sale of the land, and some of the thirty-two selections were bought by settlers and patented. The remaining portion, the were bought by settlers and patented. The remaining portion, the sale of which is provided for under this bill, the settlers have refused to purchase, because, in the first place, of the unfair appraisement of the land and the unjust discrimination exercised under that appraisement; and, in the second place, the high price at which it was appraised taking the lands as they ran. Only the lower-priced selections were sold under the provisions of the act, leaving the higher-priced ones to be provided for at this time. The bill is precisely as the Secretary of the Interior would have it, save that he wishes to retain the appraised valuation; but the committee desire to substitute in place of the appraisment, which in some instances was as high as $10 an acre, the price of $3 an acre as the maximum and uniform price.

I will say further that over twenty years ago all but a few Indians abandoned these several selections and returned to the State of New York or went to the Indian Territory. Strictly construed, all the Indians who abandoned these allotments forfeited their right under treaty stipulation. There was no good way to determine the matter in the courts. It was alleged by the friends of the Indians that the settlers upon the lands had crowded them out and induced them to return to New York almost by force. Waiving all legal quibbles as to title, the settlers agreed to pay the Indians two dollars and a half an acre in cash and secure their patents from the Government. That is the price fixed by Congress in the several acts for the sale of the diminished reserve of the Indians in our State. Portions of the Delawares, Shawnees, and several other reserves were sold at a uniform rate of two dollars and a half an acre. That is the double minimum, as it is called, of railroad selections; that is, that two dollars and a half is the price fixed for alternate sections which the Government reserves in railroad grants. That was considered a fair valuation for those lands twenty years ago, which was the time when these Indians left them and settlers were authorized to go upon them, and the price of $3 per acre, therefore, is fifty cents per acre more than such lands uniformly sold for in the entire State during the last fifteen years. Up to the present time it is entirely possible for men to buy or secure such lands in my State costing nothing but the occupation and purchase of railroad lands at the double minimum.

Now, the difficulty and danger of legislating in a matter of this sort becomes apparent when I inform the committee that settlers have been upon these lands for the last twenty years; that they have built good farm-houses and have made themselves comfortable homes, as comfortable as any in my State. To sell the land to any but the present occupants, therefore, at this time, would be to sell them out of twenty years of labor as well as the value of their improvements. And some arrangement must be reached so as to effect a compromise between the settlers and the Indians by which a mutual agreement can be arrived at for the benefit of both parties.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas if the settlers had any right to go upon these allotments in the first interest.

instance?

Mr. HASKELL. They had no technical right; but the way in which that came about was that they had a right to go upon the original reserve, and these selections were not known from the common lands or the prairie, and they settled upon them. In some instances an Indian would appear and claim his rights. But in most instances there was no improvement upon the land whatever and no mode of describing them and distinguishing them from the adjoining lands. Every Indian that staid on his land, every one that settled there and had his own homestead where he built his cabin, got his patent and sold at his own price, if he sold at all, the bill does not affect such. It was only those who had made no settlement upon not affect such. It was only those who had made no settlement upon the land and had no claim to occupancy who were affected.

Now, it is claimed by the friends of the Indians, and the Interior Department takes that view, that these settlers came in and crowded the Indians out. Be that as it may, that was twenty years ago, and the indians out. Be that as it may, that was twenty years ago, and the white men are now in peaceable possession of the land which they have improved and made valuable, and the Government ought to give them the opportunity to purchase in preference to others; although in point of fact originally they had no right to them.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Could they not have ascertained by application at the Department?

Mr. HASKELL. Year they could have found that the label.

Mr. HASKELL. Yes; they could have found that the lands had been set apart for the Indians, and they could have found in many cases claims that the allotments were fraudulent and that the Indian cases claims that the allotments were fraudulent and that the Indian in whose name the claim was made had never existed, or had never occupied the land or taken possession of it in any way.

I do not deny, for I desire to state to the committee fairly all the points in the case; I do not mean to deny, because I admit I do not know, that originally there might not have been unfairness and difficulties between the Indians and the whites in this matter. I am willing to assume that there was; but to-day, and for twenty years, they have been in peaceable occupation, in that State, of these lands, of which there are about twenty-five pieces. And it is now incumbent upon Congress to take some action in reference to them for the protection of the settlers. These lands embrace about nine thousand acres, some twenty-eight or thirty selections of three hundred and twenty acres each. twenty acres each.

Now, my predecessor in Congress, Mr. Stephen A. Cobb, of Wyandotte, was employed by the New York Indians as their attorney to try to fix up an agreement between the Indians and the settlers. He went down there and had a council of the Indians called, a meeting of the settlers, and then came to Congress, some two years ago, with a proposition or a joint agreement between the Indians and the settlers which sition or a joint agreement between the Indians and the settlers which placed the lands at a valuation of $2.50 an acre. This amount was satisfactory to both parties. But the Interior Department clung to the old appraisement. Now, we cannot sell the land at the old appraisement. It has been tried under two successive acts of Congress, and failed. The settlers cannot buy them at that price, and if the Government intend by the provisions of this bill to sell them out, why you simply sell them. simply rob them.

Now, having that agreement between the Indians and the settlers that they are willing to take $2.50 an acre, it was deemed by the committee that to fix a uniform price at $3 would make no great sacrifice of the Indian interests and secure a satisfactory sale of the lands, the average price of the appraisement being only about five dollars. But the inequalities of the appraisement were such that it was deemed by the committee that $3 would be a fair and satisfactory average.

The amount of the appraisement was fixed by a commission sent out by the Secretary of the Interior, and every western man knows how much reliance is to be placed upon such estimates. In nine cases out of ten they are crude specimens of attempts at fixing land values.

The only question now between the honorable chairman of the committee, who dissents from the committee report, and myself, with the majority of the committee, is with reference to the price of the lands, and the question before the committee is in reference to striking out the amount proposed by the committee and inserting the appraisement of the Department of the Interior; which I hope will not be done. I am satisfied that these lands cannot be sold at all if that amendment

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the committee for a few moments while I make a brief statement as to the difference between the gentleman from Kansas and myself of the minority of the committee on this question. This is a question in which the Indians are solely interested, and I think this House has now an opportunity of making a record for or against them. They must say whether they intend that the Indians shall have justice done to them or are to be sacrificed to the interest of settlers. It is a part of the history of the Indians that they have been driven from one State to another and from one Territory to another until they have left the Atlantic shores, have crossed the Mississippi and are approaching every year nearer and nearer to the Pacific Ocean. The Indian has come in contact with the settler and the Indian has given place and sought out other homes, to be driven out again when the lands were again wanted by the whites wanted by the whites.

It is true, sir, that the best lands have been taken away from them. It is true, sir, that the game upon which they relied heretofore to support them has become so scarce that they can rely no longer upon it for a support. It is true that the land upon which they are forced to settle in many instances are barren and undesirable, not suitable to agriculture, and much of it not suitable for pasture; and when they are thus forced to leave and sell their lands I think this Government, whatever else it may do, ought to see to it that the solemn treaties of the Government in regard to the proceeds of their lands ought to be observed.

Now the treaty with these New York Indians was that they should have the proceeds of their lands—what proceeds? Whatever their lands would bring—put in the market, sold at public auction. The bill provided for that. The gentleman from Kansas is not satisfied with that and insists that the land should be sold at $3 per acre; $2 per acre less than they have been appraised at by fair men sent out by the Government for that purpose. Now, Mr. Chairman, these settlers have been on these identical lands for nearly twenty years; they have cultivated and used them for all that time in violation of the law and the rights of the Indian.

the rights of the Indian.

These Indians, who the Secretary of the Interior and the Committee on Indian Affairs say have been driven by the hostility of the whites from these lands, have never had one dollar of rent or one dollar of interest for the whole twenty years. The settler has had the land, has enjoyed it, and enjoyed it too without paying one cent to the Indian for its use and to the Government in way of taxes. They entered upon it wrongfully, they held it unjustly for twenty years, and now seek to perfect their titles at their own price, and ask the Government to become a party to such wrong, to such injustice. In the mean time the Government has been very tender of the rights and wishes of these settlers. They have been indulged for years; they have been allowed for the last seven years, in preference to all others, to enter these lands at the appraised value. The Government, in tender consideration of the interests of these settlers, and in order that they might suffer no injustice and at the same time enable them to These Indians, who the Secretary of the Interior and the Committhey might suffer no injustice and at the same time enable them to obtain the lands and get a fee-simple, sent out a commission of good and impartial men to appraise the lands in 1873. The commission did appraise them at $5 per acre, and they were offered to settlers at their appraise them at $5 per acre, and they were onered to settlers at their appraised value. They refused to take them. They have been offered again and again from that time to the present, and the settlers still refused, insisting that they, and not the commission, should estimate the value. The naked lands were valued without the improvements, and they will not abide by it. The last Indian has been driven from that portion of Kansas by the settler, the law of the Government put at defiance, and the lands are still held and wickedly used by them; these settlers still say to the Government (it he seem is a proper to the description of the settlers of the Government of the settlers are the settlers of the Government of the settlers of the settlers of the Government of the settlers of the settlers of the Government of the settlers of the se inance, and the lands are still held and wickedly used by them; these settlers still say to the Government "the commission you sent out did not understand their business; I will not regard their valuation; I will give you $3 per acre and no more, and in the mean time I shall hold it." Shall we submit to it? This is opposed by the Secretary of the Interior, opposed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and opposed by the minority of the Indian Committee.

My friend from Kansas says that the lands have fallen in value since 1873. Will they not bring $5. Then here is a provision to which I call the attention of gentlemen:

which I call the attention of gentlemen:

That any lands not entered by such settlers at the expiration of one year from a passage of this act shall be offered at public sale.

Mr. HASKELL. Yes; but the honorable gentleman from North Carolina will remember it is pretty hard to offer at public sale to the public a man's farm he has lived on for twenty years—there being on some of those farms fine houses and valuable improvements-because he cannot raise the money to pay an exorbitant and unjust price. You turn the man off and offer the home he has lived in for twenty years to the public unless he enters the land at the value of the land now.

Mr. SCALES. Then he pleads, Mr. Chairman, his own wrong as an excuse for not putting up these lands at public auction, that they may bring what they are worth. As I said before, every indulgence has been extended to these settlers for years. They have enjoyed the lands almost for generations. That of itself would pay for every improvement upon them. This was the reason the lands were approximately in the second sec praised as if without improvements, that exact justice might be done; but force seized and held them, and the same spirit prompts them to withhold a fair price. If this were a question between white men it would be settled without hesitation. But unfortunately it is a question between Indians and white men; Indians to the number of thirty-two and a great and rising State. We, the minority of the committee, ask that they shall take the lands at what gentlemen in every way competent who went there for that purpose said they were worth without improvements. We ask them to take the lands at what the Secretary of the Interior, who has knowledge of the facts, says they are worth. We ask them to take the lands at what your Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who has examined the whole question and speaks with confidence on the subject, says they are worth; and if they are not satisfied to take them at that, we then ask that they be put up to the highest bidder and give all a chance at them. The settler shall have the refusal at a fair valuation, and if he will

The settler shall have the refusal at a lair valuation, and if he will not accept, then all may come in.

I care not how small the number, I care not how insignificant the amount of the land, the question is as to the precedent, whether this House shall do justice to these Indians.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. SCALES. Yes, sir.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. I want to state to the gentleman from North Carolina that if it were a controversy between white men in North Carolina that if it were a controversy between white men in my State, if one white man had gone on a farm and put good buildings upon it and made it valuable by reason of improvements, holding by some color of right, before he could be ejected from those premises the other party would be required to pay him for all his improvements. Now, if I understand the theory of the gentleman from North Carolina, his policy would subject all these improvements to be sold away from the settler.

Mr. SCALES. These settlers have never had even color of title, they were mere squatters; they knew they had no title, and that these lands belonged to the Indians and were not subject to entry. The Government has under a treaty guaranteed to these Indians their

The Government has under a treaty guaranteed to these Indians their lands, or the proceeds, and if they now give it to the settlers at a less price than the commission has said it is worth the Government should make up the difference.

Mr. HASKELL. If they staid on them.

Mr. SCALES. Yes, and thirty-two did stay on them until they were driven off. That is what the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs tell us. They say they were absolutely driven by these settlers from this land. They could not hold it, and, if they could not hold it, I ask if it is not the high and solemn duty of this Government to see that they get every dollar it is worth. The Government is bound to this by every consideration of justice and

Mr. HASKELL. Six or eight of them did stay there and got titles to land; so that they were not all driven off.

Mr. SCALES. I only take the statement of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. If we are going to guarantee to these Indians what these lands are worth, how can we do it except by having them appraised? And if they cannot be sold at the appraised value, then have them put up for sale in open market. That will be no injustice to the settlers, because if they will not take them at the appraised value, and they have the refusal, then it is some evidence that they will sell in open market for less than the appraised value, and the settler still has a chance.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I understand from what has been said by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] that these lands, at the time the settlers went upon them, were worth at least $2.50 per acre. If so, then, calculating the interest at the rate of 6 per cent, they would be worth at the present time $5.50 per acre. I understand those gentlemen to state that during that time the Indians received no benefit from these lands-Mr. SCALES. None at all.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Either in the way of interest or as an invest-ment, or for the use of the property. I understand also the fact to be that the Government has received no taxes from these lands durg the last twenty years.

Mr. SCALES. The Government has received no taxes for that time.

Mr. PRESCOTT. Then the settlers have had the benefit of these

Mr. SCALES. Without taxes and without rent, and all that is asked of them now is to take the land at its appraised value, leaving the improvements, if any, out.

Mr. PRESCOTT. They have had not only the benefit of the interest on the investment and the use of the property, but of all the taxes that would have accrued for the whole twenty years.

Mr. SCALES. Yes, sir.

Mr. HASKELL. The whole question, however, is one of title.

Mr. SCALES. I see that the members of the committee are impatient, and I do not wish to detain them. I think, however, it is proper that the statement of the Secretary of the Interior and the statement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs should be read; it may take fifteen or twenty minutes to read them, but I want the House to understand the facts as presented by them. If after hearing those statements read members shall think the price of the land ought

Mr. SCALES. There is a great deal in those letters which members ought to hear.

Mr. HASKELL. Will not the gentleman himself admit that the letter itself advocates the passage of this bill, with the exception of Mr. SCALES. Then let the letters be read as bearing on the price. I insist that they be read.

Washington, D. C., April 8, 1378.

Sir: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the information of the Committee on Public Lands, a copy of a report, dated the 3d instant, from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs upon the subject of proposed legislation to certain Indian lands in the State of Kansas, as indicated in the bill (H. R. No. 1177) to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas.

This report is made on a reference by the above-named committee of the bill in question to the Commissioner for his consideration and opinion on the 6th February last.

On the 18th of January last Hon. D. C. Haskell, of the House of Representatives, presented a corrected copy of bill H. R. No. 1177 to this Department for its consideration, and I transmit herewith a copy of the letter of reply, dated the 6th instant.

The objections of the Commissioner to the legislation proposed, and his views in relation to the matters presented in the bill, have the full concurrence of the Department, and the papers are respectfully presented for the consideration of the committee.

Washington, D. C., April 6, 1878.

Sign: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the sit January last, transmitting, for the consideration of the Department, bill H. R. No. 1177, entitled "A bill for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kanasa."

The first section of the bill in question emacts that "those persons being heads of families or single post of the bill in question emacts that "those persons being heads of families or single post of the bill in question emacts that "those persons being heads of families or single post of the bill in question emacts that "those persons being heads of families or single post of the bill in question emacts that "those persons being heads of families or single person or by toenat, the lands in Kanasa which were allotted to certain New York Indians, and for which certificates of allotment, dated the 14th day of September, 1890, Indians, shall be, and bereby are, anthorized and permitted to enter and procedure, one hundred and sixty acres, according to the Government surveys, on a patents shall issue therefor as in other cases."

By art those of the treaty of January 15, 1838, with the New York Indians, then residing in the State of New York, or in Wisconsin, or classwhere in the United States, who have no permanent homes, a tract of land situated directly west of the State of Missouri, cottaining 1,894,000 acres; being three hundred and twenty acres for each soul of add Indians, as their numbers are at present computed. Said lands were to be patented in fee-simple to the tribes or bands by patent from the President of the United States, in conformity with the provisions of the third section of the not of May 98, 1839. (4 Stat, 411.)

The United States, in conformity with the provisions of the third section of the not of May 98, 1839. (4 Stat, 411.)

The United States further agreed to set aside the sum of $400,000 as a fund to provide for the removal of the New York Indians to the lands mentioned; which agreement allottees were to be found upon the lands. The files of the Indian Office show abundant proof that they did not voluntarily relinquish their occupation.

Be this question as it may, the act of February 19, 1873, fully recognized the right of the Indians or of their heirs to the proceeds of the lands; and applications are now before the Department, which, when perfected, will call by legal representation for nearly all of the proceeds of the allotments of lands in question.

By the act of February 19, 1873, provision was made for the benefit of certain settlers upon and occupants of certain Indian lands in Kansas, permitting such settlers upon and occupants of certain Indian lands in Kansas, permitting such settlers to enter and purchase at the proper land office said lands so occupied by them, in tracts not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, according to the Government surveys, on paying therefor in lawful money of the United States the appraised value of said lands respectively, to be ascertained by three disinterested and competent appraisers, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, who shall examine in person each tract and report under oath its value, exclusive of all improvements; and patents shall issue therefor as in other cases, but no sale shall be made under this act for less than $3.75 per acre.

All entries under this act were required to be made within two years from the promulgation of the necessary regulations for the sale of the lands. This act was amended by the act of June 23, 1874 (18 Stat., 273,) extending the time in which payments for said lands were to have been made.

Some of the parties, settlers upon these lands, have paid in full, and upon all of the lands valuable improvements have been made.

Some of the parties, settlers upon these lands, have paid in full, and upon all of the lands valuable improvements have been made.

Some of the parties, settlers upon these lands, have paid in full, and upon all of the lands valuable improvements have been made.

Some of the parti sequently outsted from the possession of such lands by the encroachments of the settlers.

In this view of the case, and in view of the fact that treaty stipulations and legal enactments have secured to such of these allottees or their heirs as may now be living, the benefits of the proceeds of these allottees or their heirs as may now be living, the benefits of the proceeds of these lands and applications are now on file before the Indian Office for nearly all the proceeds of the claims covered by the thirty-two allottnents. I am not prepared to entertain the proposition contained in the bill presented, or to recommend to Congress, after consideration of the liberality already extended by the Government to these settlers, any action looking toward a reduction of the sum which seems so justly due to the Indians.

The true test of the value of the lands in question would be their price in open market at a cash sale, and it is believed that if they were so offered the question of payment would be speedily settled.

I am, however, disinclined to advocate any measure which would seem to bear harshly upon the settlers, and have therefore concluded to recommend further time for payment with the distinct understanding, on the part of those in possession of the lands, that payment on the terms fixed must be promptly made, to avoid forfeiture.

Very respectfully,

C. SCHURZ, Secretary.

Washington, March 29, 1878.

Sir: I am in receipt, by reference from the House Committee on Public Lands, of bill H. R. 1177, providing for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas, and requesting the views of this office on the same.

I am also in receipt, by your reference for report, of a letter from Hon. D. C.
Haskell, dated January 18, 1878, inclosing a copy of the same bill, and requesting the views of this office thereon.

In connection therewith I have the honor to report that, by the second article of the treaty of January 15, 1833, with the New York Indians, (78tat., 559,) the United States agreed to set aside for the New York Indians, (78tat., 559,) the United States agreed to set aside for the New York Indians, then residing in Wisconsin revert to the United States if the Indians become extinct or abandon the same."

The treaty vested the Indians with full power and authority to divide said lands, in severality, among the different tribes and bands, and to sell and convey the same among each other, under such regulations as they might adopt. Indians not accepting and agreeing to remove within five years, or such other time as the Fresident may from time to time appoint, to "forfeit all interest" in "the lands so set apart to the United States."

In pursuance of these instructions, as it appears from a letter of the honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated July 3, 1877, the following sales have been made:

First. N. ½ section 26, 23 S., 25 E., allotted to Joseph Johndroe, there has been sold, at $5 per acre, cash, to Benjamin Brown, the NE. ½ of said section; consideration, $800.

Second. From N. ½ section 27, 23 S., 25 E., allotted to Margaret Johndroe, there has been sold, at $5 per acre, cash, to Nathaniel Oates, the S. ½, NE. ½; consideration. $400.

tion, $400.

Third. From the S. ½ of said section 27, allotted to Michael Gray, there has been sold, at $4.50 per acre, cash, to Nathaniel Oates, the N. ½ of SE. ½; consideration, sold, at $4.50 per acre, cash, to Nathaniel Oaces, the N. ½ of Scrimpsher, there has been sold at $4.75 per acre, cash, to S. McEwing, the N. ½ of SW. ½; consideration, $390.

Fifth. From N. ½ section 27, 23 S., 25 E., allotted to Margaret Johndroe, there has been sold, at $5 per acre, cash, to William M. Beckford, the N. ½ NE. ½, and at $4.50 per acre, to the same party, the N. ½ SW. ½ of said section; consideration, $760.

$760. Sixth. From the same allotment, there has been sold, at $4.50 per acre, and paid in full, in two installments, with $10.77 interest, to John Barrett the S. ½ NW. ½; consideration, including interest, $370.77.

Seventh. From the W. fractional ½ section 2, 24 S., 25 E., allotted to Joseph Fox, there has been sold, at $5 per acre, and paid in full, in two installments, with $23.80 interest, to Joanna Glendenning the NW. fractional ½, containing 156.76 acres; consideration, with interest, $822.60.

Eighth. And from the E. fractional ½ section 6, 24 S., 25 E., allotted to Mary Predome, there have been sold, at $6 per acre, to Levi T. Call, the W. ½ of SE. ½ of said section, amounting to $480, one-half of which was paid at date of purchase, September 29, 1875, and the balance with interest is still due and unpaid.

There has therefore, out of an aggregate of 10, 215.63 acres, valued at $45,91.25, or an average of $5.02½ per acre, which aggregate amount would, according to the terms of the act of February 19, 1873, if not claimed by the allottees or their heirs, inure to the United States at the end of five years, which have expired.

tees or their heirs, indice to the expired.

The bill under consideration proposes to reduce the aggregate value of the unsold lands over one-half, or to $23,339.68, and if the lands are not sold at the diminished rate of $2.50 per acre within one year that patents shall issue in the names of the original allottees for the balance unsold.

With these provisions of the bill I am not inclined to concur for the following reasons:

reasons:

Under the treaty of 1838 the New York Indians were entitled to 1.824,000 acres of land in Kansas and a removal fund of $400,000, which the United States never provided. Notwithstanding the failure of the United States in this regard, portions of the Indians removed to Kansas subsequent to the treaty, with a view of making that country their permanent home, but on account of their rapid depletion in number from sickness a majority afterward returned to New York.

By decision of April 19, 1858, the honorable Secretary of the Interior held that those of the New York Indians who had not removed had thereby forfeited their title to the reserve, and that the same should be opened to settlement, but in the execution of said decision, and prior to the proclamation of December, 1860, opening the lands to settlement, the allotments under consideration were made to the thirty-two Indians who were then in Kansas, and certificates were issued to them therefor.

thirty-two Indians who were then in Kansas, and certificates were issued to them therefor.

It follows, therefore, that an equitable interest in fee in the lands vested in these Indians by virtue of the grant contained in the treaty at the date of their removal and long prior to the settlement of Kansas, although the evidence of title did not issue until 1860.

They accordingly assumed the condition of legal ownership by purchase over the lands subsequently allotted to them at an early day, and are entitled to the benefits of any appreciation of value arising from the settlement and improvement of the country.

This doctrine is, I am aware, in opposition to a somewhat prevalent opinion as to the right of the Indians. It has been urged in similar cases that as the Indians have not improved their lands they are not entitled to the advance in value incident to the sottlement of the country. The purchase of wild lands and holding of the same to await the improvement of the country has been one of the most popular and safe as well as the most remunerative methods of investment known, and I can see no grounds upon which Indians taking an equitable title in feeshould be deprived of the benefits never denied to white purchasers of public lands bought and held for speculative purposes only.

Informal claims have been filed in this office by the original allottees, or their heirs, covering nearly all the proceeds arising from the sale of these lands when sold.

There is no evidence on file in this office, aside from the letters of Mr. Haskell.

Informal claims have been filed in this office by the original allottees, or their heirs, covering nearly all the proceeds arising from the sale of these lands when sold.

There is no evidence on file in this office, aside from the letters of Mr. HASKELL, showing that it is the desire of these Indians that the lands should be sold at a reduced price.

The lands are in Bourbon County, one of the richest and most fertile counties in the State. They are within a few miles of Fort Scott, and near the line of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad—the Missouri River, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad running nearly through the center of the body of lands, which lie in close proximity to the corner of townships 23 and 24 in ranges 24 and 25 east. The records of the General Land Office show that there is scarcely a vacant forty-acre tract of land in or near the townships named. With these facts in view, it is safe to assume that the several tracts were, in 1873, worth the full amount at which they were appraised, and that, in view of the rapid development of the country, and the present price of meultivated lands in that vicinity, there has, at least, been no depreciation of their value.

The settlers have been in possession of these lands for years, to the exclusion of the Indians, and have had every advantage and opportunity to pay for the lands from the products of the same.

The title of the Indians is, under treaty stipulations, similar to those with the Shawnee, Miami, and other Indians in Kansas, whose lands have been held by the Supreme Court of the United States (5 Wall., 737) to be excluded from the jurisdiction of the State, and not subject to taxation, and it is fairly presumable that the settlers have availed themselves of the benefit arising under this decision.

For these and other reasons which might be urged, I cannot recommend the passage of the bill in its present form. It is, however, very desirable that deequate legislation be had insuring the sale of these lands and the final settlement of all questi moneys arising from such sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States in trust for and to be paid to said Indians, respectively, to whom said certificates were issued, or to their heirs, upon satisfactory proof of their identity to the Secretary of the Interior, at any time within three years from the passage of this act; and in case such proof is not made within the time specified, then the provesions of such sale, or so much thereof as shall not have been paid under the provisions of this act, shall become a part of the public moneys of the United States.

"SEC. 2. That any lands not entered by such settlers at the expiration of one year from the passage of this act shall be offered at public sale, in the usual manner, at not less than the appraised value, notice of said sale to be given by public advertisement of not less than thirty days; and any tract or tracts not then sold together with such tracts as have heretofore been or may hereafter be entered, and wherein default has been made in the payment of any portion of the purchase-money or the interest thereon, as herein or heretofore provided, shall be thereafter subject to private entry at the appraised value of said tracts."

I inclose herewith a schedule showing the names of the thirty-two allottees named in this report, the description of the lands allotted to each, with the names of the settlers claiming the lands placed opposite the tract claimed by them.

The bill referred by the House committee, together with the letter of Mr. Has-KELL, with inclosure, is herewith respectfully returned.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. A. HAYT,

Commissioner.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. HASKELL. Just one word. This letter of the Secretary of the Interior was written in response to a bill originally submitted by myself. That bill I threw aside, and accepted the one in the letter with everything in it except the price of the land. I want that to be understood, so that the allusion of the Secretary to the terms of a bill not now before the House may be comprehended.

Mr. SCALES. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommended the passage of a bill which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. That committee has reported the bill back recommending an amendment to it, and I hope the amendment will be voted down. I desire again to call the attention of this Committee of the Whole to what the Commissioner of tion of this Committee of the Whole to what the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says in reference to these lands:

The lands are in Bourbon County, one of the richest and most fertile counties in the State. They are within a few miles of Fort Scott, and near the line of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad—the Missouri River, Fort Scott, and Gulf Railroad running nearly through the center of the body of the lands, which lie in close proximity to the corner of townships 23 and 24 in ranges 24 and 25 east. The records of the General Land Office show that there is scarcely a vacant forty-acre tract of land in or near the townships named. With these facts in view, it is safe to assume that the several tracts were, in 1873, worth the full amount at which they were appraised, and that, in view of the rapid development of the country, and the present price of uncultivated lands in that vicinity, there has, at least, been no depreciation in their value.

These are the reasons given by the Commissioner why the land should bring their appraised value. That is all I ask in justice to the Indians. The amendment to the bill is to reduce the price below the appraised value nearly one-half, and this amendment is opposed by the Department and a minority of the committee as unjust and criminally wrong to the Indians. Let them have it at what good men say it is worth; no more and no less

Mr. BLAND. I do not desire this bill to pass without entering my protest against what appears to have been the policy of the Government heretofore and what may continue to be its policy in the future. In the first place, the lands of the Western States and Territories have been granted in large quantities to railroad corporations. In the second place, the effort has been made to remove all the Indians from the older States and locate them in the Western States and Territories, thus hampering the entering of leads in that part of the ritories, thus hampering the entering of lands in that part of the

What are the facts in this case? Here is land which was granted to these Indians. It is proposed now to tax these settlers to the extent of the price for which the lands might have been sold years ago, and of the price for which the lands might have been sold years ago, and interest on that price, and also for the improvements made by the settlers themselves on those lands.

Now, what benefit would these lands have been to the Indians had they remained upon them until this day? They probably would have made no improvements upon the lands; they would have paid no taxes upon them; they would have realized not a cent of benefit from them, and would have been in no better condition than they are now

The idea of this whole bill, and of the Secretary of the Interior, seems to be to compel these settlers, who have made improvements on these lands and made them valuable, to pay the Indians something for the enhanced value which has been created by the improvements of the settlers and not of the Indians.

ments of the settlers and not of the Indians.

It is an injustice to the settler to compel him to pay the enhanced value of lands which have been made valuable by the enterprise of the white people who have gone West and established homes where the lands, if the Indians had been left to occupy them, would not to-day be worth fifty cents an acre. I say that the policy of the Government granting away the public lands to the Indians and thus hampering their settlement is not in the interest of the people of this nation. I protest against it. These lands, if the Indians had been permitted to occupy them till now, would have been worthless. Now you propose to sell the lands and give the Indians the proceeds thereof, as enhanced by the labor of the white settler.

Mr. SCALES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question? Are not these Indian lands?

Mr. BLAND. I care nothing as to that. I understand that they

Mr. BLAND. I care nothing as to that. I understand that they are now open for settlement.

Mr. SCALES. Were they not Indian lands?

Mr. BLAND. I will grant that they were Indian lands.
Mr. SCALES. And did not the Government guarantee to the Indians the proceeds of these lands?
Mr. BLAND. But the Government is trying to derive proceeds from lands that do not justly belong to the Indians.
Mr. SCALES. Had the settler any right to be on these lands?
Mr. BLAND. If not, put him off.
Mr. SCALES. He wants to stay on, and complains because we will not allow him to do so.

not allow him to do so.

Mr. BLAND. Where is the justice of compelling the settler to pay the enhanced value of the land when it has been made valuable by the settler himself or by the white people generally, not by the Indian?

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows: In lines 15 to 20 of section 1, strike out "the appraised value of the said tracts, as heretofore ascertained by the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with the provisions of the act of February 19, 1873, entitled 'An act to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas," and insert "$5 per acre."

In line 4, of section 2, strike out "the appraised value," and insert "$3 per acre."

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 9, noes 30.

Mr. HASKELL. I think the Committee of the Whole did not understand what they were voting on. I will ask for tellers.

Mr. SCALES. I think the question was misunderstood.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HASKELL and Mr. SCALES were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 36. So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. SCALES. I give notice that in the House I shall ask a vote by yeas and nays on this question.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

CARLILE BOYD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3477) for the relief of Carlile Boyd, reported by Mr. Le Fevre from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Carille Boyd, lately captain of the Seventeenth United States Infantry, and brevet lieutenant-colonel of the United States Army, having been wholly retired from the Army on the 22d day of March, 1579, and having been disabled by wounds received in battle while in the military service of the United States, be, and he is hereby, restored to the rank in the Army which he held at the time of said retirement, with instructions to the Secretary of War to place him on the retired list of the Army with the rank of captain, and without regard to the limit as to numbers heretofore fixed by law for said retired list, and that he shall receive the pay of a retired officer of his rank and length of service from and after the 22d day of March, 1880.

The report was read, as follows:

receive the pay of a retired officer of his rank and length of service from and after the 22d day of March, 1880.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3477) for the relief of Captain Carlile Boyd, having carefully considered the same, respectfully submit the following report:

Carlile Boyd entered the military service of the United States as second lieutenant, Fifth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, May 9, 1861; was promoted to be major of that regiment January 1, 1863, and was mustered out at expiration of term of service May 14, 1863; was appointed major Veteran Reserve Corps September 17, 1863, and lieutenant-colonel Veteran Reserve Corps September 29, 1863, and honorably mustered out June 30, 1866; was appointed captain Forty-fourth United States Infantry July 28, 1865, and brevetted major and lieutenant-colonel United States Army March 2, 1867, for gallant and meritorious conduct at the battles of Gaines's Mill and Groveton, Virginia; he was transferred to the Seventh United States Infantry May 27, 1869, in which regiment he served until wholly retired March 28, 1879. Captain Boyd was ordered before a retiring board in February, 1879, at which time he had been absent from his regiment sick for about four years. The Board reported that he was incapacitated for active service on account of anxemia and lung disease, which report, with the proceedings, were forwarded to the War Department, and subsequently returned with instructions to the board to investigate a charge of intemperance made against Captain Boyd by an inspecting officer in Dakots Territory in May, 1877, at which time Captain Boyd an inspecting officer in Dakots Territory in May, 1877, at which time Captain Boyd was wind the proceedings before the committee and had been at his home sick and under medical treatment for the disease of his throat and lungs for more than two years. The board reconvened in March, 1879, and again examined Captain Boyd's case, especially with ment, and recommend its passage.

A bill for the relief of Carlile Boyd.

Be it enacted, &c., That Carlile Boyd, lately captain of the Seventeenth Regiment United States Infantry, and brevet lieutenant-colonel of the United States Army, having been wholly retired from the Army on the 22d day of March, 1879, and having been disabled by wounds received in battle while in the military service of the United States, be, and he is hereby, restored to the rank in the Army which he held at the time of said retirement, with instructions to the Secretary of War to place him on the retired list of the Army with said rank and without regard to the limit as to numbers heretofore fixed by law for said retired list, and that he shall receive the pay of a retired officer of his rank and length of service from and after the 22d day of March, 1880.

Mr. McCOOK. Mr. Chairman, I hope and believe that there will be no opposition to this bill; but I wish to suggest a verbal amend-ment. The bill provides that the Secretary of War shall place Capment. The bill provides that the Secretary of War shall place Captain Boyd on the retired list. I think that the bill should name the President of the United States instead of the Secretary of War.

Mr. McMILLIN, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question. Does not this bill virtually enlarge the retired list, or may it not do so?

Mr. McCOOK. I am unable to answer that question with absolute accuracy. My impression is that the retired list is not altogether full—that there are some vacancies.

Mr. McMILLIN. Why, then, does the bill provide that this officer shall be placed upon the retired list without regard to the number authorized by law to be retired?

Mr. McCOOK. I suppose the object is to cover that exact point, so that in the event of there being already four hundred (which I think is the legal limit) on the retired list, this gentleman may still be retired.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then the bill may increase the retired list beyond the present legal limit, which, I think, ought not to be done.

Mr. McCOOK. At any rate I think the verbal amendment I have

Mr. McCOOK. At any rate I think the verbal amendment I have suggested should be made.

Mr. LE FEVRE. Thave no objection to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. McCook.]

Mr. McCOOK. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. SPARKS] will suggest a suitable form for the amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. I move to amend the bill by striking out, in lines 10 and 11, the words "with instructions to the Secretary of War" and inserting "that the President of the United States be authorized."

The amendment was agreed to. The bill, as amended, was laid aside to be reported favorably to the

DAVID W. STOCKSTILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 554) for the relief of David W. Stockstill.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas on the 27th day of September, 1864, one Henry I. Stockstill, of Shelby County, Ohio, was drafted into the service of the United States; and Whereas on the 19th day of December, 1864, one David W. Stockstill, a brother of said Henry I. Stockstill, of the same county and State, procured a substitute named Frank Schooly to serve in place of said Henry I. Stockstill, to whom he paid the sum of $700; and

Whereas said substitute, Frank Schooly, was mustered into the service of the United States and honorably served the Government until discharged; and Whereas the said Henry I. Stockstill was not discharged by reason of having furnished said substitute, but was required to serve out the time for which he was drafted: Therefore,

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 554) for the relief of David W. Stockstill, of Sidney, Ohio, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

That on the 27th day of September, 1864, Henry I. Stockstill, of Shelby County, Ohio, was drafted into the service of the United States and assigned to duty in Company D. Fifty-first Regiment Ohio Volunteers. On the 19th day of December, 1864, David W. Stockstill, brother of said Henry I. Stockstill, of the same county and State, paid $700 for Frank Schooly, as a substitute, who was also mustered into service in Company E, Thirty-ninth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and who served during the war. The fact that this substitute was procured was reported to Colonel Wood, commanding said regiment, who refused to discharge said Henry I. Stockstill—the orders of General Thomas forbidding any such release. Both soldiers served during the war, and David W. Stockstill asks that the $700 paid for the substitute be refunded to him. This seems but reasonable and just, and your committee would make a favorable report in the case. The committee would add that the Military Committee, Forty-third Congress, investigated this case, made a favorable report, and recommended the passage of a bill affording the relief asked, which was reported back to the House, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, but was not reached for want of time. Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. HAYES. This seems to be a very peculiar bill. I would like

Mr. HAYES. This seems to be a very peculiar bill. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE FEVRE] who has charge of to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Le Fevre] who has charge of it whether the report in this case is unanimous.

Mr. Le Fevre. I will say to the gentleman that this is a unanimous report. I will say further that the bill passed this House two or three times without any opposition. It also passed the Senate in the last Congress, and it only failed by a few seconds to receive the signature of the President. It passed this House times; it passed the Senate at the last Congress, and only failed to become a law because of lack of time in which to receive the signature of the President. Mr. Stockstill served to the close of the war and his sub-President. Mr. Stockstill served to the close of the war and his substitute also served to the close of the war. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on War Claims had under consideration a number of bills for the relief of persons simi-larly situated to the claimant in this case, and that committee unanimously reported against the consideration of that class of claimants under the impression that if the door were opened for such claimants Congress would be flooded with them, and the result would be to create a drain upon the Treasury which could not be justified in view of the facts. There are a great many persons who employed substitutes in the late war and who served themselves. There are others who paid commutation money and subsequently concluded to enter the service themselves. In view of all the facts, I believe it would be a dangerous and bad precedent to pass a bill of this character and so open the door for the great number of similar cases which will be presented. Therefore, without knowing anything about the particular merits of this case, I shall be obliged to vote against this bill although the claimant may be meritorious. I do not know he is, but I know there are many others equally meritorious whose claims would be entitled to consideration if this is suffered to pass.

Mr. LE FEVRE. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania understood be entitled to consideration if this is suffered to pass.

Mr. LE FEVRE. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania understood this bill, I am sure he would not make any objection to it. Mr. Stockstill was drafted into the service, and gave notice to the provost-marshal that in a day or two he would procure a substitute. He had a large family, and it was not convenient for him to go into the service. This was before the battle of Franklin, and when General Thomas is a standard and when General Thomas was in need of soldiers, and when he dispatched orders to all recruiting officers to forward all recruits on hand at once. Mr. Stockstill was forwarded and assigned to a regiment before the battle of Frankwas forwarded and assigned to a regiment before the battle of Franklin. His substitute was procured and reported to the provost-marshal at Urbana a day or two after Mr. Stockstill was sent to the front. He also was assigned to a regiment, and served to the close of the war. He not only served the remainder of his term, but furnished a substitute also. He had a large family, and could ill afford to leave himself; but he not only served to the close of the war himself, but furnished a substitute, for whom he paid $700, who also served to the close of the war. I think if the gentleman from Pennsylvania would look at the facts in the case he would withdraw his objection. I do not believe there is a similar case in the whole history of the war.

Mr. DIBRELLL. The gentleman from Ohio has stated the facts in this case correctly. It was referred to me as a sub-committee in the Forty-fifth Congress and I investigated it thoroughly. Mr. Stockstill hired a substitute to whom he paid $700, and both he and the substi-hired a substitute to whom he paid $700, and both he and the substitute served to the close of the war. I think it is as just and clear a claim against the Government of the United States as any ever presented to Congress. I hope it will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. LE FEVRE. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES E. MONTELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2844) for the relief of James E. Montell.

The bill, which was read, anthorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to James E. Montell, of Baltimore, Maryland, the sum of $12,000, or so much thereof as the said James E. Montell shall prove to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that he has expended in the purchase of revenue-stamps used by him to ne has expended in the purchase of revenue-stamps used by him to stamp and repack manufactured snuff, upon which a tax had been previously paid or declared paid, or tax free, under the revenue laws in force at the time of its manufacture and sale, but which was made liable to be stamped under the act of July 20, 1868; said payment to be made out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2844) for the relief of James E. Montell, of Baltimore, Maryland, respectfully report 2844) for the relief of James E. Montell, of Baltimore, Maryland, respectfully report as follows:

This is a bill for the relief of J. E. Montell, of Baltimore, Maryland, and is based upon the following facts:

Prior to 1861 the firm of Forsyth & Cole, of Baltimore, Maryland, manufactured a lot of snuff, about thirty thousand pounds of which was removed from their factory, prior to that year, to the warehouse of C. D. De Ford & Co., of Baltimore. That on the 16th of June, 1862, said snuff was removed from the warehouse of C. D. De Ford & Co. to the warehouse of J. E. Montell & Bro. for account of Forsyth & Cole, and on the 14th day of July, 1863, Montell & Bro. became the owners of said snuff by purchase from John M. Walker, (one of the trustees of Forsyth & Cole.) after the first tax law went into operation, and a tax-paid price was paid therefor.

Cole, after the first tax law went into operation, and a tax-paid price was paid therefor.

It also appears by a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to William H. Parnell, United States assessor, Baltimore, dated September 12, 1866, that this snuff was entitled to be sold free of tax.

It also appears that in 1865 the internal-revenue inspectors inspected said snuff and marked it the same as the tax-paid article was marked.

The snuff was not in such sized packages as was prescribed by the act of July 20, 1868, (Revised Statutes, section 3362,) hence the necessity of repacking as well as stamping.

The evidence seems conclusive from the papers (a schedule of which is annexed hereto) that the snuff remained in the possession of Montell & Bro. continuously until August, 1870, when a portion of it, ten barrels, was shipped to George Fite, of Philadelphia, by consent of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, where it was repacked and stamped as required by the act of July 20, 1868, entitled "An act imposing taxes on distilled spirits and tobacco, and for other purposes," which imposed a tax of thirty-two cents per pound upon this particular article; and the balance of said snuff was on the 29th and 30th of September, 1874, delivered to G. W. Gail & Ax, of Baltimore, and by them repacked and stamped.

Inasmuch as the first internal-revenue law exempted from taxation snuff and all other articles manufactured prior to its passage, it can hardly be contended that the act of July 20, 1868, was intended to include articles that were at the time of its passage tax paid or tax free, and which had been manufactured prior to the enactment of the first revenue law. It will, however, be seen that the effect of the act of July 20, 1868, has been to impose a double tax upon the petitioner, and that relief should be granted as prayed in his petition.

The late Commissioner of Internal Revenue (Hon. J. W. Douglass) in a letter addressed to Hon. Fernando of the internal-revenue law.

The bill leaves the amount of deduction on free snuff to be ascertained by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which will of course be based upon such proof as the Commissioner shall require.

1. Affidavit of J. E. Montell, the petitioner, showing that the snuff was manufactured by Messrs. Forsyth & Cole, of Baltimore, and removed to the warehouse of C. D. De Ford & Co. prior to 1861, and afterward removed to petitioner's warehouse prior to September 1, 1862, where it was stored until 1874, except that portion shipped to George Fite, at Philadelphia, in August, 1870.

2. The affidavit of M. T. Forsyth, of the late firm of Forsyth & Cole, that they manufactured the snuff in question, and that it was removed as above stated.

3. The affidavits of William Y. De Ford that the snuff in question was placed in the warehouse of C. D. De Ford & Co. prior to June, 1861, and transferred to Montell's warehouse of Une 16, 1862.

4. Affidavit of John H. Bishop that said snuff remained in said Montell's warehouse (where he was porter all the time) until that part that was slipped to Fite in 1870, and the remainder that was delivered to G. W. Gail & Ax in 1874. This affiant made two affidavits, one dated April 4, 1872, and the second dated October 21, 1874.

in 1870, and the remainder that was delivered to G. W. Gail & Ax in 1874. This affiant made two affidavits, one dated April 4, 1872, and the second dated October 21, 1874.

5. Letter from E. A. Rollins, Commissioner Internal Revenue, dated September 12, 1865, to William H. Purnell, United States assessor, in which he says: "J. E. Montell, esq., and others, in the city of Baltimore, have on hand what they claim to be Scotch snuff prepared for use. Said snuff they allege was manufactured and removed from the place of manufacture prior to the passage of any internal revenue law. The facts being as alleged, this snuff, in its present condition, can be sold free of tax."

6. Letter from J. E. Montell to Commissioner Internal Revenue, July 26, 1870, informing him that the snuff is not fin such sized packages as the law of July 29, 1868, permits, and asking that he may be permitted to place the same in some respectable house to be repacked or mixed so as to conform to the law.

7. Certificate of R. M. Proud, collector internal revenue, Baltimore, dated November 30, 1874, that under authority from Commissioner Internal Revenue, of July 22, 1870, the petitioner shipped to George Fite, of Philadelphi, ten barrels of snuff to be repacked and stamped under provisions of act of July 29, 1888.

8. Letter from J. E. Montell to Commissioner Internal Revenue, September 3, 1874, asking permission to have the balance of snuff on hand repacked and stamped according to act of July 29, 1868.

9. Letter from Commissioner Internal Revenue to petitioner, dated September 5, 1874, granting permission to consign the balance of the snuff to G. W. Gail & Ax.

10. Certificate of W. A. Noel, deputy collector, dated December 2, 1874, that the lot of snuff referred to was delivered under his supervision to Messrs. G. W. Gail & Ax on the 29th and 30th September, 1874, showing the cost of stamps placed on the snuff when repacked to be 89,038.72.

13. Second affidavit of J. H. Disnop, October 21, 18. Affidavit of M. T. Forsyth, late of the firm of Forsyth & Cole, October 21, 1874, identifying the snuff.

15. Affidavit of J. E. Montell, October 21, 1874, as to purchase and possession of the snuff, and that the tax-paid price was paid therefor.

16. Letter from Hon. J. W. Douglass, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, dated February 3, 1874 to Hon. Fernando Wood, saying that he had no objection to the passage of the bill, as it "gives relief, as I understand, in a case of great personal hardship under the operation of the internal-revenue law."

Mr. KELLEY. I move the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was accordingly laid aside.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3273) for the relief of Martin L. Bundy.

The bill, which was read, provides that in the settlement of the accounts of Martin L. Bundy, late a paymaster in the United States Army, the proper accounting officers shall allow the sum of $719.47, being for the forage of two horses, to which he was entitled, and which was not drawn by him, from the 17th day of July, 1862, to the 15th day of April, 1866. 3273) for the relief of Martin L. Bundy, having considered the same, beg leave to report:

Major Bundy was appointed additional paymaster, United States Army, on the 31st day of August, 1861, and served as such until the 15th day of April, 1866, when he was honorably discharged and mustered out of the service. During the term of Major Bundy's service he disbursed millions of money, and after his discharge he settled his accounts with the Treasury Department, and on the 22d day of May, 1872, received from the office of the Second Auditor a certificate of non-indebtedness in these words:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND AUDITOR'S OFFICE, "May 22, 1872.

"This is to certify the accounts of Major M. L. Bundy, late additional paymaster, United States Army, having been finally adjusted in this office and confirmed by the Second Comptroller, show no indebtedness on his part to the United States.

"E. B. FRENCH, Auditor."

About seven years after this, say some time in 1879, upon a readjustment of his accounts by the Second Anditor, it was found that he had received a duplicate credit for the sum of $528.72, and that sum was due from him to the United States. By the act of July 17, 1862, officers of Major Bundy's rank were entitled to forage for two horses from that date until the time of his muster-out of the service, a period of forty-four months and twenty-nine days. The value of this forage, according to the regulations, is $719.47. This forage was never drawn, nor was it ever commuted or paid.

Under the circumstances of this case your committee think it but just that in adjusting Major Bundy's account he should be credited with the value of the forage which was due him under the law and which he did not receive.

Your committee recommend the following amendment:

"After the word 'horses' insert the words 'to which he was entitled and which was."

MARK WALKER.

249) for the relief of Mark Walker.

The bill, which was read, provides that the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army shall be suspended for the purpose of this act, and only so far as they affect Mark Walker, late first lieutenant Nineteenth United States Infantry, and the President can, if he so desire, in the exercise of his own discretion and judgment, nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said Mark Walker, late first lieutenant Nineteenth United States point said Mark Walker, late first fleutenant Nineteenth United States
Infantry, to the same grade and rank of first lieutenant held by him on May 13, 1878, and that the said Walker shall thereupon be placed upon the retired list of the Army, provided the same shall be recommended by the retiring-board; provided that the acceptance of the provisions of this act shall be a waiver of all rights, present and prospective, under the pension laws of the United States.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 249) to restore Mark Walker, late first lieutenant Nineteenth United States Infantry, to his former rank in the Army, and on account of disabilities incurred in the line of duty to place him on the retired list, having considered the same, submit the following report:

It appears from the evidence before the committee that Lieutenant Walker was arraigned before, and tried by, a general court-martial. The order promulgating the proceedings, findings, and sentence is as follows:

"R. B. HAYES."

"III. By direction of the Secretary of War, the sentence in the case of First Lieutenant Mark Walker, Nineteenth Infantry, will take effect May 13, 1878, from which date he will cease to be an officer of the Army.

"By command of General Sherman:

"E. D. TOWNSEND, "Adjutant-General."

The President, in General Orders No. 104, under date of November 15, 1877, addressed to the officers of the Army, through the general commanding, announced: "That he is much concerned to find before him for action the proceedings of court-martial in several cases where officers have been tried for violation of the thirty-eighth article of war.

"It must therefore be understood that any elemency which may have been heretofore extended by mitigation or commutation of sentence cannot hereafter be relled upon as a basis of hope for a like favorable action.

"After this solemn warning a rigorous execution of the sentences imposed in due course by courts-martial may be expected."

The first case brought to the attention of the President after the issuance of his order that previous services would not obtain was that of Captain Walker.

The following is the Judge-Advocate-General's indorsement in submitting the case to the President:

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
"BUREAU OF MILITARY JUSTICE,
"March 15, 1878.

" To the Secretary of War:

"The accompanying case of Lieutenant Mark Walker, Nineteenth United States Infantry, is respectfully submitted for the President's action.

"In view of the conviviality so frequent at the season when the accused committed the offense for which he has been brought to trial and of the informal character of the duty upon which he was engaged, his misconduct, it is submitted, was much more venial than under ordinary circumstances it would be right or expedient to hold it. The case appears to be one in which considerable chemency may well be exercised, the more clearly so when the accused's ill-health, apparently the result of wounds and severe service, and his honorable record are taken into consideration.

"W. M. DUNN, "Judge-Advocate-General."

It is manifest that the President was inflexible. He would not obviate the force of General Order No. 104 by concurrence in the views of the Judge-Advocate-General, but affirmed the sentence and asserted the purpose of the order.

There are filed with your committee eight certificates of disability from surgeons in the United States Army, which is sufficient evidence of medical character to show that Captain Walker was a great sufferer from chronic rheumatism and valvular disease of the heart for five years next preceding the date of his ceasing to be an officer.

The following certificates describe his physical condition:

He had also quite extensive chronic organic disease of the heart, and it was a matter of surprise to me that he could do as much as he did. I thought him at this time forever disabled for anything like active service.

"I have known Captain Mark Walker since 1875. He has been a sufferer from valvular disease of the heart and rheumatism, affecting his shoulders, ankle-joints, and fingers. By reason of this he has several times been totally disabled. Captain Walker, during the time I served with him in camp and changing stations, has always shown a desire to attend to his company duties, and sometimes insisted upon doing duty when told it would be best for him to remain quiet.

I further declare my belief that he will not be able to resume his duties in a less period than six months.

The certificates of the medical officers establish the fact that Captain Walker contracted his ailments in line of duty; that he could have availed himself of an interminable sick-leave, but his preference was to perform duty; that previous to the offense committed he was an applicant for retirement, which is further shown in the following letter:

The objections to Walker being placed on the retired list are officially set forth. If a vacancy had existed at the time he would have been so placed, which would seem eminently proper.

The report of the Adjutant-General, forwarded through the Secretary of War, shows that the said Walker entered the service as a corporal of Company G, Fifteenth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, June 14, 1861, was subsequently appointed sergeant and first sergeant, and promoted second lieutenant January 1, 1863, and first lieutenant March 1, 1863.

The following is an appeal from the president of the court-martial that tried Walker:

"General: Mark Walker, late first lieutenant Nineteenth Infantry, having applied to me as president of the court-martial that tried him for a letter to assist him in getting on the retired list of the Army, I have the honor to recommend that if possible he may be so placed. I considered at the time of his trial that his was a very hard case; that he was undoubtedly afflicted very much from exposure incident to the service. Yet as he plead guilty, there was nothing for the court to do but the action taken by them. The circumstances surrounding the case, the time which the admitted offense was committed, the physical condition of the accused all tend to induce me to make this recommendation as an act of justice to Mr. Walker.

"ADJUTANT-GENERAL UNITED STATES ARMY.

Washington, D. C."

General Pennypacker calls attention that the duty being performed was unamed duty, imposing but little actual responsibility upon the officer.

The facts are that what he had drunk was taken when he was suffering from the inception of rheumatism. Technically, he was guilty of the offense charged, but your committee think his condition should have been considered an unhappy accident rather than the result of intentional wrong-doing or of a criminal yielding to temptation. Can it be believed that a single casual lapse of conduct is within the intent of the article of war under which Walker's case is ruled, and thus confound offenses, without regard to the degree of criminality, in one common, severe, and absolute punishment?

It appears that up to the time of his offense, covering sixteen years of service, he was never under arrest or charge. His record was not only without blemish, but homorable to himself and the service. He was the recipient of testimonials from his commanding officers for his meritorious conduct and high soldierly bearing and efficiency as an officer.

Captain Walker is conscious of the permanency of his affliction. He is wholly incapacitated and disqualified from any service or business; two-thirds of the time he is perfectly helpless. Your committee consider Walker's case an extreme case.

December 29, 1879, certificate No. 163917 for a pension was issued in favor of Mark Walker, at the rate of $24 per month, which amount was allowed in consequence of his disability being total.

The Secretary of War, under date of February 10, 1879, recommended the passage of Senate bill No. 1791 for the relief of Mark Walker. The bill passed the Senate, and was reported upon favorably before the House of Representatives on the last day of the Forty-fifth Congress, but failed for want of time. We recommend the passage of the bill.

Pending the reading of the above report, the following proceedings

Mr. LE FEVRE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent of the committee to substitute the Senate bill which is identical with the House bill for the pending bill.

Mr. BOUCK. I object.

Mr. LE FEVRE. I merely asked consent in order to dispense with the further reading of the report, as it is a lengthy one.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Mills having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, was received announcing that the Senate had agreed to the report of the conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill of the House No. 2658 to regulate the award and compensation for public advertising in the District of Columbia; Also, that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill of the House No. 6614 making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; Also, that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 904) for the relief of Major G. W. Candee; and A bill (S. No. 1477) for the punishment of vagrancy in the District of Columbia.

MARK WALKER.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. DIBRELL. Mr. Chairman, the bill and report which have just been read are not the unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs; and I hope that the bill will not pass. This soldier was arrested for drunkenness, tried by a court-martial, and with the consent of the President of the United States was dismissed the service. He is now drawing a pension at the rate of $24 a month. There are not less than ten thousand pensioners in the United States drawing pensions at the rate of $8 a month who are far better entitled to go on the retired list than this soldier. I hope, therefore, that the bill will not pass. I move to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. O'NELL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the bill will pass. I believe it to be a very just and proper bill. This was a very meritorious officer of the Army whose sole afflictions were brought upon him by his adherence to the service when, as the medical reports show, he was physically incapacitated, and to the performance of his duties under all circumstances. He was stricken down with rheumatic disease, from which he became a great sufferer, and was obliged to use the stimulants prescribed for him by the Army surgeons. If the committee had listened attentively to the reading of the report in this case, it would have seen that the president of the court-martial that tried him spoke in this way in connection with his case. But before reading that I will say that the surgeon of the Army who had him under his charge when he was sick gave reasons why he had acted in the way that he did—

Mr. DIBRELL. The doctor certainly did not tell him to get drunk. Mr. O'NEILL. No, sir; he did not, and he did not get drunk. He was never charged with being intoxicated only on that one occasion, which was admitted, and he was man enough to acknowledge that fault; but he was at that time a sick man, and he had been a severe sufferer for years.

He would not accept a leave of absence save on one occasion, when

He would not accept a leave of absence save on one occasion, when Dr. Basil Norris, one of the most distinguished surgeons of the Army, and who is well known in Washington, said, that properly he should not have attempted to be on duty for at least two years of the time that he was there, or a period long prior to the court-martial, and the date when Dr. Norris wrote this letter. Dr. Norris writes as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 6, 1878.

First Lieutenant Mark Walker, Nineteenth Infantry, brevet captain United States Army, having applied to me for a certificate, I hereby certify that on the 29th of February, 1876, Captain Walker received from this office the following cer-

I further certify that he is now suffering from valvular disease of the heart, and is lame and disabled by reason of chronic rheumatism affecting ankle and shoulder joints and fingers.

He was certainly not physically fit for duty while serving with his company since February 20, 1876, when I first saw him. * * His excellent war record as a soldier under arms accords with his persevering endeavor to continue on duty when he might have been on sick-leave, and entitles him to the most favorable opinions and conclusions.

BASIL NORRIS, Surgeon, United States Army.

I will also read in this connection a letter of Dr. Tremaine, and one from Dr. Clary, as showing the physical condition of this officer. These surgeons write as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 17, 1879.

In the summer of 1877, I think in the month of July, I prescribed for Lieutenant Mark Walker, Nineteenth Infantry, who was at that time suffering with chronic rheumatism and organic disease of the heart. I offered to give him a certificate on which to base an application for six months' leave of absence. matism.

Lieutenant Walker has had organic disease of the heart for years. One peculiarity of his disease is the constant temptation to resort to stimulants to overcome the great depression of mind, which is one of the symptoms of the disease.

In my opinion, it would be very difficult for any one suffering as Lieutenant Walker has suffered to my certain knowledge for some years to abstain from the use of some stimulant.

W. S. TREMAINE, Captain and Assistant Surgeon U. S. A.

FORT LYON, COLORADO, December 20, 1877.

December 20, 1877.

First Lieutenant Mark Walker, Nineteenth Infantry, having requested me to furnish him a certificate on which to base an application to be put on the retired list, I certify that said officer served at the same time with me from December, 1874, until May, 1875, and again at this post from July, 1877, to date, and has been frequently under medical treatment. He is suffering with valvular disease of the heart, and is subject to frequent attacks of acute rheumatism, and in consequence is, in my opinion, wholly unfit for active duty. From the history of the case, I am of the opinion those diseases were contracted in the service.

PETER J. A. CLARY.

This medical testimony as to Lieutenant Walker's condition is most.

Assistant Surgeon U. S. A.

This medical testimony as to Lieutenant Walker's condition is most conclusive, and I want to make an urgent appeal in favor of this man and in justice to him. He served faithfully and well during the war. The facts are substantially these: a certain order had been issued by the President that one of the articles of war should be strictly carried out in all cases; that any man charged with drunkenness and proved to be a drunkard should be brought before a court-martial. This was certainly not the case with this man. But it was the first case brought to the attention of the President, and the case was subsequently submitted to General Dunn, Judge-Advocate-General. He sequently submitted to General Dunn, Judge-Advocate-General. He reported back to the President, and a part of his report I will read.

This occurrence it will be remembered took place about the holidays. It was on an undress parade when Captain Walker in going from his command to his quarters fell or staggered. He was reported by some officer as being in a fully intoxicated condition. The whole case came before the court-martial and, as I said before, he plead guilty. Upon reference to General Dunn, he reported as follows:

In view of the conviviality as frequent at the access when the accessed considered.

In view of the conviviality so frequent at the season when the accused committed the offense for which he has been brought to trial, and of the informal character of the duty upon which he was engaged, his misconduct, it is submitted, was much more venial than under ordinary circumstances it would be right or expedient to hold it. The case appears to be one in which considerable elemency may well be exercised, the more clearly so, when the accused's ill-health, apparently the result of wounds and severe service, and his honorable record are taken into consideration.

So, Mr. Chairman, if gentlemen will look through the report made by the House committee, by General Le Fevre, who has had charge of the bill, they will find all the surgeons who ever examined the condition of this man physically have testified to these facts: that whatever might have happened to him as to the effect of stimulants which had been prescribed and which he had used for several years, to enable him to perform his duties as a good soldier, was brought about by these stimulants thus prescribed, and that he was not in the habit of stimulating by the abuse of intoxicating liquors.

Those are the facts of the case as they appear from the report. The

Those are the facts of the case as they appear from the report. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Dibrell] says this man has been drawing a pension. That is true. But the bill provides he shall not hereafter draw any pension; that he shall not draw a pension of $24 a month or any pension.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. O'NEILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRIGGS. I see by this report that this officer's pension certificate was dated in December, 1879. Can the gentleman tell me if he drew any arrears of pension; and if so, how much?

Mr. O'NEILL. I cannot say. I am rather inclined to think he did not. I do not know positively.

Mr. O'NEILL. I cannot say. I am rather inclined to think he did not. I do not know positively.

Mr. SPARKS. Of course he did. The law gave it to him.

Mr. O'NEILL. I might as well say of course he did not. I might say I presume not, because it is not so stated in this report.

A MEMBER. It is not a unanimous report.

Mr. O'NEILL. The report is made by a majority of the Committee on Military Affairs. A unanimous report is not required in any case. on Military Affairs. A unanimous report is not required in any case. A majority of the committee, I presume, is as able to judge of the merits of a case as the minority. The committee comes before us with a frank and free statement of this man's case from beginning to end. Everything is put down; nothing is concealed. It shows nothing but manly conduct in the career of this soldier while serving in the Army and on the field of battle, his being severely wounded several the Army, his health entirely broken down; and yet that man seeking to perform his duty and performing it well, as is testified through this report. He simply fell because by the use of stimulants prescribed by the surgical officers of the Army he was at last overcome, and but once, and that at Christmas time only.

Mr. DIBRELL. Does it show that was the only time he ever was

Mr. DIBRELL. Does it show that was the only time he ever was drunk?

drunk?
Mr. O'NEILL. It does.
Mr. DIBRELL. No proof shows that.
Mr. O'NEILL. This report does not show he was ever drunk or charged with drunkenness or the use of intoxicating liquors except at that time. As the report of the court-martial says, and as those who reviewed it say, technically he had to be convicted—everybody on the court was favorable to elemency, but technically he had to be convicted. Why? Because, like a man, he confessed that on that occasion he did fall or stagger, or was under the influence of drink.

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] is correct in his statement that this case did have the sanction of the majority of the Committee on Military Affairs, while a minority of that committee oppose it. The facts are these: the man was arraigned and tried by a court-martial; the charge, specification, and finding being as follows:

Charge—"Drunkenness on duty, in violation of the thirty-eighth article of war."
Specification: "In that First Lieutenant Mark Walker, Nineteenth Infantry, being on duty in command of his company at undress parade at retreat at Fort Lyon, Colorado, on or about December 24, 1877, was found drunk."
To which charge and specification the accused, First Lieutenant Mark Walker, Nineteenth Infantry, pleaded "Guilty."
Finding.—The court, having maturely considered the evidence adduced, finds the accused, First Lieutenant Mark Walker, Nineteenth Infantry, as follows:
Of the specification, "Guilty."
Of the charge, "Guilty."

Of the charge, "Guilty."

There is his own confession of guilt.
Mr. O'NEILL. I stated that; that is not concealed at all.
Mr. SPARKS. Precisely so.
Mr. WILSON. It was only once.
Mr. SPARKS. Here is a court-martial regularly organized, the charge and specification are made against the accused, and he admits the correctness of the charge and specification. The court finds the facts and sentences him to be dismissed from the service.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is proposed by this bill to restore this man to the Army with the view of putting him on the retired list as a first lieutenant of infantry, with three-quarters pay as such. Sir, if Congress attempts to restore all the men who have been dismissed from the service having been tried by a regularly organized, impar-

Congress attempts to restore all the men who have been dismissed from the service having been tried by a regularly organized, impartial court-martial and found guilty of the offenses with which they were charged, and place them on the retired list, this list will be limitless in extent. In my judgment it is not right to do it.

I have nothing to say about the character of this soldier. Prior to this, he had perhaps been a good soldier. But the man violated the articles of war clearly and most grievously, was tried fairly, convicted, sentenced, conviction and sentence approved, and dismissed the service. Now, for such wounds as he got in the Army, or for such disa sentenced, conviction and sentence approved, and dismissed the service. Now, for such wounds as he got in the Army, or for such disability as accrued to him while in the service, he has been pensioned and has been drawing the very considerable pension of $24 a month. He is drawing that pension to-day. But he wants to get a better pension, more pay from the Treasury by being restored to the Army, and retired on about one hundred dollars per month. That ought not to be done, in my judgment.

The gentleman from New Hampshire inquires whether or not this man has got arrears of pension. I apprehend he has got it, for the ann has got arrears of pension. I apprehend he has got it, for the reason that the law gives it to him. But, at all events, if he has not got it he can apply to-morrow and get it. The arrears of pension act gives arrears to all pensioners from the date of their disability or discharge and he is entitled to the full benefit of that act.

Mr. O'NEILL. He cannot apply now for arrears of pension, because the limitation has expired.

Mr. SPARES The law gives it to him and of converte he has it as cause the limitation has expired.

Mr. SPARKS. The law gives it to him, and of course he has it, as I said; or if he has not he can get it, for the law gives it to him. Now, why should we take this man, who is fairly out of the service, who was tried fairly, who was fairly convicted upon his own admission of the correctness of the charge; why should we put him back into the service and enable him to get upon the retired list, where he would receive a pension of four times as much as he is now receiving?

I can see no propriety or instine in it and most expressly protect. I can see no propriety or justice in it, and most earnestly protest against it.

As a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I opposed the bill in committee, and I oppose it now as a member of this House, without any feeling at all against the soldier. I believe that is all I have to say on the subject. I see no reason why this conviction should be set aside and this man restored to the Army and put upon the retired list. If he has incurred disabilities in the service, he is drawing his pension therefor. Now, as before remarked, if you take every man who has been regularly dismissed from the service upon conviction by a court-martial and restore him to the service again conviction by a court-martial and restore him to the service again and place him on the retired list, you will have endless applications to be placed upon that list, and it becomes limitless in extent and an enormous draught upon the Treasury.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. O'NEILL. Before that motion is put, I desire to say a word. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. O'CONNOR] withdraw his motion?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will, for a moment.

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to read a few lines, and ask the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] to what I shall read. Here is a letter written by General Pennypacker, colonel of the Sixteenth Infantry, who was president of the court-martial. The letter is in these words: is in these words:

Headquarters Sixteenth Infantry,
Fort Riley, Kansas, March 9, 1879.

General: Mark Welker, late first lieutenant Nineteenth Infantry, having applied to me as president of the court-martial that tried him for a letter to assist him in getting on the retired list of the Army, I have the honor to recommend that if possible he may be so placed. I considered at the time of his trial that his was a very hard case; that he was undoubtedly afflicted very much from exposure incident to the service. Yet, as he plead guilty, there was nothing for the court to do but the action taken by them. The circumstances surrounding the case, the time which the admitted offense was committed, the physical condition of the accused all tend to induce me to make this recommendation as an act of justice to Mr. Walker.

Colonel Sixteenth Infantry, Brevet Major-General, U. S. A.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL UNITED STATES ARMY,

Washington, D. C.

That is a letter from the

That is a letter from the president of the court-martial that convicted this man. The Secretary of War recommended to the last Congress that this or a similar bill be passed. Why? Because Mark Walker applied to be placed on the retired list and would have been so placed had it not been for the report of Adjutant-General Townsend that there were thirty-five applications ahead of his. The Secretary of War, who indorsed the bill which was introduced into and passed by the Senate of the Forty-fifth Congress, of course acquiesced in the report of Adjutant-General Townsend. It was only because there were thirty-five applications ahead of his that Mr. Walker was then prevented from being put on the retired list.

then prevented from being put on the retired list.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I now renew my motion that the committee rise.

Mr. SPARKS. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] has referred to me, I would like to say a word.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will withdraw for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS,] but not for any further debate on this bill at this time.
Mr. SPARKS. It is a very common thing for soldiers to obtain such letters from members of the courts that have tried them, or from their commanding officers. A great many such cases have come before the Committee on Military Affairs. These men make strong appeals to the sympathies of these officials; we all understand that. There is hardly a case in which a letter of similar import to the one just read cannot be obtained.

But gentlemen must bear in mind that this case goes beyond the mere finding of a court-martial. There was a conviction by the court-martial upon the admission of the party himself who was charged with drunkenness. That charge is considered a very serious one, or ought to be so considered; certainly so by temperance men such as my friend from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.] The finding of the court-martial was appoved by the President, and the officer was dismissed the service.

There are a great many of these cases. As I have already said, where will this matter end if, because of a letter obtained from the commanding officer or member of the court-martial through sympathy and kindness toward a man with whom he has served perhaps for many years, we are to place men back into the Army with a view of enabling them to obtain exorbitant pensions by being placed upon enabling them to obtain exorbitant pensions by being placed upon the retired list?

Mr. O'NEILL. This man was not charged with habitual drunkenness, but with being drunk on one occasion, or with staggering and being supposed to be drunk.

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman says this man was charged with "being drunk on one occasion." I do not know how many times he was drunk. He was tried for being drunk only once. I believe it is usual to try a man for one offense at a time. I do not know whether he was also drunk the day before and the day after the time mentioned or not, nor is it material to this issue. He admitted the charge of being drunk on that occasion, and the court-martial convicted him. The finding of the court-martial was approved by the President and the man was dismissed the service. Now the question is dent and the man was dismissed the service. Now the question is will we put him on the retired list and give him a pension of 75 per cent. of the full pay of first lieutenant when he is now drawing but $24 a month? I hope we will do no such unreasonable thing.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I now renew my motion that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McLane reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the Private Calendar and had directed him to report to the House sundry bills, some with and some without amendments.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the Chair has no option but to comply with the demand.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask the gentleman from New York to yield to me for the purpose of offering a bill to be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the Chair is unable to recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make the request at this time.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of further proceeding with the consideration of the refunding bill; and, pending that motion, I move that all debate on the first section and amendments be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend that motion by making the time for debate two hours. There is now before the House an amendment which has not been discussed at all. It is upon a subject onite different from that heretofore presented, and it is not fair ject quite different from that heretofore presented, and it is not fair to force the House to vote upon it without time for consideration and discussion

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I move to amend the original motion by striking out "ten minutes" and inserting "one hour." It is very important that some of the amendments which will be presented shall have fair opportunity for discussion.

On a division there were ayes 27, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WARNER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. WARNER. I wish to ask if the motion of the gentleman from New York is adopted will it shut off any other amendment to that

The SPEAKER. It will cut off debate upon such amendments.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Not on new amendments, as I understand it, but on pending amendments.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule it will cut off debate upon all amendments.

Mr. WARNER. Will it prevent the offering of amendments?

The SPEAKER. Under the rule amendments may be offered, but without debate

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But, as I understand it, debate

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But, as I understand it, debate will be permitted on new amendments.

The SPEAKER. It will not. The rule expressly declares that such amendments shall be voted upon without debate.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will this prevent the offering of a substitute to the whole section, and shut off debate upon it?

The SPEAKER. It will not prevent the offering of a substitute, but it will shut off debate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It will not shut off debate upon the substitute?

The SPEAKER. It will shut off all debate.

Mr. MILLS. It cuts off debate on all substitutes or amendments.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Then I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I know of several important amendments which should not be passed on without debate.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from New York, that all debate upon the section and amendments be alread in tax minutes.

ments be closed in ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion to limit debate to ten minutes was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

REFUNDING THE NATIONAL DEBT.

The SPEAKER. The House having determined to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the refunding bill, the gentleman from New York, Mr. COVERT, will please take the chair.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. COVERT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the funding bill; and by order of the House all debate on the pending section and the amendments thereto is limited to ten minutes. ited to ten minutes.

Mr. DIBRELL. I desire to call up my amendment submitted before the adjournment on Thursday.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state there is already an amendment pending, the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. Anderson] on which a point of order was made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD.]

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask for the reading of my amendment as modified by two changes which I have made in it; one by explaining more fully in the last paragraph the purpose of the amendment, and the other by making these currency notes payable in the lawful money of the United States instead of in the legal-tender currency.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue, as hereinafter provided, currency notes of the United States, which shall not bear interest, and which shall be payable to bearer on demand in the lawful money of the United States.

From and after June 30, 1881, it shall be unlawful for the Comptroller of the Currency to authorize any association for carrying on the business of banking under title 62 of the Revised Statutes to commence the business of banking under said title; and it shall be unlawful for him, or for any other officer of the United States from and after June 30, 1881, to issue circulating notes to any association which shall at that date be duly authorized to transact the business of banking under said title 62, except for the purpose of replacing mutilated, worn-out, or destroyed circulating notes, as provided in section 5184 of the Revised Statutes.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall ascertain the number, denominations, and aggregate amount of all circulating notes issued to banking associations under title 62 outstanding June 30, 1881; and when, from any cause, any of said circulating notes as that date outstanding shall be redeemed by the Treasurer, as provided in section 5224 Revised Statutes, he shall thereupon, and not otherwise, be authorized to issue the currency notes herein provided, of the same denominations and to the same amount as that of the circulating notes as redeemed by him; and he shall thereafter pay out said currency notes in discharge of any services rendered to or for supplies purchased by the United States after June 30, 1881.

The aggregate amount of outstanding circulating notes issued to banking associations, and of currency notes issued by the Treasurer, shall at no time be greater than the total amount of circulating neces outstanding June 30, 1881, as ascertained by the Treasurer; nor shall it at any time be more than $1,000,000 less than said amount.

by the Treasurer; nor shall it at any time be more than $\text{e}_1$ (corrected by the Corrected by the Corr

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not desire to discuss this fully, nor is there

Mr. PRICE. Let me ask what the gentleman hopes to accomplish by that, by retiring a national-bank note and issuing a currency

Mr. ANDERSON. I expect to accomplish just this: that by issuing the currency note, when the charters of the national banks shall have expired or as the national-bank notes shall have been with-have expired or as the national-bank notes shall have been withdrawn from circulation, by issuing a currency note you give to the country a United States note, to be used as money instead of the national-bank note. That is the whole of it.

Mr. PRICE. What do you gain by that?

Mr. ANDERSON. You gain just this, that the United States of America will be the only power having anything whatever to do with or having any control of the money of the country. That is what is capital.

Mr. PRICE. The United States is the power that now issues these

Mr. PRICE. The United States is the power that now issues these notes and redeems them.

Mr. WEAVER. But the national banks have the profits.

Mr. PRICE. The Government has the profits now.

Mr. ANDERSON. The control which the Government has to-day over the currency is simply this: that if a national bank chooses to put up additional bonds it by so doing gains additional circulation. So that it is the bank and not the Government which practically issues the note or controls the volume of circulation.

Mr. PRICE. I understand that, and that the gentleman's object is to restrict the amount to the amount already out. But you only is to restrict the amount to the amount already out. But you only take up one note that the Government issues and put out another that the Government issues, and the profit on the destruction of the currency is the profit of the Government now and will be then.

Mr. ANDERSON. I beg pardon, and hope I may be permitted to say what I arose to say; and I do not think the gentleman from Iowa would particularly object to this amendment if he were not wedded to the national banks.

The exact question raised by this amendment is whether this national-bank system is to continue indefinitely; whether you are to permit these charters to stand through all the years to come, or whether you will now meet that question by saying that when the present charters expire then these charters shall not be renewed;

present charters expire then these charters shall not be renewed; and whether, by a slow method, a method which will not disturb the finances of the country, as the currency of the national banks is withdrawn, the United States shall issue a national currency.

I am as much opposed to any issue of paper money by State banks or by private corporations or by "wild-cat" factories as any gentleman on this floor; and if it were a question between them on the one side and a national-bank note on the other side, I would stand by the national-bank currency till the kingdom come. But that is not it. The real question is between the United States of America issuing the paper money of this country and corporations issuing it. That the paper money of this country and corporations issuing it. That is the question, and that is all the question.

The method I propose facilitates the refunding of the national debt.

The method I propose facilitates the refunding of the national debt. It would enable you, before twenty years, to save the payment of interest on $33,000,000 now in bonds, while that amount is floated through the country in the shape of national-bank paper. It would then be floated through the country and held by the people in the shape of currency notes of the United States of America, and the United States would save the interest. That is the whole of it.

Mr. FRYE. As debate has been limited to ten minutes on all amendments now pending or that may be offered to section 1, I desire to explain to the committee as hiefly as I can a proposition which I to explain to the committee as briefly as I can a proposition which I to explain to the committee as briefly as I can a proposition which I propose to offer as a substitute for the section. The proposition which I intended to have made was that the Secretary of the Treasury should keep the $104,000,000 of fours authorized by law in his hands to use in case of emergency. But as many object to the long-time bond entirely, I have concluded to leave that out; and therefore I propose to amend on the second page of the bill in the fifteenth line, by putting in the words "or Treasury notes of denominations not less than $10." In the sixteenth line I modify so that it will read "in the amount of not exceeding $620,000,000," as covering both certificates and bonds. In the seventeenth line I amend so as to make the interest 34 per cent, per annum; and in the nineteenth line I make the bonds est 3½ per cent. per annum; and in the nineteenth line I make the bonds redeemable after one year. I propose to strike out the twentieth, twenty-first, twenth-second, and twenty-third lines and part of the twenty-first, twenth-second, and twenty-third lines and part of the twenty-fourth line. In the twenty-fourth line I provide that not more than $75,000,000 shall be redeemed in any one year. In the twenty-fifth line, before the word "notes," I insert the words "bonds or;" so that it will read that "not more than $75,000,000 of said bonds or notes shall be redeemed in any one fiscal year," &c. The sentence beginning in the twenty-eighth line I modify so as to read "the bonds and notes shall be in all respects, except as herein otherwise provided, of like character," &c.; and at the close of the section I insert an amendment, "but the Secretary may at his discretion make the interest on the notes herein anthorized payable annually." so as to make est on the notes herein authorized payable annually;" so as to make annual payments of interest on these notes of low denominations.

My proposition amounts simply to this: it authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds or Treasury notes of a denomination as low as $10, and bearing annual interest, to the amount of $620,000,000. It authorizes him to redeem those bonds and notes after one year, only he shall not redeem more than $75,000,000 in any one year, that being ample to go considerably beyond the requirements of the sinking fund. That will provide for all of the debt, now redeemable or to become redeemable shortly, in ten years, in all human probability. It will also meet the objection made by gentlemen to a long-time bond, which I do not regard as a sound objection, but it will meet it. It will be a short bond. I think no man will contend that a short bond to the amount of $620,000,000 bearing 3 per cent. interest can by any to the amount of $620,000,000 bearing 3 per cent. interest can by any possibility be floated at par.

When you gentlemen insist on a short bond you must yield something on the question of interest. I fix the interest at 3½ per cent. I believe, and I think the Secretary of the Treasury believes, that $620,000,000 of these short-time 3½ per cent. bonds redeemable after one year can be floated at par. This seems to me to be the true way and the only way out, if we reduce the interest to the extent we do.

Mr. HOUSE. What does the gentleman mean by a short-time bond?

Mr. FRYE. Redeemable after one year.
Mr. WARNER. How will the interest be paid on the notes ?
Mr. FRYE. Annually.
Mr. WARNER. The notes to be sent into the Treasury, interest ollected, and then the notes returned?

Mr. FRYE. Subject to such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. HOUSE. You say the bond is redeemable after one year. When is it payable?

Mr. FRYE. I have fixed no time for the ultimate payment of the bond. I provide that not more than $75,000,000 shall be redeemed in any one year. If the revenues of the Government do not admit of the redemption of that amount in any particular year it will simply extend the time one or two years further for the final redemption of all the bonds and certificates. I do not think it safe to tie the Secretary up to the absolute payment of this $620,000,000 in ten years. As I have said, I propose to offer this substitute at the proper time.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman, then, is discussing an amendment which is not before the committee.

Mr. FRYE. I admit that; but I have finished what I have to say. The CHAIRMAN. The vote will now be taken on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Kanssa [Mr. ANDERSON] as modisubmitted by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anderson] as modified by him this morning.

Mr. BUCKNER. Has the Chair ruled that the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas is in order?

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. No point of order has been made

The CHAIRMAN. No point of order was made upon the amendment this morning when offered as modified.

Mf. ANDERSON. I express my thanks to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] for not pressing a point of order against my amend-

Mr. HAYES. Will the Chair again state the vote? The CHAIRMAN. The vote is 43 in the affirmative and 108 in the negative.

Mr. KEIFER. That is a quorum.
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I call for tellers.
Tellers were not ordered, there being but 7 in the affirmative; not one-fifth of a quorum.

So the amendment of Mr. Anderson was not agreed to.

Mr. DIBRELL. I now offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk as an addition to the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

And in order to meet the interest upon the bonds and certificates or notes herein provided for, and to pay the same as they mature, an income tax is hereby assessed upon the net income of each person, company, firm, bank, banking association, insurance company, insurance agency, railroad company, or any other company or association in the United States, as follows, to wit: Upon the net income of $3,500 and under $5,000 and over a tax of 4 per cent. is hereby assessed, to be levied and collected annually under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. And the money arising from this income tax shall be set apart and used exclusively in the payment of the bonds, certificates, or notes, and interest herein provided for.

Mr. DIBRELL. Is that amendment debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House no further debate is in order upon this section and amendments thereto.

Mr. FRYE. I make a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I make a point of order upon it.

Mr. DIBRELL. I would like to hear what is the point of order.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. My point of order (I do not know what point of order the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] will make) is that the proposition to re-establish the income tax is not germane to this bill.

Mr. DIBRELL. In answer to this point of order I desire to say that this amendment is germane to the bill.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. There are before the Committee of Ways and Means bills providing for the re-establishment of the income tax; and this fact, under one of our rules, would, I submit, prevent the offering of this amendment.

Mr. FRYE. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means

[Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] has stated both the points which I intended

Mr. DIBRELL. If a bill embracing the substance of this amendment is pending before the Committee on Ways and Means, it is not before the House. But there is no pending bill providing an income tax as applied to the purposes of the bill now under consideration. This amendment proposes to create, by an income tax, a fund which shall be exclusively set apart for the payment of these bonds, and for no other purpose. Every other income-tax bill which has been introduced into this House provides for a general income tax to be applied to general purposes by the Secretary of the Treasury. The fund to be raised by an income tax under the terms of this amendment will not be applicable to any other purposes than those embraced in this be raised by an income tax under the terms of this amendment will not be applicable to any other purposes than those embraced in this bill. Therefore the amendment is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Two points have been made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] against this amendment. The first is that it is not germane. Let us look at that for a moment. The main purpose embraced in this bill is to provide for the redemption of a portion of the public debt by the sale of 3 per cent. or 3½ per cent. bonds. Now, in order to make these bonds available we must take into consideration the time that the bonds may run, the rate of interest which they are to bear, and also the sources from which the terest which they are to bear, and also the sources from which the money for the payment of the interest and ultimately the principal is to be derived. The latter consideration, I submit, is entirely germane; nothing can be more germane. The sources from which the funds to pay these bonds are to be raised enters into and forms a part of the character of the bonds, giving them, so to speak, their value in the market. I submit, therefore, that the point as to the germane-ness of the amendment is not well taken.

Now, as to the second ground urged in support of the point of rder. It is said that there is pending before the Ways and Means Committee, or, if you please, before the House, a proposition for an income tax.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The gentleman must be aware that the Committee on Ways and Means could not have any bill before it ex-continuous of ways and Means count not have any our before it except upon a reference by the House.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I will concede that the proposition referred to by the gentleman from New York is before the House.

But what is that proposition? I respectfully deny, as a matter of fact, that a proposition like that submitted by my colleague—a specific proposition, having in view a specific purpose and a specific time—is now before the House. I say that there never has been, is not now, and could not be such a proposition pending in the House as that which my colleague now presents having specific reference to this bill. I submit that the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, that which my colleague now presents having specific reference to this bill. I submit that the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, when he looks at this question clearly and logically, must hold that neither of these points is well taken.

Mr. FRYE. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] says that the point of order is not well taken because in this bill we are providing for refunding the debt, for fixing a rate of interest, for the payment of money; and that therefore any proposition providing means to do this thing is germane.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. My friend from Maine will allow me to say that the object of the main proposition before the House is to provide for the payment of 5 and 6 per cent. bonds by the issuance of a 3 or 3½ per cent. bond. Now, while we are thus providing for the extinguishment of 5 and 6 per cent. bonds, my colleague [Mr. Dispersion of the stringuishment of 5 and 6 per cent. bonds, my colleague [Mr. Dispersion of the weakinguishment of 5 and 6 per cent. bonds, my colleague [Mr. Dispersion of the weakinguishment of 5 and 6 per cent. bonds, my colleague [Mr. Dispersion of the weakinguishment of 5 and 6 per cent. bonds, my colleague [Mr. Dispersion of the weakinguishment of 5 and 6 per cent. bonds, my colleague [Mr. Dispersion of the weakinguishment of 5 and 6 per cent. bonds, my colleague [Mr. Dispersion of the weakinguishment of 5 and 6 per cent. bonds, my colleague [Mr. Dispersion of the weakinguishment of 5 and 6 per cent. bonds, my colleague [Mr. Dispersion of the weakinguishment of 5 and 6 per cent. bonds, my colleague [Mr. Dispersion of the weakinguishment of 5 and 6 per cent. bonds, my colleague [Mr. Dispersion of 5 and 6 per cent. bonds, my colleague [Mr. Dispersion of the cent.] proposes to accomplish. Now, if that position is sound, then upon any bill introduced into this House, on any day, to do anything which costs money, it is entirely germane to offer an amendment to provide taxation, without the intervention of the Committee on Ways and Means. Such a ruling would sim building at an expense of $600,000; the gentleman from Tennessee jumps up and offers an amendment providing that there be an additional tax of one cent per gallon imposed on whisky to meet the expense of this public building. Is that germane? Certainly not; and

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the admission to be made that a bill having reference to the subject matter embraced in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee is now pend-amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee is now pending before the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. DIBRELL. No, sir. I do not admit that. I claim that no bill having the same substance with this is now pending in the committee or before the House. There may be pending bills providing generally for an income tax, but there is none providing a tax of this kind for the specific purpose contemplated by this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no hesitation in determining this point of order upon the first suggestion offered in opposition to it by the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Maine. The amendment as submitted is search, gentleman from Maine. The the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Maine. The amendment as submitted is scarcely germane to the subject now under consideration. The bill reported by the Committee on Ways and Means has a specific purpose in view—the meeting of a part of the national obligations falling due at a certain time. The Committee on Ways and Means comes into the House with a bill drafted for the purpose of reaching specifically that objective point. Now, while it may be very readily admitted that the committee, in reporting a bill, can embrace in it different subjects yet after the bill comes ing a bill, can embrace in it different subjects, yet after the bill comes ing a bill, can embrace in it different subjects, yet after the bill comes before the House the Chair holds that no proposition embracing a subject foreign to the subject-matter already included in the bill as presented by the committee can be received under the guise of an amendment or a substitute. Therefore, upon the first proposition urged in support of the point of order, and without passing upon the second ground, the Chair holds that the point of order is well taken, and rules the amendment out of order.

and rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. DIBRELL. With all due respect for the Chair, I desire to appeal from this decision; and I believe that a majority of the Committee of the Whole will sustain me.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Chair will allow me to suggest that it is well, perhaps, to save the second point raised here, that bills embracing substantially the same matter are now before the House. Our present rules do not require in a case of this kind that the pending bill shall be in terms identical with the proposed amendment; but simply that it shall be the same in substance.

it shall be the same in substance.

Now, I submit to the Chair for his consideration, and perhaps for an extended opinion on this matter, that a bill that lays an income tax, or provides for the general laying of an income tax, is of the same substance as this amendment, which proposes an income tax, and simply uses that tax for a specific purpose. The substance of laying the income taxis in both acts the same, and even if there should be a variation in the rate, that would not change the substance or the application of the money.

Mr. DIBRELL. If there is such a bill I ask for its reading, so we

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts the admission was not made by the gentleman from Tennessee that bills of this kind were pending in the Ways and Means Committee. Had that admission been made, the Chair would have Committee. Had that admission been made, the Chair would have had no hesitation in passing on the question, and in the way indicated by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Chair will bear with me, I will add that it can readily be proved such a bill in substance is pending, and we will produce it in a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The committee divided.

Mr. DIRRELL, I withdraw the appeal from the decision of the

Mr. BLAND. After consultation with the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Samford,] an amendment seems necessary to give proper construction to his amendment, and I therefore offer the following:

Provided. That nothing herein shall be construed to require the payment of gold or silver coin, held for the redemption of certificates issued thereon, nor to reduce the amount of coin held for resumption purposes below $50,000,000, or to require the payment of coin that may be necessary to redeem the public debt on which interest has ceased.

That is intended to cure an objection some raise to the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the House, discussion is not in order.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 40, noes 97.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will order tellers, and appoints Mr.
LOUNSBERY, in place of his colleague Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, and Mr.

Mr. CHALMERS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri may have two minutes in which to explain the object of his amendment.

Objection was made.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 57, noes 98.

So the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and a message was received from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, announcing the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 6719) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, with amendments in which concurrence was requested.

REFUNDING BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WARNER. I now offer an amendment to which I think there will be no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

But the Secretary may in his discretion make the interest on certificates payable every four months, and the particular notes to be redeemed from time to time shall be determined by lot under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury shall pre-

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Heretofore in this section we have used the word "certificates" instead of the word "notes," and I hope the gentleman will modify his amendment in that regard.

Mr. WARNER. Very well, then. I will use the word "certificates" instead of the word "notes." Interest payable in four months would be just 1 per cent., and would save a great deal of labor and calcula-

The committee divided; and there were ayes 19, noes 43. So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GILLETTE. I move the following amendment:

In line 14 after "debt" insert "and in lieu of the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of January 14, 1875, entitled 'An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments.'

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANDERSON. As further amendment of the text seems to be exhausted, I now call up the substitute which I had the honor to offer some time ago.

Mr. PHILIPS. Yes, I have an amendment to offer before the substitute is called up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the words "certificates to the amount of $300,000,000" the following: "In denominations of ten, twenty, and fifty dollars either registered or coupon."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I offer the following amendment:

At the end of line 35 in section 1 add the following proviso:

Provided also, That section 3418 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) We had better have that section of Kansas.

the Revised Statutes read so we may know exactly what it is that is the Revised Statutes read so we may know exactly what it is that is proposed to be repealed.

Mr. PRICE. It repeals the two-cent stamp on bank-checks.

Mr. WEAVER. I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WEAVER. It is not germane or relevant to the object of the bill. We cannot go into the question of taxation. That point has already been decided by the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Let the section be read that it is proposed to repeal.

The Clerk read as follows: SEC. 3418. There shall be levied, collected, and paid for and in respect of every bank-check, draft, or order for the payment of money, drawn upon any bank, banker, or trust company, at sight or on demand, by any person who makes, signs, or issues the same, or for whose use or benefit the same is made, signed, or issued, two cents.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I make the additional point of

Mr. WEAVER. I was going to add that it is also the substance of a bill pending already before the House. You cannot put a tax on to pay this debt, and I hold that you cannot take one off for the same

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. That is the point I was going to make.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa on the point of order.

Mr. PRICE. I think there is no bill pending before the House of the character to which the gentleman now refers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Such a bill is pending and offered

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Such a bill is pending and offered by the gentleman himself.

Mr. PRICE. I am aware that it is pending; but if the Chair will hold that it is still pending—

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The bill is still pending before the House. The motion of the gentleman from Iowa was to suspend the rules and pass the bill, but it is still pending for all that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled. That the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purpose of discharging any existing indebtedness of the United States that may become payable during the year 1881, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to use any money in the Treasury to the amount of $185,000,000, and also all the bonds issued under the acts of July 14, 1870, and January 18, 1871, remaining unsold, and for other and further means, issue, not exceeding $400,000,000 of Treasury notes bearing a rate of interest not exceeding 2 per cent. per annum, said notes to be issued in denominations of $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, and $1,000 in equal proportions, and said notes are hereby made receivable for all dues to the United States except customs, and be a tender in payment of all debts and obligations of the United States except its bonded indebtedness and the interest thereon; and when said notes are received into the Treasury they shall not be reissned. All laws and parts of laws in conflict with this section are hereby repealed.

The amendment was not agreed to.
Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a few remarks in support of the amendment which I have offered.
The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has already been disposed of.
Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I supposed I had the right to be

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I supposed I had the right to be heard upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. By the preceding order of the House discussion upon all amendments has been exhausted.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to explain the operation of the amendment. I have not occupied any time in the discussion of this matter, and desire simply to say a few words in explanation of the provisions of the amendment I now offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to the opinion that the amendment of the gentleman from Illnois having been voted down amendment of the gentleman from Illnois having been voted down by the committee it would not now be in order to entertain his request.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I suppose that I am entitled to be heard if unanimous consent can be obtained, and I ask that concessions.

Mr. BURROWS. That could not now be done, in pursuance of the preceding order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the request of the gentleman could not now be granted.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for the first section.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for the first section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Kansas that there is already pending a substitute for the section presented by his colleague from Kansas, and in any event the Chair would feel inclined to hold that substitutes are not in order at this time, the idea being to perfect the first section of the bill by amendments.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Then I will withhold the proposed substitute for a moment

Mr. ANDERSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, there being no other amendments to be offered to this section, I offer as a substitute to the first section what I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no other amendment to be offered, the Chair will cause to be read the substitute of the gentleman from

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I do not understand that a vote has been taken upon the amendment offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the question was put and the committee rejected his the Chair put the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment was passed upon by the committee and the gentleman from Illinois will take notice that no debate was allowed or could be allowed upon it.

The vote will now be taken upon the substitute of the gentleman from Kansas, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all existing provisions of law authorizing the refunding of the national debt shall apply to any bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than 4½ per cent. per annum, which may hereafter become redeemable: Provided, That in lieu of the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and the acts amendatory thereto, and the certificates authorized by the act of February 26, 1879, entitled "An act to authorize the issue of certificates of deposit in aid of the refunding of the public debt," the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds in the amount of not exceeding $400,000,000 which shall bear interest at a rate not exceeding 3½ per cent. per annum redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, after two years and payable ten years from the date of issue, and also notes in the amount of $300,000,000 bearing interest at a rate (not exceeding 3½) of 3 per cent. per annum, redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, after one year, and payable in ten years from the date of issue; and the particular bonds and notes to be redeemed from time to time shall be determined by lot, under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. The bonds and notes shall be, in all other respects, of like character and subject to the same provisions as the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and acts amendatory thereto: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize an increase of the public debt: And provided further, That the interest upon the 6 per cent. bond hereby authorized to be refunded shall cease at the expiration of thirty days after notice that the same have been designated by the Secretary of the Treasury for redemption.

Mr.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I make the point of order upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. This is a proposition which changes the rate of interest already established by the committee from 3 to 3½ per cent. I make the point of order that it is not in order in the case of a substitute to seek to change what the committee have decided upon and determined.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from New York, I wish to say that the substitute does not change the rate in one sense. The bill provides now that the rate shall be 3 per cent. This provides that it shall not exceed 3½ per cent. If the Secretary finds that he can dispose of the bonds at 3 or 2½ per cent, he will have the right to do so.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The committee have decided that the Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The committee have decided that the rate shall not exceed 3 per cent. The gentleman proposes to raise that to 3½ per cent. The committee have fixed 3 per cent. as the limit. Now this proposes to increase that rate, leaving it optional with the Secretary of the Treasury. I make the point of order that the amendment is clearly not in order.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would further suggest that the gentleman from New York is perhaps misapprehending this a little bit, inasmuch as the substitute leaves out some other matters on which the committee have already voted and includes others.

mittee have already voted, and includes others.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I base the point of order on the fact alone I have stated and make no reference to the rest of the amendment; and I submit that that fact vitiates the whole amendment.

ment; and I submit that that fact vitiates the whole amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON. It seems to me it would be a very strange rule if, after a committee has fixed one detail in a section, it should be precluded from afterward voting on a substitute which, while it changed the particular detail, at the same time included many other things. If so, then I think the rules ought to be relegated to that region from which I believe they originally came, and which I firmly believe to be a particularly hot region. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is clearly of opinion that had the proposition coming from the gentleman from Kansas whether in the proposition coming from the gentleman from Kansas, whether in the proposition coming from the gentleman from Kansas, whether in the guise of an amendment or of a substitute, been in the direction precisely of what had been done by the committee, seeking to undo what had been done by directly opposite terms, then the point of order would have been well taken. But as the Chair understands the substitute of the gentleman from Kansas it goes further than that, and seeks to couple with the change recited by the gentleman from New York a further direction, leaving the matter somewhat in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Chair is disposed to hold, therefore, and does hold, that the point of order is not well taken. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Chair have the substitute read again? The substitute was again read.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Chair have the substitute read again. The substitute was again read.
Mr. McLANE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear it.
Mr. McLANE. I desire to know of the gentleman from Kansas whether or not that substitute does not stand already offered as a substitute for the bill. I make this inquiry because I do not desire to lose my own relation to it.
I think the Chair stated, and the record will confirm him, that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anderson] offered his substitute as a substitute for the bill. It is not in order, therefore, to consider it until the original bill is perfected. I have an amendment, of which I gave notice, as a substitute for the first section. I do not know, not having heard the whole of the reading of the amendment by the Clerk, that I have caught in what respect the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas differs from the amendment I propose to offer as a substitute for the first section. And I am very sure, if I acquiesce in the committee voting now on that substitute offered by the gentleman from Kansas, I may deprive myself of the right to have a vote on my own substitute. The RECORD will show the gen-tleman from Kansas offered a substitute for the whole bill, and that is not in order until the original bill is perfected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maryland that the Chair instructed by the gentleman from Kansas, and as the Chair understands it the committee were likewise instructed, that the gentleman's amendment of the committee were likewise instructed. structed, that the gentleman's amendment was in the nature of a substitute to the first section.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is correct.
Mr. McLANE. I think the Record will show that the substitute of the gentleman from Kansas is pending as a substitute for the whole bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. If permitted I will make a statement which will explain the matter a little.

Mr. McLANE. I do not raise any question between the gentleman from Kansas and myself; but it was my understanding that his amendment was a substitute for the entire bill.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maryland a question. I was informed yesterday that the gentleman would decline to offer the substitute which he had hitherto proposed to offer. I desire to ask him now if it is his intention to offer his substitute.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That is in the nature of debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the only source of information the Chair has or the committee can have as to the nature or effect of an amendment or a substitute, is the express statement of effect of an amendment or a substitute, is the express statement of the gentleman who presents it; and the Chair repeats that the gen-tleman from Kansas offered his substitute as a substitute for the first section of the bill; that as such it was received, and that as such it section of the bill; that as such it was received, and that as such it is now pending before the committee.

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to modify the amendment in one particular, that is by making the language as to the interest on the certificates precisely what it is with respect to the interest on the bonds, a rate not exceeding 3½ per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute will be modified accordingly. The question is on the adoption of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kausas as now modified.

The question being taken, there were ayes 53, noes 95.

So Mr. ANDERSON'S substitute was not agreed to.

Mr. MCLANE. I offer as a substitute for the first section what the

Mr. McLANE. I offer as a substitute for the first section what the Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all existing provisions of law authorizing the refunding of the national debt shall apply to any bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than 4½ per cent. per annum which may hereafter become redeemable: Provided, That in lieu of the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and the acts amendatory thereto, and the certificates authorized by the act of February 26, 1879, entitled "An act to authorize the issue of certificates of deposit in aid of the refunding of the public debt," the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds or Treasury certificates of denominations of not less than $10$, in amount not exceeding $637,000,000, which shall bear interest at the rate of not exceeding 3½ per cent. per annum, redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, after one year, and payable in ten years; but not more than $100,000 000 of said bonds or certificates shall be redeemed in any one fiscal year, and the particular bonds or certificates to be redeemed from time to time shall be determined by lot, under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. The bonds and certificates shall be, in all respects, except as herein otherwise provided, of like character and subject to the same provisions as the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and the acts amendatory thereto, but the Secretary may, at his discretion, make the interest on the certificates herein authorized payable annually: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize an increase of the public debt.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in the process of refunding the national debt, to exchange, at not less than par, any of the bonds or certificates herein authorized for any of the bonds of the United States outstanding and uncalled bearing

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I feel bound by a sense of duty to make the same point of order against the substitute offered by my friend from Maryland that I made against the substitute offered by the gentleman from Kansas. I hold it is not competent for this committee in this manner, under the guise of a substitute for a section of the bill when we have determined positively the rate of interest, to entertain a proposition which will change the rate of interest already established by the committee.

Mr. McLANE. No man in this House, I think, will question my right to offer an amendment striking out 3 per cent. if I put two other words along with that in my amendment.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Upon what ground does the gentleman claim that?

Mr.McLANE. Upon the universal practice of parliamentary bodies. If you have fixed a rate of 3 per cent. in the bill you can move to strike out 3 per cent., provided you put in one or two other words. That would be in accordance with the constant practice of this Con-

That would be in accordance with the constant practice of this Congress and of every other parliamentary body.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. On the last day this subject was under consideration I understand the Chair ruled out of order the proposition offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Calkins,] on the ground that he proposed to change the rate of interest already established by the committee. I cannot conceive it possible that a proposition which was out of order the day before yesterday can now be, under any pretext, ruled to be in order. Nothing would ever be settled, if this committee can go on reversing its decisions whenever any one man may obtain the floor and weary and worry the committee to one man may obtain the floor and weary and worry the committee to change a decision arrived at after long and able argument and finally determined by a majority vote. I cannot conceive it possible that under any rule of this House, or any parliamentary law in this or any other country, such a thing is possible. We never can determine anything if we can reverse our decisions in this way.

Mr. McLANE. I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman from

New York.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I will yield for an inquiry.

Mr. McLANE. I want to know of the gentleman from New York if he questions the parliamentary right of any member of this House to move to strike out the words "3 per cent," provided he joins with that a substantive proposition including other words of the bill?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I will answer the gentleman. I cannot conceive that any addition or subtraction from the settlement of the rate of interest by the Committee of the Whole can justify a change in that settlement in any respect whatever. So long as the rate of interest is in question, just so long we cannot disturb what has been established by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McLANE. I ask that Rule XIX be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read Rule XIX.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a motion or proposition is under consideration, a motion to amend and a motion to amend that amendment shall be in order, and it shall also be in order to offer a further amendment by way of substitute, to which one amendment may be offered, but which shall not be voted on until the original matter is perfected, but either may be withdrawn before amendment or decision is had thereon.

Mr. CALKINS. This point of order was substantially decided upon an amendment which I had the honor to offer a day or two ago to the amendment which I had the holor to other a day of two age to the amendment then pending and offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.] I thought at the time the decision of the Chair was wrong, and I still think so. Since that time I have taken occasion to examine somewhat at length the parliamentary practice in such cases, and I find that the universal line of decisions is that an amendment may be made in regard to a subject which in substance has been decided by the House, although the change pro-posed by the amendment be an immaterial one. The substitution of a few additional words, which do not materially change the proposi-tion already adopted, is clearly in order. Any amendment, although an immaterial one, is in order— [After a pause,]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will continue.
Mr. CALKINS. The Chair evidently has some authority which he s consulting that is better than mine, and I will yield to him.

[Laughter.]
Mr. FRYE. It seems to me perfectly clear that the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] is in order. I remember when the Committee on Ways and Means first made their proposition to the House it was that it should be permitted by unanimous consent to perfect the text of the bill by means of certain amendments which they had to offer, and that consent was given. Now to hold, after the Committee on Ways and Means have had unanimous consent to perfect the text of this section, that no substitute can be offered which perfect the text of this section, that no substitute can be offered which is in conflict with the text so perfected, is simply an absurdity.

Then, again, there is a conflict between the time and the rate of interest. The rate came first; the rate depends largely upon the time. Now to hold that after the rate has been fixed, and when in the very discussion of that rate it was said that the question of time would come up afterward, when the question of time has come up that we cannot by a substitute change the rate of interest fixed by the committee, seems to me to be equally an absurdity.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I think the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has not stated the case with his usual fairness and candor. He would have it appear that the change demanded by the Commit-He would have it appear that the change demanded by the Committee on Ways and Means in the bill from $3\frac{1}{2}$ to 3 per cent., when indorsed and ingrafted upon the bill by the Committee of the Whole, after discussion and long debate, and by a majority of forty members of this House, amounts to nothing; that all we had obtained by that result was that the Committee on Ways and Means had been allowed to technically change the text of the bill.

Now my bold, broad, positive position is this, that in regard to a material question, one that is vital to the interests of this country, vital to the integrity of honest legislation, it is impossible, without perpetrating what I conceive to be a legislative wrong and a violation of all parliamentary law, to change a very material issue in the bill, which indeed is the main question at issue between the two sides of

I repeat, therefore, that the attempt of the gentleman from Maine to make it appear that the action of the Committee of the Whole on that question has been simply to allow the Committee of the Whole on that question has been simply to allow the Committee on Ways and Means to technically change the phraseology of the text, and is not in fact a solemn verdict of this committee, as far as this committee can present it to the House, is not warranted. I hold that under no pretext, and in no case whatever, can that action of the Committee of the Whole be reversed in this way. When the bill is reported to the House, then under the rules any member, if he obtains the oppor-tunity, has the right to offer a substitute to the bill or any section of But in Committee of the Whole we cannot reverse the decision which we have made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was called upon a day or two since to pass upon a proposition somewhat similar to the one now submitted. The procedure was had upon a proposition coming from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] to amend a proposition then pending before the committee. For the reasons expressed by the Chair upon the occasion referred to for sustaining the point of order at that time the Chair now sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from New York against the proposed substitute.

Mr. McLANE and Mr. KEIFER addressed the Chair.

Mr. WARNER. I offer the following amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLANE,] which I understand the gentleman from Maryland, account. the gentleman from Maryland to accept.

the gentleman from Maryland to accept.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire—

Mr. McLANE. I very reluctantly—

Mr. KEIFER. I am undoubtedly entitled to recognition for the purpose of appealing from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] is certainly entitled to recognition for that purpose.

Mr. KEIFER. Refers the question is any unon the appeal. I desire

Mr. KEIFER. Before the question is put upon the appeal, I desire to state briefly my reasons for taking an appeal.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object to debate.

The CHAIRMAN. This matter is not now a subject for discussion.

This matter was discussed, submitted to the Chair, and the Chair has ruled upon it

Mr. KEIFER. I certainly have the right to state the grounds of my appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has no right to debate an appeal.

Mr. KEIFER. Why is it not debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is not a proper subject for discussion.

Mr. KEIFER. Under what rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The merits of this proposition were discussed while the question of order was pending, and the discussion was ended by the decision of the Chair. The Chair holds that the only course now open to gentlemen who may dissent from that decision is to take an appeal from it.

Mr. KEIFER. Undoubtedly; and I claim the right to state the grounds of the appeal.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Certainly the gentleman has the right to state

Mr. HUMPHREY. Certainly the gentleman has the right to state the reasons for his appeal.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I make the point of order that an appeal from the decision of the Chair is not debatable.

Mr. McLane. Did not the Chair recognize me?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Townshend] has risen to a question of order, the question being as to whether there is a right on the part of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] to further discuss this proposition. The Chair holds that the point made by the gentleman from Illinois is well taken.

Mr. McLane. I did not yield to the gentleman from Ohio or to the gentleman from Illinois. I was about to make a motien—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did give recognition to the gentleman from Maryland; but subsequently the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] stated that he had risen for the purpose of taking an appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. McLane. That is exactly what I wanted to do. Now, Mr. Chairman—

Chairman

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair states the proposition before the committee to be this: Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. McLane. I rise to appeal from the decision of the Chair. The CHAIRMAN. Upon what point? One appeal is already pending

Mr. KEIFER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I insist that under the rules I am entitled to be heard. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is not in order. He

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is not in order. He has not been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. KEIFER. I rise, then, to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEIFER. My point of order is that under the rules of the House, unless the committee is dividing, I am entitled to be heard on an appeal from a point of order decided by the Chair.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The Chair had recognized the getleman

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The Chair had recognized the getleman from Maryland. After that recognition he recognized the gentleman from Ohio to take an appeal. The gentleman from Maryland stated that he was recognized and proceeded to take an appeal. Now, I ask whether it is not true that the gentleman from Maryland is in order and the gentleman from Ohio out of order as to that point?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that his statement is correct. The Chair did give recognition to the gentleman from Maryland, the Chair not being at that time advised of the purpose for which the gentleman from Ohio sought recognition. The Chair desires to state, however, to the gentleman from Illinois and to the committee that the gentleman from Ohio having stated that he had risen in his place and sought recognition for the purpose of taking an appeal from the ruling of the Chair, the Chair did not think it would be delicate on his part to deny recognition to the gentleman from Ohio for the purpose indicated; and the Chair trusts that the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Indiana will not insist upon the gentleman from Maryland being recognized until after this question is settled.

Mr. KEIFER. Allow me to relieve this matter by saying that if the gentleman from Maryland was recognized for the purpose of taking an appeal, I withdraw my claim for recognition.

Mr. McLANE, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry before making my motion.

making my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McLANE. inquiry.

Mr. McLane. I want to put myself right. I supposed I had a right to debate the question of order. I did not understand that I was under any obligation to inform the Chair or the Committee of the Whole for what purpose I rose. I took it for granted that I had the right to state to the Chair why I appealed. I supposed the decision of the Chair was debatable.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman from Maryland allow the Chair to have read the fourth clause of Rule I, which I think will throw a good deal of light upon this matter?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Maryland will yield for a moment, the Chair will direct the Clerk to read the clause of the rule as indicated by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON.]

SON.

The Clerk read as follows from Rule I, under the head "Duties of the Speaker:

4. He shall sign all acts, addresses, joint resolutions, writs, warrants, and sub-pennas of, or issued by order of the House, and decide all questions of order sub-ject to an appeal by any member, on which appeal no member shall speak more than ence, unless by permission of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest that this rule gives the right to a member to speak once on an appeal.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask the reading of the third clause of Rule XVII.

The Clerk read as follows:

All incidental questions of order arising after a motion is made for the previous question, and pending such motion, shall be decided, whether on appeal or otherwise, without debate.

Mr. KEIFER. That has no application here. Mr. ROBINSON. That only applies when the previous question is operating.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels disposed, and indeed is of necessity obliged, in conformity with the fourth clause of Rule I, to which the attention of the Chair has been directed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Robinson,] to hear the gentleman from Maryland upon the pending appeal.

Mr. CALKINS. Will the gentleman from Maryland yield to allow the reading of a short clause from the Manual, page 161?

The Clerk read as follows:

After A is inserted, however, it may be moved to strike out a portion of the original paragraph, comprehending A, provided the coherence to be struck out be so substantial as to make this effectively a different proposition.

Mr. McLANE. Mr. Chairman, I think if the Chair had had an opportunity to hear a word of explanation from me as to the character and nature of that substitute he would not have ruled it out of order. It has no analogy at all to the ruling on the proposition heretofore offered which the Chair ruled to be out of order. Were the mere question of 3 per cent. the only question involved, I would not take issue with the Chair that it would be incompetent for me to move 3½ per cent.; and the Chair would have observed, if I had had the opportunity to make the explanation, that that substitute contains not only propositions materially different from those which the committee have adopted, but it excludes altogether the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama which is embodied in the first section of the bill. And I submit to this committee that never in this House portunity to hear a word of explanation from me as to the character of the bill. And I submit to this committee that never in this House that it been ruled out of order to strike out a proposition adopted by the House if accompanying the amendment are other substantial propositions. And that is why I said it was the universal law of the House.

And I would here remark to the Chair, that I have proceeded with deliberation. I chose my line of action, and was waiting with patient respect the action of this committee on the first section. I made no effort whatever to find fault with the decision of the committee as to the rate per cent., or any of its conclusions; and, knowing my substitute contained other propositions totally different from those in the original first section, and totally different from those which had been embodied into the first section by the vote of this committee, I knew the proper and only time when I was privileged to offer my amendment was, when the committee had disposed finally of the first section. I submit to the committee that it is a totally different proposition in its character and in its terms from the first section proposition in its character and in its terms from the first section of the bill; and that 3½ per cent, is but an incident in the section. Neither side of this House, no individual of this House, is committed against the proposition now offered in this substitute.

Here is a substitute which proposes, Mr. Chairman, that the whole issue shall be bonds or certificates, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, and that the rate of interest shall not exceed 3½ per cent. The first section of the bill limits the Secretary to a fixed amount in bonds and a fixed amount in certificates and a fixed rate of interest. He has no discretion in the first section whatever, but of interest. He has no discretion in the first section whatever, but to negotiate so many hundred million of bonds and so many hundred million of certificates.

Then, Mr. Chairman, the committee will observe the option is different in the substitute from what it is in the original section. In ferent in the substitute from what it is in the original section. In the original section it is five and ten years for bonds and for certificates one and ten. And the committee will take note, too, that whatever may have been the opinions of gentlemen as to the rate per cent. in the bill, they do not necessarily apply to the rate per cent. in the substitute. I can very well understand, Mr. Chairman, if you are in favor of a twenty or forty years' bond, as was the original first section of this bill, you might very well vote to make the rate 3 per cent. But every intelligent gentleman in this committee will see a great distinction between the rate per cent. applying to a twenty and forty year bond and the rate which ought to apply to a one and ten year bond. Therefore this proposition is not only substantially different from that which the committee has voted on, but it contains within itself the intrinsic reason why the rate per cent. in the substitute should be different from the rate per cent. in the first sections stitute should be different from the rate per cent. in the first section of the bill.

Now, one word more, Mr. Chairman, in this connection. If the committee deprives itself of the opportunity to give full expression of its own opinion as to the relation of the rate and the time, it will of its own opinion as to the relation of the rate and the time, it will be doing itself a great injustice. If this committee fails when the opportunity is offered to it to take an intelligent distinction between a long bond and a short bond, it will have no right to take exception to another Chamber associated with us in legislation when it sends us back a higher rate per cent. if it concedes to us our short bond. That is a point which addresses itself to my conscience and my intelligence more strongly than any other consideration which I could arge upon the committee. I think this committee desires to take a short bond. I think the overwhelming sentiment of this committee. short bond. I think the overwhelming sentiment of this committee on both sides of the House is in favor of a short bond, and therefore I think the committee being in favor of a short bond, or, at all events

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I rise to a point of order, that the gentleman from Maryland has no right to discuss the merits of the proposition whether there shall be short or long bonds, or what shall be the rate per cent.

Mr. McLANE. The honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, the Speaker of this House, knows as well as I do—and it is a small concession for me to make to him that he knows better than any other man on this floor—that I am perfectly in order. [Laughter on the combined state of the House 1] man on this floor—that I am perfectly in order. [Laughter on the republican side of the House.]

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland will address himself to the subject-matter under consideration.

Mr. McLANE. I am appealing to the committee to appreciate the distinction between the substitute and the first section, and I will not say a word that does not address itself to that point. I wish to have this committee understand that the substitute is essentially different from the first section of the bill as it has been perfected, and my observations are to establish that difference. And if it is essentially difference. my observations are to establish that difference. And if it is essentially different, then it is in order. That is my point, and I do not think this committee shows proper self-respect when it tramples upon parliamentary law under the circumstances, because all that substitute seeks to do is to give an opportunity to those who are in favor of a short bond to vote on the rate per cent. which is proper for that bond, and I do not want any member of this committee to feel he has been deprived of that opportunity.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the committee will observe that up to this time it has not had that opportunity. This committee proceeded in a most extraordinary manner. It fixed the rate of interest before it fixed the time, and therefore this committee has never had the opportunity to you that a 2 person to be supported by the rate of the committee of t to vote that a 3 per cent. rate was proper for a long bond and $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. for a short bond. My purpose in offering this substitute is to give the House the opportunity that I believe they ought to have. I suppose we may be obliged to take a long bond, but the honorable gentleman from New York may not be gratified in that respect. He may find that Chamber which it is not in order to refer to directly, may find that Chamber which it is not in order to refer to directly, but which assists us in legislation and which has equal rights with us in framing legislation, may prefer a long bond, and send the bill back to the House with a long term provided for the bond and a rate of 3 per cent. They may send us back a twenty or forty-year bond and 3 per cent. rate, as he would probably prefer, but I would rather have a 3½ rate and a short bond, and I do not wish to be excluded from an opportunity to associate the rate and time intelligently by awaiting the action of the Senate.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. Will the gentleman from Maryland permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. McLANE. I will.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Maryland if, in case the substitute be now adopted by the committee, having been ruled to be in order by the Chair, it would then be in order that a new substitute might be offered which would only change the length of the bond and make no other provision in reference to it?

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman from Maryland will permit me to

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I am assuming, Mr. Chairman, the substitute to be adopted simply changes the length of the bond and nothing else.

Mr. REAGAN. In reply to the question submitted by the gentleman from New York, if the gentleman from Maryland will permit me, I have always understood the rule to be that in a case like that now before the committee the very words substituted cannot be stricken out by a new substitute, but if coupled with others that enlarge the scope of the proposition, or if coupled with others that diminish its scope, in which case it is admissible, and if adopted in that form, or in its present form, it would still be in order to offer further amendments reducing the rate of interest.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) If the gentleman from Maryland will permit me a moment, I wish to say that there is great anxiety on the part of the friends of a refunding bill to make prompt disposition of it. It is desirable that we shall at this session of Congress legislate upon this subject and avoid complaint. The friends of the funding bill in its present shape desire to dispose of it in committee legislate upon this subject and avoid complaint. The friends of the funding bill in its present shape desire to dispose of it in committee to-day, if it be possible, but cannot do it if the committee is to be flooded with points of order and amendments. If the friends and opponents of the bill in its present form could come to an understanding and agree that a vote be taken upon the two amendments suggested as substitutes, I think we could dispose of the bill, or certainly the first section of it, to-day. I would suggest, therefore, that the point of order be withdrawn. Let us then have a vote on the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland and, if need be, on that of the gentleman from Maine, testing the sense of the committee upon these two amendments or propositions, and then go on quietly and intelligently to perfect the bill.

The committee has already expressed its opinion as between the rates of 3 and 3½ per cent., and I have no doubt they will adhere to their judgment in that respect. I ask now that the gentleman from New York withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to say a word, Mr. Chairman, upon this point of order.

of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to discuss a point of order.

Mr. BUCKNER. I submit that the gentleman from Maryland has the floor.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The gentleman from Maryland yields to

Mr. McLANE. Certainly. Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I was entirely sincere in Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I was entirely sincere in making the point of order against this attempt to change the rate of interest. I understand the gentleman from Maryland to substantially admit that if his proposition had been an isolated provision it would not be in order; but to avoid the point of order made against it he introduces other propositions, relating to the length of the bond and other material considerations, so as to get in his motion to issue a 3½ per cent. I make this declaration, that no parliamentarian in this House can contradict, that when the amendment is not in order in one regard although it may embrace twenty different propositions. in one regard, although it may embrace twenty different propositions, in one regard, although it may embrace twenty different propositions, it is not in order in any regard. The whole amendment absolutely falls, however meritorious it may be, provided that there is one proposition within it which cannot be entertained under a point of order. But I sympathize with the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I want this bill to be completed. I want it passed. I want it passed according to the will of the majority of this House whether I concur or not. I am free to say now that I do not concur in some of the propositions in this section as it stands. But I am willing to consent to withdraw the point of order and let the vote be taken upon the substitute of the gentleman from Maryland and also the proposition of the gentleman from Maine, with the understanding that if the substitute shall not be adopted we go on with the other provisions of the bill, leaving not be adopted we go on with the other provisions of the bill, leaving not be adopted we go on with the other provisions of the bill, leaving this first section as it now stands.

Mr. WARNER. With the understanding that if the substitute is adopted it may be open to amendment.

Mr. CARLISLE. As I understand it the gentleman from New York means that if the substitutes are voted down we then pass to the other sections of the bill.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. That was my idea.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands, then, the gentleman from New York to withdraw the point of order.

New York to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute presented by the gentleman from Maryland, which the Clerk will again report.

The proposed substitute was again read.

Mr. WARNER. I send to the desk an amendment which I propose to offer as a proviso to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in the purchase or payment of any of the bonds or certificates of the United States the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay out the standard coin from time to time in the Treasury in excess of the current coin obligations of the Government and 25 per cent. of outsanding legal-tender

Mr. WARNER. I ask a moment to explain the reasons for offering this proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order at this time.

Mr. WARNER. I desire to say a word of explanation. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Let me say just this: that if the amendment is not accepted by the gentleman from Maryland, I will withdraw it for the present in order to offer it as a separate proposition.

Mr. McLANE. Let a vote be taken on the amendment.
Mr. WARNER. Then I withdraw the amendment for the present and will offer it as a substantive proposition.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the substi-

Mr. SAMFORD. I desire to offer an amendment to the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is now dividing.

Mr. PRICE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it, although the question is now being submitted to the vote of the committee.

Mr. PRICE. I want to know whether if a proposition is offered in the shape of a substitute for one section and it nevertheless covers the entire bill, whether we are not to be allowed to offer amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute is open to amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a question of order. I submit we have a right to offer amendments to the pending propositions.

Mr. SAMFORD. I offer as an amendment to the substitute what I send to the desk

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold the amendment as having been made in time

The Clerk read Mr. Samford's proposed amendment, as follows:

Add to the substitute the following:

"Provided, That before any bonds are issued under this act, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay on the said bonds accruing during the year 1881 all the standard silver dollars, and also all the gold coin and surplus revenues now held in the Treasury over and above $50,000,000, held for resumption of specie payments: Provided. This section shall not be construed to require the payment of revenues needed for the ordinary current expenses of the Government, nor for the payment of revenues needed to meet and pay liabilities already accrued: And provided further. That nothing herein contained shall require the payment of the coin for which coin certificates have been issued."

The question being taken on the amendment to the substitute there were—ayes 37, noes 97.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PRICE. If the pending substitute is adopted can I offer an amendment to it afterward?

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments to the substitute are now in order. Mr. PRICE. But after it is adopted, if it should be adopted, can offer amendments? The CHAIRMAN. If the substitute should be adopted amendments to it could come in by way of addition. The question is on the substitute of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLane.]

Mr. FRYE. Let us have the vote taken by tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LOUNSBERY and Mr. McLane were

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 108.

So the substitute was not agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Chairman, the substitute offered by the gentleman from Maryland covered the whole of the substitute which I propose to offer with some additions. My own judgment is that my amendment or substitute was fully tested in this last vote and beaten, and therefore I do not offer it.

The Clerk was the second continued the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the second section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in the process of refunding the national debt, to exchange, at not less than par, any of the bonds or notes herein authorized for any of the bonds of the United States outstanding and uncalled bearing a higher rate of interest than 4½ per cent. per annum; and on the bonds so redeemed the Secretary of the Treasury may allow to the holders the difference between the interest on such bonds from the date of exchange to the time of their maturity, and the interest for a like period on the bonds or notes issued; but none of the provisions of this act shall apply to the redemption or exchange of any of the bonds issued to the Pacific railway companies; and the bonds so received and exchanged in pursuance of the provisions of this act shall be canceled and destroyed.

Mr. EERNANDO WOOD. A desire the provisions of the second.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to make a technical change which is necessary in order that this section may conform to the first section. I therefore move to amend by striking out the word "notes," in lines 3 and 10, and substituting the word "certificates." The section will thus be made to conform to the designation in the first section.

The amendment was agreed to.
The Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 3. Authority to issue bonds and notes to the amount necessary to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby granted.

Mr. CARLISLE. As it is my purpose when we come to the fourth section to move a substitute for it, I propose to amend the third section by adding to it as it now stands in the bill what I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BUCKNER. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. CARLISLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCKNER. Is this section necessary? Is not the Secretary authorized now f

Mr. CARLISLE. I am proposing an addition to the section which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the section the following:

"And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to make suitable rules and regulations to carry this act into effect: Provided, That the expense of disposing of the bonds and certificates authorized to be issued shall not exceed one-quarter of 1 per cent.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I ask the gentleman from Kentucky if that is to include every expense; advertising, preparing, issuing, and disposing?

Mr. CARLISLE. That is the intention.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Because the act of 1870 employs the words I have used.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I desire to move an amendment to make it one-

Mr. CLAFLIN. I desire to move an amendment to make it one-half of 1 per cent.

Mr. CARLISLE. Move it now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Do you accept that?

Mr. CARLISLE. No, sir.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out one-quarter and inserting one-half. The Secretary of the Treasury expressly says that with a one-quarter per cent. rate nothing would be left to pay any commission to the banks.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. We need nothing to pay commissions to the banks.

sions to the banks.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) If the gentleman from Kentucky had used the words "advertising," "preparing," and "issuing," and had left out the word "disposing," there would have been no authority for paying a commission, which, I think, in amount paid heretofore has been an abuse

Mr. CLAFLIN. You cannot expect men to do business without

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the people deal directly with the Treasury.

Mr. CLAFLIN. Of course when they do they get nothing from

Mr. CLAFLIN. Of course when they do they get nothing from the Treasury.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The cost of preparing these bonds is in excess of one-quarter per cent. The law now allows one-half per cent. to cover the cost of advertising, printing, issuing, and disposing of the bonds; four different processes before the bonds are finally negotiated. Now, it is for this committee to determine whether it is not just and right that, having established a rate of interest so low as 3 per cent., the Government itself shall not bear the expense, whatever that may be, of preparing, issuing, and advertising. I will suggest, therefore, to my friend from Kentucky that we fix a percentage of allowance down to the disposing of the bonds so that the mechanical preparation and the advertising may be covered by the expense allowed by tion and the advertising may be covered by the expense allowed by the gentleman. The gentleman, as I understand, leaves open the question of allowing commission to a syndicate taking these bonds. Now, the theory of this bill is that it is a peoples' loan and that the

Now, the theory of this bill is that it is a peoples' loan and that the bonds and notes go to the people.

We propose to avoid the intervention of any go-between in the transactions of the people with the Government in this regard. I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] thus far, that I would allow nothing for commissions to sell the bonds, but I would deliver the bonds at the cost of the Government.

Mr. CARLISLE. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means whether, in his opinion, one-quarter of 1 per cent. is not sufficient for that purpose? It is equivalent to at least a million and a half of dollars on the amount of bonds authorized to be issued by this act.

a million and a hair of dollars on the amount of bolds admonted to be issued by this act.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The gentleman is aware that there is a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he shows that the allowance of one-half of 1 per cent. would leave a small amount to be returned to the Government. I doubt whether one-quarter of 1 per cent. will bear all the expenses of handing these bonds over to the parties obtaining them. I think if the gentleman would make it three-eighths or one-half of 1 per cent. it would be sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment has expired.

pired.

Mr. WEAVER. I move to strike out the last word. In my judg ment it is impossible to properly expend one and three-quarter milions of dollars (that would be the amount of one-quarter of 1 per cent. on $700,000,000) in preparing these bonds for the market. With the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Randall,] the Speaker of this House, I think this has been a great abuse. The giving of one-half of 1 per cent. would make the amount to be expended in preparing these bonds for the warket and placing them at least three millions. these bonds for the market and placing them at least three million five hundred thousand dollars. I object to that. I think that one-eighth of I per cent. is amply sufficient, and, if in order, I move to make it one-eighth.

Mr. FRYE. Gentlemen will remember that under the law authorizing the issue of the 4 per cent. bonds, one-half of 1 per cent. was allowed for the expenses of so doing. If gentlemen will go to the Secretary of the Treasury they will find out that all of the early operations of placing the loans (and there is the difficult spot) cost fully the one-half of 1 per cent.; and the Secretary of the Treasury saved his million of dollars after the whole thing had got into a current and was appearable going almost by itself.

his million of dollars after the whole thing had got into a current and was apparently going almost by itself.

They will find another thing if they will go to the Secretary of the Treasury, and that is that in the opinion of a gentleman who ought to know more about placing United States bonds than any gentleman in this House, to say the least, it is an utter impossibility to place these 3 per cent. or 3½ per cent. bonds at one-quarter of 1 per cent., at any rate in the early operations which must be undertaken.

Mr. CARLISLE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question ?

Mr. FRYE. I will.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman is of course aware of the fact that one-quarter of 1 per cent. is the amount provided for in the original bill as reported by the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. FRYE. I am.

Mr. FRYE. I am. Mr. CARLISLE. And the gentleman knows that while the bill was under consideration in the Committee on Ways and Means the Secretary of the Treasury came before that committee and had a long interview upon the questions embraced in the bill. Now, I ask the gentleman if he remembers that the Secretary of the Treasury made no objection to the bill on account of the amount allowed for the disposing of the bonds?

Mr. FRYE. I do not remember. But I know that the bill you are now proposing to send to the Senate is a 3 per cent. bond bill.

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. It is a marvelous thing in itself for a people like this to undertake to do, to float a 3 per cent. bond. And when you undertake to do that marvelous thing you at the same time undertake to do another marvelous thing, to reduce the expense of placing the bonds to one-quarter of 1 per cent., a lower rate than any country in the world, including your own, ever undertook, even with the four percents or five percents.

It seems to me that there is a determined purpose on the other side of the House, and on the part of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] as well, to break down all possibility of any funding operweaver, as well, to break down all possionity of any finding operations, and to pass a bill through this House with such amendments as have been placed upon it to-day as will prevent any successful action on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WEAVER. You hit me there.

Mr. FRYE. I thought so.

Mr. COX. I do not believe that any such motive or intention exists on this side of the House as the one which my friend from Maine

Mr. FRYE. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] says I hit him right. Mr. WEAVER. You did.

Mr. COX. It does not apply to this side of the House. The motion is made to increase the pay to the syndicate to one-half of 1 per cent. The bill proposes to give one-quarter of 1 per cent., which will amount to more than one and a half million of dollars.

I want this bill so limited, its expressions so guarded, that it will not be subject to the interpretation of the act of 1870 relating to the not be subject to the interpretation of the act of 1870 relating to the four, four-and-a-half, and five percents. That act authorized no more than one-half of 1 per cent. to be paid.

I introduced into this House a resolution of inquiry, and the Committee on Ways and Means called upon the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Boutwell, for an explanation. That explanation is on record. It will show that the syndicate at that time, under the provisions of a law giving one-half of 1 per cent., got from 3 to 3½ and 4 per cent. out of their operations in placing the loan.

Now, I want no intervention between the people and the Treasury, no syndicates. The Treasury is delegated with power for this special purpose to place these bonds in the hands of the people. Gentlemen who wish to allow one-half of 1 per cent. mean to give percentages who wish to allow one-half of 1 per cent. mean to give percentages to syndicates. I am opposed to that; this side of the House is opposed to syndicates. I am opposed to that; this side of the House is opposed to it; and we welcome any reproaches that the gentleman from Maine may hurl at us on the ground that the restriction we propose will tend to defeat the present funding of the debt about to become due.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to make one suggestion to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.] If the Treasury Department is deprived of the power to employ any person or any bank to make a distribution of these bonds through the country, and thereby placing them near the people, where they can see what the bonds are, where they can ask questions and have them answered, the mere matter of delay in placing this new loan, the old bonds running at 5 and 6 per cent., will more than

and have them answered, the mere matter of delay in placing this new loan, the old bonds running at 5 and 6 per cent., will more than make up the difference between \(\frac{1}{2} \) and \(\frac{1}{2} \) per cent. on the whole sum. Now, the proposition is, if this allowance is kept down to one-fourth of 1 per cent., to compel everybody who wants a 3 per cent. bond to apply to the Secretary of the Treasury or a sub-treasurer. You say these bonds are for the people, but you provide no machinery by which the people can get them. This country is several thousand miles wide. These bonds ought to be widely distributed; the newspapers ought to advertise the terms of the loan; the banks ought to be employed to negotiate the loan, to make the necessary explanations to investors, to do the work of placing the loan.

Now, does the gentleman from New York say that it would be wise Now, does the gentleman from New York say that it would be wise to make this allowance so small that no money would be at the disposition of the Secretary of the Treasury for the expenses of placing the bonds, so that a delay of a year or eighteen months might be forced upon the Secretary of the Treasury before he could place the loan, granting that in the end it could be successfully placed?

Gentlemen can see that 5 and 6 per cent. interest on the present outstanding bonds would amount to a great deal larger sum than this additional one fourth of 1 per cent.

standing bonds would amount to a great deal larger sum than this additional one-fourth of 1 per cent.

This side of the House, I take it, is not any more in favor of syndicates than is the gentleman from New York; but this side of the House when it proposes to issue a bond and make a loan, proposes to do it in earnest. It does not propose to fool the people of the United States and thrust out a miserable pretense of a funding bill, under which, as every business man, every banker, every intelligent legislator knows, the bonds cannot be negotiated. This side of the House, if I am any judge of its sentiments, intends that this funding bill shall be a successful measure. If the bonds are to be placed at 3 per cent., more work will be required to float the loan successfully than was required in the case of the 4 per cent. bonds; and, as I stated here the other day, one bank in the city of Boston (and that was not the great center for placing the four percents) expended $26,000 in here the other day, one bank in the city of Boston (and that was not the great center for placing the four percents) expended $26,000 in advertising four percents which it had for sale. Who is to pay expenses of this kind in connection with placing these new bonds? Will any bank take the bonds, advertise them, talk to their customers about them, urge them upon the people, and do all this for love of the Government, at the same time paying their own expenses?

Mr. CARLISLE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HASKELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARLISLE. Did not these banks have the benefit of holding in their vaults and using many million dollars of money of the General Government which had been received for these bonds?

Mr. HASKELL. I understand that there was a benefit of that sort accruing to the banks, and I understand that it is not provided for accruing to the banks, and I understand that there was a beneat of that sort accruing to the banks, and I understand that it is not provided for in this bill. I understand also that a 4 per cent. bond would enable bankers to bull the market and make a margin on the rise, which can hardly be done with a 3 per cent. bond. Can any bank expect to reap a great harvest on the advance of the three percents? Think of the a great harvest on the advance of the three percents? Think of the matter for a moment. You are proposing to call in bonds bearing a high rate of interest and to put upon the market a bond at a lower rate than the world ever saw floated before, yet, under pretense of striking at a syndicate or a banker, you deliberately say on this floor that you will not give the Secretary of the Treasury power to move a wheel in placing the bonds.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, while I am in favor of a short bond at 3½ per cent., because I believe that is as low a rate as a short bond will stand, and have so voted, I am decidedly opposed to any attempt to make up the difference in interest by a commission to a syndicate or anybody else. Such a measure will not have the effect claimed for it; it will not make up the difference; will not make the bonds them or anybody else. Such a measure will not have the effect claimed for it; it will not make up the difference; will not make the bonds themselves any better. For one, therefore, I am opposed to the proposition to allow one-half of 1 per cent. instead of one-quarter. The latter rate, as has been already stated, will provide over a million and a half of dollars. That is quite sufficient to cover the cost of engraving, printing, advertising, and all other necessary expenses, and any attempt to make up the difference of interest in this way would be a needless expenditure and a failure, and ought not to be attempted. Make a bond that the public will take, and one-quarter per cent is enough to cover legitimate expenses councied with it.

Make a bond that the public will take, and one-quarter per cent. is enough to cover legitimate expenses connected with it.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Mr. Chairman, if one-half per cent. was essential to enable the Government to dispose of these bonds, I would be quite willing that we should allow that rate. But, if I remember correctly, the usual brokerage paid by citizens buying Government bonds is only one-eighth; and in large transactions it is generally made the subject of special agreement at a sixteenth.

Mr. HUTCHINS. It is one-thirty-second of 1 per cent. as to Government bonds.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) My friend from New York, [Mr. HUTCHINS,] who is better versed in these matters than I am, states that the brokerage is a thirty-second on Government bonds. I am very much obliged to him for the correction. At one-quarter per cent, there would be about one million six hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars for the expenses of preparing, advertising, and disposing of $650,000,000 of bonds. I think that would be adequate; and I submit that those who desire to restrict this allowance to a quarter per cent. ought not to be charged with any purpose to prevent the placing of the loan. We conscientiously think that this allowance will be

Mr. DWIGHT. If one-half per cent, be appropriated and only one-would pay them one-sixteenth or one-thirty-second of 1 per cent. Even supposing we were to pay them one-eighth we would still have money enough to cover the expense of printing.

Mr. DWIGHT. Why not give the Secretary of the Treasury the same amount as he has always had, and allow him a discretion in the

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Because I do not believe the amount he has had is necessary; nor do I believe that he thinks so himself. In my judgment there has been too much liberality in the payment of commission for negotiation of bonds.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I should like to ask the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania whether the Secretary of the Treasury did tleman from Pennsylvania whether the Secretary of the Treasury did not save over one million dollars in placing the 4 per cent. and 4½ per cent. bonds inside of the discretion allowed him by the law?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I would not say he did not, but I do say that the Secretary of the Treasury paid 1 per cent. on $740,000,000 in double interest outside of the one-half per cent. permitted by act of 1870, for preparing, advertising, and disposing of the bonds authorized by that act, which he ought not to have done to that extent.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Qhio. But the gentleman will not deny that what the Secretary of the Treasury did was in exact accordance with the law.

the law.

Mr. CLAFLIN. The Secretary of the Treasury cannot any more do that under the terms of this bill. He has himself stated that a quarter per cent. would not pay for the cost of printing, transportation, and other things connected with the negotiation of the bonds, that that amount would not leave enough to pay such necessary expenses. There is another point. Three hundred millions of certificates are to be issued under $50, and that, of course, will increase the expense of placing the loan. You cannot expect to have business done for nothing. It is useless. What would one-quarter per cent. on a ten years' loan amount to? Not to enough to run any risk.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) If the gentleman has $100,000 to invest, and goes to a broker and says, "I want to buy one hundred thousand dollars' worth of four percents," does not the broker charge him brokerage?

him brokerage

Mr. CLAFLIN. No; brokers never charge buyers, but those they sell for. A broker never charges a man he sells to. The man who buys does not like to pay commissions. It is bad enough for the seller to pay.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) That is the broker who sells, but the broker who buys for you when you give him the order, does he not charge you a brokerage for buying?

Mr. CLAFLIN. Not ordinarily.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) You will find that the seller and buyer both pay commissions.

Mr. CLAFLIN. The man who buys a note does not pay the broker.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) They pay both ways in purchasing

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) They pay both ways in purchasing stocks, I think.

Mr. CLAFLIN. Any man who sells a note always pays the broker in private business, but every gentleman here knows that it is always the man who sells a note who pays, and not the man who buys.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I doubt whether there is an instance to the contrary of what I have stated in the annals of the New York Stock Freehance.

York Stock Exchange.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinos. Mr. Chairman, there are in round numbers $700,000,000 of bonds of the United States bearing 5 and 6 per cent. interest per annum which we have an option to pay by the 30th of June next. The object of this refunding bill is to enable the United States to borrow the money at 3 per cent. interest to pay them. If the bill is enacted into law and the three percents are placed at par it will only be in fact an exchange of the low-interest bonds for the high-interest bonds. This would be a good thing for the Govern-ment, but it would not be a good thing for the holders of existing bonds. To hear gentlemen talk one would suppose the holders of the five and six percents will walk up to the Treasury and for the good five and six percents will walk up to the Treasury and for the good of the country make the exchange, without reference to their own interest. Now, how are you going to compel them to make the exchange? There is but one way, and that is to make it to the interest of individuals to make a market for the three percents by paying a small commission for such services, and then when the ball is fairly started it will roll around with less effort, and the Secretary of the Treasury can probably decrease the commission, as he has heretofore done in refunding. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle] fixes the expenses of preparing, advertising, and disposing of the new bonds at one-fourth of I per cent. a sum, in my disposing of the new bonds at one-fourth of 1 per cent., a sum, in my judgment, too small; I would at least give the Secretary of the Treasury authority to pay one-half of 1 per cent., for the delay in funding these bonds for five weeks only, after our option accrues, would cost us in extra interest upon existing bonds more than the

Mr. DWIGHT. If one-half per cent, be appropriated and only one-quarter per cent. required, will there be any loss to the Government?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I have seen cases where such a discretion has been given and abused. The result is that those who have business with the Treasury Department always demand the maximum rate where such discretion is given.

Mr. DWIGHT. Do you not believe that it would take more than 3 per cent.?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) No; I do not think so. I think we ought to make the negotiation through private bankers and the national banks, of which there are more than two thousand; and I bination have a stake of $12,000,000 per annum in promoting the sale of the proposed bonds. The gentlemen are scared from the wrong of the proposed bonds. The gentlemen are scared from the wrong direction. I trust gentlemen will not strain at a gnat and swallow a camel.

Mr. HILL. The whole contest, Mr. Chairman, in this committee at this time is whether this debt shall be funded at 3 or 3½ per cent. interest. Now, it is contended on the other side of the House that a 3 per cent. bond cannot be floated in the market; that it is a lower rate of interest than any government in the world has been able to secure. In reply to that I say that the credit of this Government is better than that of any other government in the world. But this is no new argument on this floor. When the former funding bill was under discussion here and it was proposed to fund the bonds at 4 per cent. it was claimed that a 4 per cent. bond could not be floated. But to-day, sir, they are 18 per cent. premium-18 per cent. above par.

How do gentlemen know a 3 per cent. bond cannot be floated? I undertake to say there is not a farm in the State of Kansas or in the State of Ohio or anywhere else in the western country which pays 3 per cent. on its real value after the taxes are paid. In a number of western villages and towns the local rate of taxation is from $2\frac{1}{2}$ to $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and in some as high as $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. So that the 3 per cent. bonds would bring more revenue to the holder without taxation than bonds would bring more revenue to the holder without taxation than real estate at 7½ per cent.

It has been stated by the gentleman from New York in his speech on the funding bill in the last session of Congress that the Secretary of the Treasury sold $50,000,000 of 4½ per cent. bonds at par, while 4 per cent. bonds at the same time were selling at a premium. Now, how is it that these syndicates which have the contracts for these purchases can come to the Secretary of the Treasury and badger him so as to require him to sell a bond which bears a lower rate of interest at a higher price than he receives for a bond which bears a higher rate of interest?

Mr. Chairman, we want no banks or syndicates to sell honds for the

Mr. Chairman, we want no banks or syndicates to sell bonds for the Government. Let the Secretary of the Treasury sell them as he did the 4 per cent. bonds, at a premium.

Here the hammer fell.]
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "one quarter of 1 per cent." and insert "one-half of 1 per cent."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I offer an amendment which I think the gentleman from Kentucky will accept.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York. The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "expense," in the amendment, insert the words "preparing, issuing, advertising," &c., so that, if amended as proposed, it will read: "Provided, That the expense of preparing, issuing, advertising, and disposing of the bends and certificates authorized by this act," &c.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. This amendment will make the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky conform to the language of the statute of 1870, and I think he is willing to accept it.

Mr. CARLISLE. I have no objection to the amendment myself.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was then agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The act approved February 26, 1879, authorizing the issue of certificates of deposit, is hereby amended so as to continue and limit the amount of certificates to be issued to $50,000,000 to be outstanding at any one time, and fixing the rate of interest to be allowed thereon at three and one-half of 1 per cent. per annum for one year, after which interest shall cease; and the said certificates shall be convertible, at the option of the holders, when presented in sums of $50 or multiples thereof, into the coupon or registered bonds authorized by this act; and whenever any of the said certificates shall be converted into bonds, the same shall be canceled and destroyed; but the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, issue new certificates in place of those so converted up to the limit of $50,000,000, until the aggregate amount of the bonds authorized by this act and of the said certificates. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to form combinations by which to procure said certificates of deposit authorized under this act, for purposes of sale to others, or for acting as agents of others, and any person so offending shall be liable, on conviction, to be fined $1,000 or imprisoned not to exceed one year. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make suitable regulations in compliance with this act, providing that the expense for the disposing of the certificates and bonds authorized to be issued shall not exceed one-quarter of 1 per cent.: Provided, That said certificates shall not be sold or converted at less than par.

Mr. CARLISLE. I move to strike out the section which has just

Mr. CARLISLE. I move to strike out the section which has just been read and insert the following.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that the first section of this bill, as amended by the committee, increasing the volume of certificates does away very much with the necessity for the provisions of this fourth section. The object of the fourth section is to continue in force the act of 1879 which made provision for the ten-dollar certificates, which certificates it is now proposed to authorize to be concertificates, which certificates it is now proposed to authorize to be converted into bonds drawing the same rate of interest as the bonds now bear. But there are many reasons why this section would be in conflict with what has already been suggested, and therefore I will consent to the substitute presented by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposed substitute will be reported. The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, if in his opinion it shall become necessary, to use not exceeding $50,000,000 of the standard gold and silver coin in the Treasury in the redemption of the 5 and 6 per cent. bonds of the United States authorized to be refunded by the provisions of this act; and he may at any time apply the surplus money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds: Provided, That the bonds so purchased or redeemed shall constitute no part of the sinking fund, but shall be canceled."

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD I move to amend the substitute and I

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move to amend the substitute, and I think the gentleman will accept the amendment, by adding at the end of the section the following words:

Provided, That such certificates shall not be sold or converted at less than par. Provided, That such certificates shall not be sold or converted at less than par.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Chairman, the first section already provides that the certificates authorized to be issued in that section shall not be sold or exchanged at less than par. The clause the gentleman from New York has read applies to the ten-dollar refunding certificates, which I proposes to strike out entirely. The amendment offered by me has two purposes in view. In the first place it provides, as the committee will observe from its reading, that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized—not directed or compelled, but authorized—to use not exceeding $50,000,000 of the standard gold and silver coin in the Treasury in the redemption of the 5 and 6 per cent. bonds authorized to be refunded under the provisions of this act. The purpose of that provision is this: it may be that national banks holding the 5 and 6 per cent. bonds which it is the purpose of Congress to refund will be unwilling to take the 3 per cent. bonds authorized in exchange for them or to purchase the 3 per cent. bonds. In such a case as that the Secretary of the Treasury, armed with the power which the first clause of that amendment confers upon him, may immediately call or designate for redemption any amount of these 5 or 6 per cent. bonds not exceeding $50,000,000, and take them up by the use of that amount of the standard gold and silver coin on hand in the Treasury. This will give him a start in the process of redeeming and refunding under this bill.

This committee has already by a vote of less than a quorum adopted an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama which makes it imperative upon the Secretary of the Treasury to take from the coin belonging to the Government all except $50,000,000 and apply it to the payment or redemption of these bonds. The effect of that provision is to take away from the Treasury every dollar held for the purposes of resumption and over two million dollars of the coin now held thus to redeem outstanding gold and silver Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Chairman, the first section already provides held thus to redeem outstanding gold and silver certificates; and I feel quite sure that when that amendment comes before the House it feel quite sure that when that amendment comes before the House it will not be agreed to. Now, I propose that the committee shall adopt this provision upon that subject, which, of course, can never seriously encroach upon the resumption fund, because it will still leave about 25 per cent., or a sum nearly equal to 25 per cent., of the outstanding legal-tender notes, even if the coin in the Treasury should not increase over and above what it is now.

Mr. CLAFLIN. Ibeg to inform the committee that taking $50,000,000 from $132,000,000 there will not be left any 25 per cent. or 20 per cent. The amount of money in the Treasury belonging to the United States.

The amount of money in the Treasury belonging to the United States on the 12th of this month was less than one hundred and forty million dollars. If you take out $25,000,000 of fractional currency, which is of no use in redemption-

Mr. CARLISLE. I hope this will not come out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] has the floor Mr. CARLISLE. The Secretary of the Treasury in his official report, at the beginning of the present session of Congress, stated that the total amount of coin in the Treasury at the close of business on the 1st day of November last was $218,710,154, of which $141,597,013.61 constituted a reserve for the redemption of United States notes

Mr. CARLISLE. That, of course, does not embrace the coin in the Treasury, for the redemption of outstanding gold and silver certificates, which amounts to $52,000,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman will yield to me I will read the Treasury statement of the present month.

Mr. CARLISLE. I would willingly yield to the gentleman, but there is still another clause of my amendment which I desire to explain before I take my seat, and there will not be time to do so, I fear. As I stated, this was the amount of coin in the Treasury, $141,000,000 ever and above all that is required to redeem the out-$141,000,000 over and above all that is required to redeem the out standing gold and silver certificates, and other coin obligations, and this amendment proposes simply to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to use at his discretion any sum, not exceeding $50,000,000, of that money to start the process of resumption and redemption under this act.

The second clause of the amendment, in my judgment, considering the present state of the law, is absolutely necessary in order to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to take advantage of the surplus money in the Treasury in the payment of the public debt. We are now, I believe, according to the last report of the Secretary of the Treasury, only about fifty million dollars behind the requirements of the sinking fund. Just as soon as the Secretary has paid off a sufficient amount of the public debt to meet all the requirements of the sinking fund, then he will have reached a point where there is no law in force authorizing him to take another dollar out of the Treasury and apply it to the payment or redemption of any part of the public debt. The Constitution declares that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury except in pursuance of an appropriation made by law, and there is now no appropriation except for the interest and sinking

It is estimated that in the fiscal year 1882 there will be a surplus of over ninety million dollars; forty-three million dollars of that amount will belong to the sinking fund under the sinking fund act, leaving nearly fifty million dollars surplus over and above all the requirements of the public service and the requirements of the sinking fund. In the present state of the law the Secretary of the Treasury cannot touch one dollar of that money to pay any debt which may be due from the Government, and therefore the last clause of the amendment provides that he may at any time—at his discretion, of course, having in view the interests of the Government—apply any part of the surplus money in the Treasury to the payment or redemp-tion of outstanding United States bonds; and it seems to me, I repeat, an absolutely necessary provision, considering the fact that a very large surplus will probably accumulate each year for several years to come.

Come.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that his amendment, as I understand from hearing it read, does not cover purchases or payments outside of the sinking fund beyond the bonds now to be redeemed. The Secretary of the Treasury is now behind with the sinking fund, I believe, about fifty millions of dollars. Beyond this he cannot go without authority of law to do so. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky authorizes him to use part of the coin in the Treasury beyond the requirements of the sinking fund in the redemption of 6 per cent. and 5 per cent. bonds. But it does not extend to him authority to pay the bonds and certificates provided for in this act out of any coin in the Treasury beyond the sinking fund, which for the year 1882 will be only about forty-three million dollars.

three million dollars.

Mr. CARLISLE. Will the gentleman please look at the second clause of the amendment as it is now in the hands of the Clerk?

Mr. WARNER. Let it be read again, then; I thought I had listened to it carefully.

Mr. CARLISLE. Let the Clerk read the second clause of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And he may at any time apply the surplus money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds: Provided, That the bonds so purchased or redeemed shall constitute no part of the sinking fund, but shall be canceled.

Mr. WARNER. I take that to refer to the bonds of 1881 only.
Mr. CARLISLE. It refers to any bonds.
Mr. WARNER. Add "certificates," and that will cover it.
Mr. CARLISLE. I ask the Clerk to insert the words "and certificates," because that has been added since I prepared the amend-

Mr. WARNER. There were on the 6th of this month $129,000,000 in coin in the Treasury over and above all current liabilities of the Government, of which about twenty-four million dollars was in sub-Government, or which about twenty-four million dollars was in subsidiary silver coin. This assumes that the money in the Treasury other than coin will offset liabilities to an equal amount and leave the coin as surplus; and the Secretary, of course, may pay current liabilities with any lawful money. The $50,000,000 authorized by the proposed amendment to be paid in excess of the sinking fund would leave about eighty million dollars of coin altogether on hand, an ample fund for all redemption purposes as might easily be shown if in order in this delete. debate.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me in this connection Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me in this connection to state the amount presented for redemption last year? It was $706,658 and to redeem that much annually we hold in the Treasury $141,000,000 of coin. I insist we should pay out all of this coin that is not absolutely necessary for resumption purposes.

Mr. WARNER. I agree that it is not necessary to hold $25,000,000 if you keep the volume of paper down to present limits; but this is too large a question to elucidate in five minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Carlisle.] If his amendment is adopted, will it interfere with the right of the Secretary to refund the ten-dollar certificates into the 3 per cent. bonds we authorize to be ten-dollar certificates into the 3 per cent. bonds we authorize to be

Mr. CARLISLE. It will, because if my amendment is adopted the fourth section of the bill as reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, which provides for funding these ten-dollar certificates, will be stricken out.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. But in the first section of the bill it is provided that these bonds and notes shall be of like character and subject to the same provisions as the bonds under the act of July 14, 1579, which allows the certificates to be funded in 6 per cent. bonds.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman is mistaken about the provisions of the first section of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I merely wish the committee to understand this matter.

Many Members. Vote! Vote!

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Then I move to strike out the last word; and you will get a vote, gentlemen, when I am through speaking. The first section of the bill has this clause in it:

The bonds and notes shall be, in all other respects, of like character and subject to the same provisions as the bonds anthorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and acts amendatory thereto.

That act provided that when certificates were presented in amounts of $50 and their multiples the Secretary of the Treasury could fund them in United States bonds.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman is very much mistaken in regard

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman is very much instance in regard to the act.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Excuse me; I read the wrong part of the section. Then I understand that if this amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is adopted it does away with the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to fund these ten-dollar certificates into 3 per cent. bonds?

Mr. CARLISLE. It does, entirely.

Mr. CARLISLE. It does, entirely.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Let me remind the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Townshend] that the act authorizing the ten-dollar certificates still remains in force; there is nothing in this bill to repeal it. It is not yet fully executed, and the Secretary of the Treasury will still have the power, independent of this bill, to issue the ten-dollar certificates which may be convertible into $50 bonds.
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] do not seem to agree in regard to the effect of this amend-

WOOD] do not seem to agree in regard to the effect of this amendment.

I regard this method of funding the ten-dollar certificates into 3 per cent. bonds as one of the best means of funding those bonds. I believe that provision will popularize the loan and put it within the reach of persons with $10 and upward to obtain interest on their investments. In other words, it will popularize the certificates, and if the bankers and large moneyed men refuse to take these 3 per cent. bonds the people will have the opportunity to come to the relief of the Government. I have no doubt that millions of dollars' worth of bonds will be taken up in that way by the people which otherwise would not be funded. would not be funded.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. CARLISLE, and it was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following:

Sec. 5. From and after the 1st day of July, 1880, the 3½ per cent. bonds authorized by the first section of this act shall be the only bonds receivable as security for national bank circulation.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to correct the phraseology of this section. This bill when first reported and printed provided for fixing the time that this section should go into effect as the 1st of July, 1880. I propose now to amend the section so as to make it read "1881." I propose, also, to amend the section by striking out "3½" and inserting "3" as the percentage of these bonds, and also to insert after the word "bonds" the word "thereafter;" so that it will

From and after the 1st day of July, 1881, the 3 per cent. bonds authorized by the first section of this act shall be the only bonds thereafter receivable as security for national bank circulation.

That will make the section apply to banking security after the 1st of July, 1881, so that those banks then newly organized, or being organized, desiring to change the character of the bonds deposited by them as security for their circulation, will be compelled after that date to take the 3 per cent. bonds provided for in this bill.

date to take the 3 per cent. bonds provided for in this bill.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I move to strike out section 5. For one, I do not believe that this loan can be funded at 3 per cent. I have heard other opinions expressed, but I must say that I do not think there is any one on the floor of this House who has listened to the debate who would be willing to invest in the proposed bonds at 3 per cent. There is no patriotism about this matter. Men will make the best use of their money that they can. If we could fund this loan at 3 per cent, and at the same time we provide in the bill that only these 3 per cent, bonds shall be received as security for national-bank currency, we may find ourselves in this position: that within the coming six months there may be a contraction of the currency to the extent of nearly two hunmay be a contraction of the currency to the extent of nearly two hundred millions of dollars.

Strike out this section and no harm will be done. Try your 3 per cent. loan, and if you do not succeed your 5 and 6 per cent. bonds will still remain. They are not yet due, and you can pay the additional interest for a short time, and it will amount to but little.

Now, if you undertake to fund the 5 and 6 per cent. bonds becoming due in 1881 in 3 per cent. bonds, and assume that you can do it by compelling the banks to deposit them as security for their circulation, you will put yourself in the power of the bankers and the moneyed men of this country, who may bring about a financial revolution. lution.

Such a loan as is here proposed has never been floated. I do not believe it can be. I do not believe that you can find any considerable number of men in our money centers who will say that they believe it can be negotiated. We propose to try an experiment, and we do not propose to leave to the Secretary of the Treasury any discretion to pay 3½ per cent. We propose that the loan shall be placed at 3 per cent, and at the same time call in 5 and 6 per cent, bonds that are now the security for about $200,000,000 of bank circulation, and take the risk of the banks replacing those bonds with the bonds and certificates authorized by this act. I am of the opinion that we ought not to take any such risk.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Chairman, my colleague [Mr. HUTCH-INS] and myself, although both representing a banking, financial, and commercial community, differ very much upon this question. In the first place, I for one, as a member of this House, will never concede the light of the control the right of any moneyed corporation or any combination of capitalists to dictate to the Government of the United States what it shall or shall not do upon the subject of its own credit and its own money. or shall not do upon the subject of its own credit and its own money. I do not believe it is absolutely necessary to take into consideration whether the banks will or will not take these bonds. We are not to be alarmed by threats; we are not to be intimidated by innuendo. No depression of the money market of this country will be made or can be made in consequence of the passage of this bill. On the contrary this measure will strengthen the public credit, and when you strengthen the public credit you strengthen the private credit of the

The banks can make more money (because they have the use of more active capital) by predicating their circulation upon 3 per cent. bonds than by using for this purpose bonds which sell at 113 or 115 in the market. By keeping on deposit as security for their circulation 4 per cent. bonds the banks lock up not only the difference between 90 per cent. of the amount of the bonds and their par value, but also the premium on those bonds, amounting to-day in New York to 134. It is not their interest to keep this amount of capital useless and unprofitable.

I say that we must do that which is right in itself, and the banks will do that which is profitable to them. A profit of hundreds of millions of dollars has fallen into the hands of a few men in consequence of the shameful policy of this Government in humbly beseeching the syndicates and the banks, the capitalists of Europe and New York, to be so kind as to take our 4 and 4½ per cent. bonds. [Applause.] The time has now arrived when "Uncle Sam" is "stalwart," in the language of my friend. This nation stands to-day upon her imperial power. Her resources in the earth and above the earth, in the manly industry and energy of her people, are as ten to one compared with those of any other nation in the world. I for one, in the expiring hours of a public life of forty years, will never consent that this great country shall hawk its credit through the money markets of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. CARLISLE. I move to amend the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York (which is to strike out the fifth section) by inserting what I send to the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is somewhat in doubt as to whether the proposed amendment is in order at this time. To the bill as presented by the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] suggested an amendment; to that the other gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] suggested another amendment.

Mr. HUTCHINS. If it be in order, I withdraw my amendment for the present, in order that the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] may be read.

Mr. CARLISLE. I move to amend by striking out the fifth section and inserting what I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to a point of order. I submit that there was an amendment pending to this section prior to the introduction of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky or the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. But to relieve the Committee of the Whole from embarrassment, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUTCHINS] withdraws temporarily his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri that the amendments presented upon the occasion referred to were presented merely for the information of the House, to the end that they might be published in the RECORD so that members might be advised of the amendments to be offered. They are not now formally before the House. The Clerk will report the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky. [Mr. Carlisle.] mitted by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Carlisle.]
The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 5 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"From and after the 1st day of May, 1881, the 3 per cent. bonds authorized by the first section of this act shall be the only bond receivable as security for national-bank circulation, or as security for the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the public money deposited with such banks; but when any such bonds deposited for the purposes aforesaid shall be designated for purchase or redemption by the Secretary of the Treasury, the banking association depositing the same shall have the right to substitute other issues of the bonds of the United States in lieu thereof: Provided, That no bond upon which interest has ceased shall be accepted or shall be continued on deposit as security for circulation or for the safe-keeping of the public money; and in case bonds so deposited shall not be withdrawn as provided by law within thirty days after interest has ceased thereon, the banking association depositing the same shall be subject to the liabilities and proceedings on the part of the Comptroller provided for in section 5234 of the Revised Statutes of the United States: And provided further, That section 4 of the act of June 20, 1874, entitled 'An act fixing the amount of United States notes, providing for a redistribution of the national bank-currency, and for other purposes,' be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and sections 5159 and 5160 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same are hereby, re-enacted.''

Mr. HATCH. Loffer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. HATCH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri that his amendment at this time is not, in the judgment of the Chair, in order, as two amendments are already pending; and under the rules not more than two can be pending at the same time. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri at a subse-

The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri at a subsequent stage of the proceedings.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I have an amendment which I suppose is not in order at this time; but I wish to give notice that if this amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky should not prevail, I propose to amend the fifth section of the present bill by striking out in the third line the words "the only," and in the fourth line the word "bond," so that the bonds authorized to be issued by this act shall be receivable as security for national-bank notes, but that it shall not be obligatory upon persons desiring to go into the banking-business under the national banking act to deposit this particular class of bonds as security for circulation. My amendment will simply make it lawful for the Treasury Department to receive these bonds as such security.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I had hoped we should conclude this bill to-day in committee and report it back to the House, but as there are so many amendments to be offered I will yield to the motion that the

Mr. DUNNELL. I move the bill as it has been amended be printed in the RECORD in the morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair doubts whether the committee has power to do that. The gentleman had better withhold it till we get into the House.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COVERT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move by unanimous consent the refunding bill as it has been amended, together with the pending amendment of Mr. Carlisle, be printed in the Record.

There was no objection; and the bill as amended in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is as follows:

A bill to facilitate the refunding of the national debt.

A bill to facilitate the refunding of the national debt.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. The bonds and certificates and notes shall be, in all other respects, of like obaracter and subject to the same provisions as the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and acts amendatory thereto: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize an increase of the public debt: Provided further, That before any of the bonds or certificates anthorized by this act are issued it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay on the bonds accruing during the year 1881 all the silver dollars of 412½ grains, and all the gold over and above $50,000,000 now held in the Treasury for notice that the same have been designated by the Secretary of the Treasury for redemption.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in the process of refunding the national debt, to exchange, at not less than par, any of the bonds or certificates herein authorized for any of the bonds of the United States outstanding and uncalled bearing a higher rate of interest than 4½ per cent. per annum; and on the bonds so redeemed the Secretary of the Treasury may allow to the holders the difference between the interest on such bonds from the date of exchange to the time of their maturity, and the interest for a like period on the bonds or certificates issued; but none of the provisions of this act shall apply to the redemption or exchange of any of the bonds issued to the Pacific railway companies; and the bonds so received and exchanged in pursuance of the provisions of this act shall be canceled and destroyed.

SEC. 3. Authority to issue bonds and certificates to the amount necessary to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby granted, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to make suitable rules and regulations to carry this act into effect: Provided, That the expenses of preparing, issuing, advertising, and disposing of the bonds and certificates authorized to be issued shall not exceed one-quarter of 1 per cent.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, if in his opinion it shall become necessary, to use not exceeding $50,000,000 of the standard gold and silver coin in the Treasury in the redemption of the 5 and 6 per cent. bonds of the United States, authorized to be refunded by the provisions of this act; and he may at any time apply the surplus mency in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds or certificates: Provided, That the bonds and certificates so purchased or redeemed shall constitute no part of the sinking fund, but shall be canceled.

SEC. 5. From and after the 1st day of July, 1880, the 3½ per cent. bonds authorized by the first section of this act shall be the only bonds receivable as security for national-bank circulation.

FREEDMAN'S BANK BUILDING.

Mr. BRUCE. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill No.

Mr. BRUCE. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill No. 1581, which was under consideration on Friday last.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1581) authorizing and directing the purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the public use, the property known as the Freedman's Bank and the real estate and parcels of ground adjacent thereto belonging to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and located on Pennsylvania avenue, between Fifteenth and Fifteenth-and-a-half streets, Washington, District of Columbia; the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. INGALLS to insert after the word "Company," in line 9, the words "being 186 feet and 10 inches on Pennsylvania avenue by 136 feet on Fifteenth-and-a-half street."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. These are descriptive words to which the Chair hears no objection, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BRUCE. 1 offer the following amendment on line 9—

Mr. MORRILL. Itake it, if the Senator from Mississippi will allow me, that what he desires is to substitute the amendment he proposes for the one pending.

for the one pending.

Mr. INGALLS. I think perhaps, as the Senator from Mississippi has a more accurate description, that the amendment I offered had better be by unanimous consent withdrawn and that offered by the Senator from Mississippi substituted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment of the Senator from Kansas is withdrawn.

Mr. BRUCE. In line 9, after the word "Company," I move to insert:

Known and described in the original deed of conveyance to the said Freedman's Savings and Trust Company as the west half of lot numbered 3, all of lots numbered 4, 5, 6, and 7, and the south half of lot numbered 8, in square numbered 221, as laid out and recorded on the original plat or plan of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment?
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection; but still that amendment does not give the frontage on either of the streets. I think the amendment of the Senator from Kansas would do very well. While the amendment or the Senator from Kansas would do very well. While the amendment now offered names the lots, perhaps no one here unless it is the Senator from Mississippi is able to tell what lots they are, how much they front, or whether the corner on Fifteenth-and-a-half street and Pennsylvania avenue is included. That is the only objection I have to it. If there is no objection, the language giving the number of feet on the two streets in the amendment which the Senator from Kansas first offered can also be inserted.

Mr. BRUCE. I desire the Secretary to read the letter I send to the desk, which I have received from one of the commissioners.

Mr. BRUCE. I desire the Secretary to read the letter I send to the desk, which I have received from one of the commissioners. I think it is an answer to the question of the Senator from West Virginia.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY, Washington, D. C., January 15, 1881.

SIR: In compliance with your verbal request to be furnished with an accurate description of the property of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, referred to in Senate bill No. 1581, we have the honor to inform you that said property consists of the west half of lot numbered 3, all of lots numbered 4, 5, 6, 7, and the south half of lot numbered 8, in square numbered 221, as laid out and recorded on the original plat or plan of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and is so described in the original deed of conveyance to the said Freedman's Savings and Trust Company. It has a frontage of 186 feet 10 inches on Pennsylvania avenue and of 136 feet on Fifteenth-and-a-half street, opposite Lafayette Square, and contains an aggregate of 23,1213 square feet of ground.

On Fifteen-and-a-half street the property extends back from Pennsylvania avenue to the building now occupied by the Commissary Department. The bank building proper occupies but 62 feet 6 inches of the Pennsylvania avenue front.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. H. T. LEIPOLD,

Of the Commission.

Hon. B. K. Bruce, United States Senate.

United States Senate.

Mr. THURMAN. The description in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi is a perfectly accurate and all-sufficient description. I think we might run a risk perhaps by undertaking to give the number of feet. For instance, I notice that the letter gives the number of feet, so many on Pennsylvania avenue, and so many on Fifteen-and-a-half street, but I have a very strong impression that the depth where the bank building is is greater than it is on Fifteen-and-a-half street. At all events, the description in the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi is absolutely perfect, because the number of feet front on Pennsylvania avenue and on Fifteen-and-a-half street and the number of superficial feet in the whole and-a-half street and the number of superficial feet in the whol-body of land are ascertainable in a moment by looking at the plat of the city, and that is certain which can be rendered certain. I think, therefore, we had better take that amendment, and not attempt to specify the number of feet, for we might possibly fall into

Mr. DAWES. There is one other difficulty. If you insert in the bill so many feet on Pennsylvania avenue, the street on which the bank fronts technically and accurately is not Pennsylvania avenue; it is G street. Pennsylvania avenue, on the city plan, goes through the Treasury Department and comes out beyond the War Department, but the street fronting the Executive Mansion, between Fifteenth and Seventeenth streets, goes by the name, in common parlance, of "Pennsylvania avenue," because Pennsylvania avenue goes around

I think what the Senator from Ohio says should be followed. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had such a bill in the last Congress, and they took particular pains not to fix it so many feet, for it is not safe to compel the proper officer to take a deed of so many feet or not take any at all. He may be found unable in the end to take a deed at all, because there may be a variance of a foot or

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I notice in the letter that was read that the total number of square feet is given, and I think that would obviate the objection that I made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BRUCE.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OWNERS OF BARK MARY TERESA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the Calendar, commencing at the point reached at the last call.

The bill (H. R. No. 2262) for the relief of Juliet Leef, widow, and the heirs of Henry Leef, deceased, owner of the bark Mary Teresa, illegally seized by Alexander H. Tyler, consul of the United States at Bahia, Brazil, was announced as being the first in order upon the Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. That was reported adversely.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was reported adversely from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. It goes over under the rule.
Mr. GROOME. I will say to the Senator from Illinois that the bill was taken up on Friday last, and the reading of the report was nearly finished, as I understand, and no objection was then made, or rather the objection made was withdrawn.
Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I simply say that under the rule we were only considering bills to which there is no objection, and those reported adversely of course are objected to. Mr. HOAR. What is the bill?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The bill the Senator from Massachusetts-

Mr. DAVIS, or linkois. The bill the Schaeof Total Adversely.
Mr. HOAR. I think that the bill had better not be taken up.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is objected to.
Mr. HOAR. The minority report has been only about one-third read through. I had no idea when I called for its reading the other read through. I had no idea when I called for its reading the other day that it was so long. It would take all the rest of the morning hour to read the report, and we should make no progress.

Mr. WITHERS. There is no objection to the bill going over under the Anthony rule, because it is manifest it would be objected to, but I object to its being indefinitely postponed.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I did not mean that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill remains on the Calendar.

GENERAL E. O. C. ORD.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I beg to ask the Senate by unanimous consent to take up Senate bill No. 1922, for the relief of General Ord. It will require no time at all. The bill was passed over the other day with the understanding that at a convenient season the Senate would take it up and consider it. I am quite sure it will lead to no discussion. I hope the Senate by unanimous consent will take up the bill.

Mr. GROOME. I do not think I yielded the floor. I wish to retain the floor into the many consents.

tain the floor just to make one suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair supposed the Senator from Maryland rose to make a suggestion to the Senator from Illinois. He had not recognized him.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought I had

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island has the floor and asks the Senate to consider out of its order at this time the

By unanimous consent, the Senate, 28 in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (8. No. 1922) for the relief of Brigadier-General and Brevet Major-General Edward O. C. Ord, United States Army. It authorizes the President to place him on the retired list of major-generals according to his brevet rank, with the pay and emoluments of a major-general of the United States Army on the retired list. retired list.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was adopted.

YORKTOWN MONUMENT COMMISSION.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 137) to create a commission for the per-formance of certain duties under the act of Congress providing for the erection of a monument at Yorktown and the proposed centennial celebration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It appoints John W. Johnston, of Virginia; E. H. Rollins, of New Hampshire; Henry L. Dawes, of Massachusetts; H. B. Anthony, of Rhode Island; W. W. Eaton, of Connecticut; W. A. Wallace, of Pennsylvania; Francis Kernan, of New York; T. F. Randolph, of New Jersey; Thomas F. Bayard, of New York; T. F. Randolph, of New Jersey; Thomas F. Bayard, of North Carolina; M. C. Butler, of South Carolina; Benjamin H. Hill, of Georgia; John Goode, of Virginia; Joshua G. Hall, of New Hampshire; George B. Loring, of Massachusetts; Nelson W. Aldrich, of Rhode Island; Joseph R. Hawley, of Connecticut; Samuel. B. Dick, of Pennsylvania; Lewis A. Brigham, of New Jersey; Nicholas Muller, of New York; Edward L. Martin, of Delaware; J. Fred. C. Talbott, of Maryland; Joseph J. Davis, of North Carolina; John S. Richardson, of South Carolina, and Henry Persons, of Georgia, a commission with full power and authority to discharge all the duties and perform all the functions which were devolved upon them as a joint committee of thirteen Senators and thirteen Representatives under the actof Congress approved June 7, 1880, entitled "An act to carry into effect the resolution of Congress adopted entitled "An act to carry into effect the resolution of Congress adopted on the 29th of October, 1781, in regard to a monumental column at Yorktown, Virginia, and for other purposes."

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment,

DOCUMENTS FOR SOLDIERS' HOMES.

Mr. INGALLS. The regular order.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the call of the Calendar.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1573) to amend section 4837 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Printing with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That section 4837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed and re-enacted to read as follows: "The Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall cause to be sent to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Dayton, in Ohio, and to the branches at Augusta, in Maine; Milwaukee, in Wisconsin; Hampton, in Virginia; and the Soldiers' Home at Knightstown Springs, near Knightstown, in Indiana, each, one copy of each of the following documents: The Journals of each House of Congress at each and every session; all laws of Congress; the annual messages of the President, with accompanying documents; the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and all other documents or books which may be printed and bound by order of either House of Congress; and the Public Printer is hereby authorized and directed to furnish to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives the documents referred to in this section."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Printing report to amend the title so as to read, "A bill to repeal and re-enact section 4837 of the Revised Statutes."

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the title by substituting the following: "A bill to provide for the furnishing certain public documents to Soldiers' Homes." I think the practice of passing bills by merely referring in the title to certain sections of the Revised Statutes is a vicious one

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to amend the title as he has stated.

The motion was agreed to.

SHAWNEE INDIAN FUNDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the call of the Calendar.

the Calendar.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1631) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to convert into cash certain bonds held in trust for the Shawnee Indians. It directs the Treasurer of the United States to convert into cash bonds amounting to $4,835.65, "United States funded loan of 1881," held in trust for the benefit of the Shawnee Indians, the proceeds thereof to be placed to their credit on the books of the Treasury Department, which, with the accrued interest thereon now standing to their credit on the books of the Treasury, is to be paid to them per capita, through the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any written report?

Mr. INGALLS. There is no written report. These bonds are in the Treasury subject to redemption. There are eighty of the Shawnee Indians located in the Indian Territory at the Quapaw agency. They are all engaged in agriculture, and are semi-civilized. The bill has the approbation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and it is upon their recommendation and the information before them that the committee reported favorably for the distribution of this fund. It will amount to about fifty dollars the distribution of this fund. It will amount to about fifty dollars apiece, and will, as the committee believe, be appropriated for the benefit of the Indians in that way.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 626) for the relief The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 626) for the relief of the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal Company; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to investigate the claim of the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal Company for tolls on vessels transporting naval supplies, and to award such sum as he may find equitably due, not to exceed $3,742.20; the award being in full payment of all claims of the company conjunct the Covernment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report there?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Let the report be read, if there is one.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. Mc-PHERSON April 14, 1880:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 626) for the relief of the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal Company, report the same for the favorable consideration of the Senate. The committee have adopted the report made by the Committee on Naval Affairs, February 6, 1878, as expressive of its views. The same is hereby submitted:

"[Senate report 74, Forty-fifth Congress, second session.]

"The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred the memorial and bill presented by the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal Company, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

"This subject was duly considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, and a bill was favorably reported to and passed by the Senate but failed to pass the House of Representatives. The reasons which governed that committee seem equally cognent now, and this committee adopts the reasoning of the former report, as follows:

"The Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal Company, as disclosed by the papers, was in process of construction when the war broke out. Much of its capital stock and all of its bonds were held by a Mr. Cartwright and other northern capitalists. When the Government forces obtained possession of that country between Elizabeth River and Albemarle Sound, after many propositions for the United States to advance money to open the canal and keep it in order, all of which failed, the bondholders put it in condition for use, and it was largely used by the War Department, and tolls duly paid by agreement. In October, 1852, a specific contract was made, by which the United States was to allow the present rates on tonnage of vessels and boats in full, less 10 per cent, for all troops, &c.

"The canal company was paid on the Government vessels up to March, 1863. The use of the canal by vessels in the service of the Navy Department (Inpon which the present claim is founded) was not considered by the War Department The canal company now claim as due from the Navy Department, and sounded was not considered by the War Department The canal company now claim as due from the Navy Department, and nacount of the actod for the canal by vessels in the service of the Navy Department (The canal company now claim as due from the Navy Department, for tolls, from Jannary 10, 1864, to July 27, 1866, the sum Commissary-General of Subsistence to examine similar claims, but which have conferred no such power on the Navy Department. While the passage of the act before cited did not, in the opinion of the committee, preclude the Navy Department from passing upon this claim and having it paid, (its correctness being easily verified by the records of that Department,) yet, for the purpose of relieving the case of all difficulty, the committee report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES IN THE DISTRICT.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 676) to amend class 2 of the general incorporation laws of the District of Columbia; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It amends sections 533, 534, 536, 537, 541, and 542 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, by inserting, after the words "society or congregation," wherever they occur, the words "or duly constituted authority of the church or religious organization of which such society or congregation forms a part," and in section 537 by striking out, in the fifth line, after the word "trustees," the words "whose term of service shall have expired," and inserting instead thereof the words "so elected."

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any report with the bill?

instead thereof the words "so elected."

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any report with the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is none.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some explanation of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was reported by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.]

Mr. INGALLS. This bill is rendered necessary in the judgment of the committee in consequence of the peculiar forms of church government that are used by sundry ecclesiastical denominations in this city. The general terms employed in the statute did not include the case of one or two church organizations in consequence of their peculiar form of government, and the amendment is rendered necessary to include those. The bill was originally offered by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] who probably is more familiar with the subject than I am, and if any further explanation is necessary I presume he can afford it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The statement of the Senator from Kansas is sume he can afford it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The statement of the Senator from Kansas is correct. The provision of law at present does not apply to certain denominations, especially to the Methodist Church. The law as it now stands provides that the congregation shall elect trustees. The trustees are not elected by the congregation in the Methodist Church, but by the official board of the church; consequently they cannot act under the law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATE NATIONAL BANK OF LOUISIANA.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 633) for the relief of the State National Bank of Louisiana.

Mr. INGALLS. There is an adverse report in that case.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over under objec-

SALES OF LEAF-TOBACCO.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1592) to repeal so much of the sixth clause of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as prohibits farmers and planters from selling leaf-to-bacco at retail directly to consumers without the payment of a special tax, and to allow farmers and planters to sell leaf-to-bacco of their own production to other persons than manufacturers of to-bacco without special tax.

Mr. INGALLS. There is an adverse report in that case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LANDS IN PLATTE COUNTY, MISSOURI.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 308) to confirm title to certain lands in Platte County, Missouri, and authorize patents to be issued therefor to Kinsey B. Cecil; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Public Lands propose to amend the bill, in line 5, after the word "to," by striking out "Kinsey B. Cecil;" so as to

And that patents are hereby authorized to be issued for said described lands to be assignee of said George Smith and Joseph Meyer.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I know nothing of this bill, never heard of it be-fore; but it does not contain the usual clause that I think such bills ought to contain, a proviso that nothing herein contained shall prejudice the rights, legal or equitable, of any third person.

Mr. PLUMB. It will be entirely satisfactory to the committee to have such an amendment made.

Mr. THURMAN. I move that as a proviso to the bill-

Provided, That nothing in this bill shall affect the rights, legal or equitable, of any third person.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no right of any third person, but there is no objection to the amendment; it is entirely useless.

Mr. THURMAN. It can certainly do no harm.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WITHERS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The Committee on Public Lands proposed to amend the preamble by striking out the word "ninth," where it occurs, and inserting "fifth."

The amendment was agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill to confirm the title to certain lands in Platte County, Missouri, and authorize patents to be issued therefor to the assignee of George Smith and Joseph Meyer.

MARGARET B. FRANKS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1203) for the relief of Margaret B. Franks, sole heir-at-law of Thomas L. Franks, of Green Bay, Wisconsin, deceased.

Mr. INGALLS. Let that go over, there being an adverse report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will TOBACCO PURCHASES FOR THE NAVY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4477) to regulate the mode of purchasing tobacco for the United States Navy; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Navy to cause all purchases of tobacco for the use of the Navy to be made in the city of Washington, as follows: for the use of the Navy to be made in the city of Washington, as follows: In the month of February or March of each year the Secretary of the Navy is to cause proposals for bids for supplying the Navy with tobacco during the next year to be advertised thirty days in one daily newspaper in each of the cities of New York, Baltimore, Richmond, Lynchburgh, Petersburgh, Danville, Saint Louis, Louisville, Nashville, Hartford, Connecticut, Detroit, Cairo, Illinois, Rochester, New York, and Chicago; the tobacco to be manufactured during the months of June, July, August, and September; the bids to be accompanied by samples of the tobacco which each bidder may propose to furnish. The lowest bid for furnishing tobacco equal to the United States Navy standard now in use shall be accepted.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with the United States Navy standard now in use shall be accepted.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments. The first amendment was, in line 10, after "New York," to insert "Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any report with the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no written report.

Mr. VANCE. The only object of the amendments is to distribute the advertising more equally throughout the tobacco-growing regions.

The next amendment reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs was, in line 11, after the word "Richmond," to strike out "Lynchburgh, Petersburgh, Danville," and insert "Raleigh, North Carolina."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 13, after the word "Illinois," to strike out "Rochester, New York."

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH G. AYRES.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 867) for the relief of Joseph G. Ayres, a surgeon in the United States Navy.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. That is reported adversely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. FERRY. I suggest that the Ayres bill be indefinitely postponed to get it off the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan moves the indefinite postponement of Senate bill No. 867.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The bill (S. No. 82) extending the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad was announced as being the next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER. Let that go over.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

WORKS OF ART FOR THE CAPITOL.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1659) to provide for the purchase and preservation of works of art for the Capitol.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] who reported that bill is not here. Let it be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over without prejudice, in the absence of the Senator who reported it, unless there be objection.

Mr. VOORHEES subsequently said: I ask that Senate bill No. 1659 be indefinitely postponed. The matter contained in it is embraced in an appropriation bill passed at the last Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves that Senate bill No. 1659, which was passed over informally, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

ANDREW T. M'REYNOLDS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1006) for the relief of Andrew T. McReynolds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is reported adversely.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be indefinitely postponed, because of the recommendation of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

TEXAS AND PACIFIC RAILWAY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1283) to extend the time for the completion of the Texas and Pacific Railway.

FORTS READING AND CROOK MILITARY RESERVATIONS.

The bill (S. No. 1487) to restore the lands included in the Fort Reading military reservation, in the State of California, to the public domain, and for other purposes, was announced as being the next in order on the Calendar, and the Senate proceeded to its consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any printed report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is none.

Mr. PLUMB. I can state the case, and perhaps the Senator from Missouri will recall the circumstances. There is a reservation known as the Fort Reading military reservation in California. No record of it was ever made. In the absence of records the lands were supposed to be public lands, and as such subject to entry, and parties went on and entered portions of the lands. Prior to the issuing of patents for all the lands entered, the Land Office discovering that it was a military reservation, that it had been so designated in some way, though there was no recerd of how it was designated, suspended the issuance of further patents, and directed the cancellation of the remaining patents. The land is not now nor has it ever been used for military purposes at all. This bill is simply to remove the cloud from the title to it and permit the persons who have made entries to have those entries perfected, and persons who have had patents issued to them to retain the same. There is somewhere in the papers a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office which states, very succinctly but satisfactorily, all the facts in the case.

Mr. BOOTH. I have an amendment to offer. The lands in the Fort Crook military reservation are in precisely the same position. I have a letter from the War Department recommending the passage of the bill to include the land also in the Fort Crook reservation. My amendment is, in line 4, after the word "reservation," to insert "and in the Fort Crook military reservation;" so as to make the clause read:

That the lands included in the Fort Reading military reservati

That the lands included in the Fort Reading military reservation and in the Fort Crook military reservation, in the State of California, are hereby restored to the public domain.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Now I should like to hear the letter of the Secretary on that subject read. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Washington City, December 17, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose copy of my letter of 30th April last to Hon. W.

A. J. Sparks, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives, recommending the passage of House bill No. 5280, "to restore the lands-included in Fort Reading and Fort Crook military reservations, in the State of California, to the public domain, and for other purposes." I also inclose copy of the Adjutant-General's report of April 21, 1880, which was transmitted with said letter.

I still adhere to my recommendation of the 30th of April, that the bill be passed. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALEX. RAMSEY, Secretary of War.

Hon. NEWTON BOOTH, United States Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. BOOTH. Now I move in line 2 of section 2, after the word "reservation," to insert "and Fort Crook military reservation;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That 2ll patents heretofore issued to any lands within the Fort Reading military reservation and Fort Crook military reservation are hereby confirmed.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. BOOTH. In line 2 of section 3 I move to make the word "reservation" read "reservations," in the plural.

JAMES M. BACON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 758) for the relief of James M. Bacon; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to credit James M. Bacon, late lieutenant of the First Regiment Dakota Cavalry Volunteers, in the settlement of his accounts with the United States, $5,950, disbursed by him as acting assistant quartermaster on account of the expenses incurred by the northwest Indian expedition, in the months of July, August, September, October, and November, 1864, and for the disbursement of which proper vouchers were taken, but which were lost or destroyed through no fault or neglect of the

for the relief of James M. Bacon, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

That in the month of June, 1804, Brevet Major-General Alfred Sally, in command of the first district of the military Department of the Northwest, organized an expedition against the bostile Sioux Indians in the Upper Missouri River country. About

Mr. EDMUNDS. This bill decides this whole case and directs the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow this sum. I think, according to the course that is usually pursued, the safer proceeding will be to authorize the accounting officers, if in their opinion justice requires it, to make this allowance; and therefore I move in line 4 to strike out the words "and directed" after "anthorized" and to insert "if in their opinion justice requires it;" and then to make the rest of the hill harmonic is in the course of the hill harmonic in the course of the co the bill harmonize, in line 8 to strike out the word "having" and insert "it is alleged has," and in line 13 after the word "which" insert "it is alleged," so as to put the recital in the form of an allega-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Committee on Military Affairs recommend an amendment which will be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendments of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know but that the amendments of the Senator from Vermont will leave the bill in a satisfactory shape. The bill was reported in its present condition because the proof before the committee was of the most satisfactory kind; in fact, of the very highest kind. I presume the same proof of course will satisfy the officers of the Treasury Department, and perhaps as a matter of precaution it would be as well to guard it in that way.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing of 2,500 copies of the report of the health officer of the District of Columbia; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. No. 2963) for the relief of James D. Grant;

A bill (H. R. No. 2658) to regulate the award of and compensation for public advertising in the District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 358) appropriating $2,500 to meet the expenses of the international sanitary conference invited to meet in Washington on the 1st of January, 1881.

BEN. HOLLADAY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WITHERS in the chair.) The morning hour having expired, the Senate resumes the consideration of its unfinished business, which is the bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben. Holladay.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I move to lay aside the pending and all prior orders, in order to take up the resolutions reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, in reference to the right o a seat of the sitting member from Louisiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware moves that the pending and all prior orders be set aside for the purpose of taking up the resolutions he has indicated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is not any such motion in the rules, Mr. President, as to lay aside a thing, and I make the point of order that the motion is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move, then, to postpone the present and all

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware moves prior orders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware moves to postpone the present and all prior orders.

Mr. VOORHEES. What is the purpose?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the purpose of taking up the resolutions reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I hope that motion will not prevail. The bill for the relief of Ben. Holladay has been under consideration in the Senate for some time, and I think the Senate is about ready to dispose of it. I have no doubt that it can be disposed of within an hour or two. If it is postponed now, the probability is that it cannot be taken up again during this present session, and when the bill comes up hereafter this whole matter will have to be gone over again.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not desire to antagonize the business in charge of any other Senator; but I am instructed by the committee of which I am chairman to ask the Senate to take up and dispose of the resolutions to which I have referred. I have waited in deference to the views of other parties who wished to forward certain legislation. There is no question, in the opinion of the committee, more important than that to which I desire to invite the attention of the Senate. While I do not wish to antagonize Mr. Holladay's case or Mr. Anybody else's case, I cannot, in view of the duty which I owe to the committee of which I am chairman, consent to longer postpone calling the attention of the Senate to this important matter.

Mr. THURMAN. I rise merely to inquire whether this is a motion to postfore a day certain or to vesterous indefinitals.

Mr. THURMAN. I rise merely to inquire whether this is a motion to postpone to a day certain, or to postpone indefinitely. A motion to postpone does not amount to anything, but it must be a motion to postpone to some time or to postpone indefinitely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion was simply made to.

Mr. THURMAN. That means a motion to postpone until to-morrow, in parliamentary language, I suppose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the usual construction.

Mr. THURMAN. This, then, is a motion to postpone until tomorrow?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I would suggest to the Senator from Delaware that if the Holladay bill which has been under consideration for several days is likely to be disposed of in anything like the time suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, or even during the day, it would hardly be advisable to antagonize it. It might be well to let it go on, and if it can be disposed of to-day, it will be out of the way. Mr. HOAR. I desire to make known to the Senator from Georgia and to the Senator from Delaware a fact of which I have just been informed, and that is, that on applying at the document-room for the report and evidence in the Kellogg case it turns out that there is no copy of the report and evidence there, so that Senators cannot have the evidence if they desire to refer to it to-day; and even the copy of the report, which is usually bound and placed in the Library, has gone to the binder's. So the Senate will be obliged if it take up this case to postpone it again because the evidence which Senators would gone to the binder's. So the Senate will be obliged if it take up this case to postpone it again because the evidence which Senators would desire to consult is not within reach. I suppose an order for the reprinting of that report would bring it in to-morrow morning.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I would yield to the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia most cheerfully if I had any idea that the Holladay case could be disposed of to-day; but I hear gentlemen around me say that there is no telling when we shall get to the close of the question. I understand it will take at least a week to get it disposed of. I cannot, therefore, with that information, yield to the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia. It appears very certain that we shall not get through the Holladay case to-day, and the probability is we shall not reach the conclusion of it before the end of the week, if at all. I therefore, acting under the instruction of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, must ask the Senate to take up and consider the resolutions reported from that committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware.

Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask for a division of the motion. The motion, I understand, is to lay aside the Holladay case and take up the resolutions indicated.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. No; for the purpose of taking up the resolutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is simply a motion to postpone, to be followed by a motion to take up.

Mr. INGALLS. Do I understand the Chair to rule that the motion

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the motion before the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. And if that motion carries, the unfinished business will come up again to-morrow? I understand the Chair to rule upon the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio that the parliamentary effect of the motion to postpone was to postpone until the following day.

I do not so understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the usual parliamentary construction of a motion of that character, the Chair decided.

Mr. INGALLS. I should doubt its correctness. My understanding is that where a bill is postponed it comes up again whenever it is called up by a vote of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At all times it is in the power of the Senate to take up anything.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I understand that would be the effect of the motion. If the motion made by the Senator from Deleffect of the motion. If the motion made by the Senator from Delaware prevails, to-morrow any Senator, if there be a regular order at that time, can move to postpone the present and all prior orders, and indicate his purpose to take up this Holladay bill; but it cannot be taken up without an affirmative vote of the Senate. So I think the impression of the Chair is not quite correct; that the effect of it would merely be to postpone the consideration of the Holladay bill until to-morrow. That is the effect of it so far as that is concerned; but it would not come up at that time without an affirmative vote of but it would not come up at that time without an affirmative vote of the Senate to take it up.

Mr. INGALLS. Under the forty-third rule a motion to postpone cannot be made. The motion must be either "to postpone to a day certain" or "to postpone indefinitely." The rules do not recognize a simple motion to postpone. I will read the forty-third rule, which defines the motions that can be made when a question is pending:

When a question is pending no motion shall be received but-

To adjourn, To adjourn to a day certain, or that when the Senate adjourn, it shall be to a day To adjourn to a day certain, or that when the Senate ad certain.

To take a recess,
To proceed to the consideration of executive business,
To lay on the table,
To postpone indefinitely,
To postpone to a day certain,
To commit,
To amend.

To amend ;

which several motions shall have precedence in the order in which they stand ar-

Therefore, the motion submitted by the Senator from Delaware is not one that can be entertained by the Chair under the rule. The Senator must, if he desires to get rid of the unfinished business of the Senate, move either to postpone it till a day certain to be named an his motion, or to postpone it indefinitely.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The usual form, I understand, has always been to move to postpone without naming a day to which the subject is postponed, to postpone the pending and prior orders with a view of taking up a particular motion without any reference to the day to which it is postponed. Such, according to my observation, has been the invariable practice of the Senate. I think, therefore, that the motion I have made is perfectly in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, will the Chair be kind enough to state precisely the motion that the Senator from Delaware makes, and which the Chair entertains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Delaware to make the following motion, and so announced: to postpone the consideration of the pending and all prior orders, the purpose being to subsequently move to take up the resolutions reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, Mr. President, I make the point of order that that is in violation of the forty-third rule of the Senate, which declares that when a question is pending no motion shall be received but those stated by the Senator from Kansas, and therefore a motion to postpone, stopping there, is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken; but he would say also that the motion made by the Senator from Delaware is one which is repeatedly made, and in that form, and the Chair constantly rules that it is in order because there is abundant precedent to sustain it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Then I understand there is no motion before the Senate, and I ask that the unfinished business be pro-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order—

Mr. SAULSBURY. Am I to understand the Chair to decide that the motion I made is not in order?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Then I move to lay the pending order on the table, with a view of taking up the resolutions I have intimated. That will not affect the bill, but it can be called up at any subsequent will be the effect of this motion. What will become of the bill? Can it be taken up at any time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Should the motion prevail the bill will go on the table, subject to be taken up by a vote.

Mr. INGALLS. Like any other bill on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; it does not stand like a bill on the Calendar. It is taken off the Calendar and put on the table.

Mr. WALLACE. I understand the effect of this motion is simply to lay on the table the Holladay bill, from which position a majority vote of the Senate can call it at any time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the bill resume a place on the Calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not on the Calendar, but on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not on the Calendar, but on the table.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, does the Chair hold that the Holladay bill can be called up at any time? Does it not stand, if it be laid on the table, like any other matter, requiring an express vote of the Senate to displace by it any pending order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is exactly what the Chair has announced that the effect of an affirmative vote on the motion pending would be, to lay the Holladay bill on the table subject to be taken up by a vote of the Senate at any time upon motion.

Mr. HOAR. At any time when a motion to take it up is in order? The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is it.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll on the motion of Mr. SAULSBURY, that the bill lie on the table.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, (when his name was called.) Upon this question, and all political questions for to-day, I am paired with the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

Mr. MORGAN, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON.] If he were here, I should vote "ay."

Mr. PLUMB, (when his name was called.) I am paired on political questions with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.] If he were present, I should vote "no."

ical questions with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.] If he were present, I should vote "no."

The calling of the roll was concluded.

Mr. ANTHONY. I desire to state that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPherson] are both absent and paired on this question.

Mr. COKE. I am paired with the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. Jones.] If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McDONALD. I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER.] I should vote "yea" if he were present.

The result was announced-yeas 20, nays 34; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I believe the Senator from New York [Mr. Conkling] is entitled to the floor on the pending question. If so, I desire to obtain his permission to ask unanimous consent of the Senate to make House bill No. 5541 the special order for next Friday. I reported it from the Committee on the District of Columbia, it being a bill to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia, If the Senate will consent to give Friday and Saturday to its consideration, I am satisfied that the bill can be considered within that time, unless it leads to very much more debate than I think it probably

Mr. HOAR. It is impossible to hear the Senator from Tennessee in this part of the Hall.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to make House bill No. 5541 to establish a municipal code for the District of House bill No. 5541 to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia the special order for next Friday. It is important to the people of the District that the bill should be passed in some form. It is a bill of three hundred and forty or three hundred and fifty pages; and if the Senate will consent to give Friday and Saturday, I am satisfied the bill may be passed in those two days.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I have no wish to object to any request made by the Senator from Tennessee; but I suggest to the Senator that it is not wise for him, for the bill, or for the Senate, to make just now a special stipulation about whatshall become of Friday next. If we dispose of the pending bill now the regular order, it will give the Senator the right of way against everything I can think of except appropriation bills; very likely he would not care to anticipate appropriation bills, if he could; whereas if a special order is made now, on Friday next it is just possible—I know it is not true with the Senator—that those who are opposed to the final consideration of the Holladay bill might fight, as a great general once did, for sundown or the arrival of somebody else; it is possible that the Holladay bill might be contested in order that it should go over and encounter this special order of the Senate.

or the arrival of somebody else; it is possible that the Holladay bill might be contested in order that it should go over and encounter this special order of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator will allow me to say that in making my request I had assumed that the Holladay bill would have been disposed of before that time.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope the Senator is right.

Mr. HARRIS. And I had consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, of course having no intent of antagonizing an appropriation bill; but I will withdraw my request, and give notice that I will on Friday next ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill that I have mentioned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben. Holladay is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the question pending being on the amendment of the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN,] on which the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator from New York will yield me the floor for an explanation. I was out of the Senate Chamber when a vote was taken just now on the motion to lay the Holladay bill, as it is called, upon the table and to take up the Kellogg case. If I had been in the Senate I should have voted for that motion.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I did wish and I do wish to assign, in part at least, my reasons for a strong conviction that it is the duty of the Senate to act promptly and finally in this case. Believing as I do that Mr. Holladay has not only a just and meritorious, but a long and not creditably neglected claim against the Government, I believe it would be unworthy the Senate now to turn him away to the Court of Claims where long ago he sought to go and where the Senate, by a unanimous vote, one in which nobody dissented, said he Court of Claims where long ago he sought to go and where the Senate, by a unanimous vote, one in which nobody dissented, said he ought not to go, but should remain here and be tried by the action of a committee which has now been taken under the direction of the is of the utmost importance, not only important to this bill and to this claimant, but to all bills which are to be acted upon if we are to avoid an extra session; and therefore by me shall be taken not one moment of the Senate's time. I think this bill should pass. I wish to vote upon it, and I shall hold that my vote, rather than anything I can say, is the expression of any duty which rests upon me.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I desire to say a word in regard to this claim before the matter is finally passed upon, either now or at some other time, and perhaps this is the best opportunity I will have to give my views.

give my views.

other time, and perhaps this is the best opportunity I will have to give my views.

I am one of those who have believed from the beginning that this bill ought to be referred to the Court of Claims. I believe that there it will have a full and fair and prompt hearing where both the Government and the claimant can be fairly represented; I do not understand that this Congress is committed in any form to act upon it in consequence of any action that may have been taken heretofore by a former Congress. I think the reverse is substantially the fact.

Mr. President, this claim is made because of alleged injuries done from the years 1861 to 1866 while the mail was being carried partly as a sub-contractor or surety for sub-contractor by Mr. Holladay and part of the time as a direct contractor. I have not had an opportunity to look through the document sent here this morning from the Post-Office Department. There may be something there that I have not seen, but up to this time I have been unable to find, and the chairman of the Committee on Claims has assured me that he has been unable to find anything indicating that Holladay ever filed any claim before the Post-Office Department during all the years he performed these services indicating that he ever contemplated holding the Government or the Post-Office Department liable for anything.

I believe it is usual whenever contractors have claims against the Government growing out of any transactions with any branch of it to file their claims before the Department with which they have the contracts, setting forth wherein they were damaged, how they were damaged, and the extent of their damage. So far from doing this up to this time, although Mr. Holladay himself renewed the contract in 1864 for a portion of the route, perhaps all of it on which he had carried the mail during the previous three years, I have yet failed to see any claims asserted by him against the Government before the Post-Office or any other Department for any injury suffered or any wrong done to him. Such yet been advised.

yet been advised.

The claim was first presented to Congress in 1866, so it is said by the friends of the claimant; and it was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Thirty-ninth Congress. I assume that every claim or demand Mr. Holladay had was laid before that Congress. Then all the facts were fresh; all the affidavits that were ever taken, so far as I am able to find up to the time when the case was re-referred to the committee of the Forty-fifth Congress in 1878, were before the Thirty-ninth Congress. His petition setting forth all his grievances, as I said, was referred to the House Committee on Indian Affairs of the Thirty-ninth Congress. That was a thoroughly republican Congress in both branches, and every part and feature of the claim then presented was rejected by it, except those portions relating to injuries by the removal of the route and damages done by the United States troops by taking the supplies they were charged with having taken and used. This action was had: Mr. Windom, of Minnesota, then I believe chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, reported back a resolution providing: House of Representatives, reported back a resolution providing

That so much of the claim of Benjamin Holladay as relates to damages for change of route by military orders and property taken by the military authorities and appropriated to the use of the Government, be referred to the Court of Claims for adjustment.

That, as I understand, constitutes about one hundred thousand dollars of the $526,739 which the Committee on Claims now report that they are willing to give him and say that Congress ought to allow him without referring it to the Court of Claims or anywhere else. As I understand, the Thirty-ninth Congress rejected at least $426,739 of the claim, if I am right in saying that $100,000 was the whole amount claimed for injuries done by the United States troops and for the removal or change of routes. That Congress then considered it while it was all fresh; when every fact could easily be had, and when, I suppose, all the men who knew anything about it could be produced. Having had, as I repeat and as the record shows, all the affidavits that ever were before the committee of this House, when they reported in March, 1878—for they were all taken prior to 1866—upon which to act, in that Congress, when the question was first brought up, and when there was a full opportunity for a hearing, and when full consideration was had, every branch of the claim was rejected except those items relating to the changes of route and the damage done by the United States troops in taking supplies. Many distinguished members of the present Senate were members of that House then. I have the Congressional Directory for the Thirty-ninth Congress, in which it appears who were at that time in the House: Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE, of Maine: Hon. Roscoe CONKLING, of New York: Hon. Henry L. As I have said, I did wish and I do wish to give some of the reasons resulting in a strong conviction and a strong feeling that this has become an instance of marked injustice; and yet I do not intend to say one other word in respect of this claim, because I feel that time

| Dawes, of Massachusetts; Hon. Thomas W. Ferry, of Michigan, and Hon. Justin S. Morrill, of Vermont.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator is reading over particular names.

What are they to prove, may I ask?

Mr. BECK. They are to prove that these men in the Thirty-ninth Congress rejected this claim.

Mr. CONKLING. Never.

Mr. BECK. On the report of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Win-

DOM] in the House when he was a member of that body, when, with the claim of Mr. Holladay before him and all the affidavits that were before this committee in 1878 before him, the House refused even to consider any part of it except-

That so much of the claim of Benjamin Holladay as relates to damages for change of route by military orders and property taken by the military authorities and appropriated to the use of the Government be referred to the Court of Claims.

All else was left out, all else was rejected.

Mr. CONKLING. Will it be disagreeable to the Senator if I inter-

Mr. CONKLING. Will it be disagreeable to the Senator if I interrupt him for one moment?

Mr. BECK. Not at all.

Mr. CONKLING. Then, Mr. President, I beg to say this: I have not the record before me and perhaps I shall not be technically correct; but I mean to assert broadly for myself—other Senators may speak for themselves—that from the beginning my judgment was that Mr. Holladay and so much at least of his claim, and not propthat Mr. Holladay and so much at least of his claim, and not properly any more, as would give the Court of Claims jurisdiction of the subject, should go to that court. So I voted not only in the House; but the honorable Senator need not go there or so far back, so I voted in the Senate; so I argued in the Senate, and I argued in vain because the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] whom the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] characterized then as now the leader of that side of the Chamber, rose saying "I flatter myself"—I well remember his term—"I flatter myself that if the Senator will listen to me for ten minutes I can demonstrate that this case meyer should go to the Court of Claims." and thereupon the Senator never should go to the Court of Claims," and thereupon the Senator from Ohio with his accustomed cogency and terseness proceeded to do what he was pleased to call demonstrating that the Court of Claims could with propriety have nothing to do with this claim; and thereupon by his suggestion a Senator who then sat before me offered an order of the Senate, which in a court of chancery would have been a direc-tion to a master to take an account. He offered a resolution which after hearing the Senator from Ohio was adopted, nobody dissenting, that this committee armed with those sweeping powers so liable to abuse, unfettered by the rules of evidence, should spread a drag-net all over this transaction, should command the attendance not only of persons and witnesses but should bring in all papers, and should report back to the Senate how much Benjamin Holladay was entitled to receive. The committee went out and performed its duty. It sent for persons and papers. In the language of Junius it roamed unchecked through the cobwebs of the law. It heard hearsay and everything that it chose to exonerate the Government; but it comes in with a report that, after all that, and despite all that, the members of this committee find upon their oaths that this man is entitled to so much money.

Now, trespassing upon the time of the Senator from Kentucky, for a moment, I respectfully submit to him that it is neither just nor fair, and if I could use the word without offense I would say honest for the same body of men which has selected its own tribunal to take this account and report it, to turn around and say, because it once would have been fair to turn this man over to a court, because somebody once nave been fair to that this man over to a court, because someoody once voted years ago that that was a good thing, notwithstanding this body has decided unanimously that a court ought not to touch it, that this committee and this alone should touch it and bring it here, we will now say we made a mistake in all these years; it ought to have gone to a court, and now when death has carried off these witnesses, when mold and time have covered this testimony, after all these actions of ours we will eat our words and shuffle this man off now as years are we might unnerly have committed him to a indicial or goas in ago we might properly have committed him to a judicial or quasi-judicial tribunal. I submit—and to no Senator with more confidence than to the brave and just Senator from Kentucky—that it would not be acting man-fashion to do that to Benjamin Holladay or to any other be acting man-fashion to do that to Benjamin Holladay or to any other claimant, be he meritorious or not. If you owe him nothing, say so; if you owe him something say how much. If you owe him all that the committee has reported, say that. But after all these years, all these multiplied proceedings, all the hardship and delay to which this man has been subjected, tied hand and foot as he was a year ago and seeing his property swept away for the want of the money which he was entitled to, which is covered by this bill, when the honorable Senator from Missouri was constrained by his sense of justice, against his feeling, to get up here and say for the benefit of the bankers who were creditors to Mr. Holladay that he had no doubt himself that he was entitled to a sum and a large sum of money, and he himself that were creditors to Mr. Holladay that he had no doubt himself that he was entitled to a sum and a large sum of money, and he himself proposed a day, already passed, when the Senate should say that he was entitled to that large sum, whatever it might be—after all this I submit to the Senator from Kentucky, who has courage and integrity enough to do what he deems his duty under all circumstances, that although this be a large claim, it is his duty and it is mine to front it and to say whatever shall be our honest judgment as to the amount of it and let this claimant at last go.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, neither the Senator from New York nor any other Senator on this floor will go further to do justice to Mr. Holladay than I will. I trust I have the ceurage to carry out my convictions. No word shall escape me to reflect upon him or upon the manner in which he is prosecuting this claim. I believe it is better for Mr. Holladay, better for the Government, better for us all, that a judicial tribunal should settle this complicated question. I will refer presently to all that has been said by the Senator from New York about the action of the last Congress of the United States, but I will go back first to what was done in the Thirty-ninth Congress where I was back first to what was done in the Thirty-ninth Congress where I was when interrupted, only by saying now that the assumptions as to the action in the Forty-fifth Congress, two years ago, by the friends of this measure are not sustained by the record. When that bill was up the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. Cameron,] and the then Senator from Oregon, Mr. Mitchell, and the others supporting it proposed that the case go to the Court of Claims. They insisted that it should be decided there upon affidavits then ten years old, without cross-examination, without the right of the Government to inquire who those men were and whether they had told the truth a rot. Others of ne men were and whether they had told the truth er not. Others of us who were willing that it should go to the Court of Claims desired that it should go as all other claims go to the Court of Claims, upon legitimate evidence, and that the evidence should be heard fully and fairly on both sides.

By a vote of 27 to 23 those who so believed voted on a call of the yeas and nays to so amend the bill, the friends of Mr. Holladay's claim opposing the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, Mr. Chrisopposing the amendment of the Schator from Michigan, Mr. Christiancy, when he desired that the case should go upon full evidence and be fairly heard. I have the RECORD before me. It was when Mr. Mitchell and others could not get the case to the Court of Claims upon terms different from those on which all other cases are sent to that court, when the affidavits and the orders that they had taken ex parte ten years before could not be used as evidence against the ex parte ten years before could not be used as evidence against the Government, that, taking advantage of a suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio that there was no case to go before the Court of Claims, the Senator from Oregon, Mr. Mitchell, on his own motion desired and proposed to take it back to his own committee, and the Senate tacitly consented to send it back. That is what is now called unanimous consent to send it to that committee to fix the amount we shall pay, and of the claim that we are bound to carry out. Whatever they saw fit to propose to pay, it was the defeated party, those who could not succeed in being allowed to use the affidavits, who when they were fairly beaten on a yea-and-nay vote of the Senate by men who wanted this claim to go like all other claims to the Court of Claims, desired to get it into their own hands once more, and they did get it back; this was in March, 1878. When they reported it back in get it back; this was in March, 1878. When they reported it back in June, 1878, if it was so meritorious and so just why did they not press it to a hearing then? What did they do during all that Congress? I have the RECORD before me.

Mr. Mitchell came into the Senate on the 20th of January, 1879, just before the close of the last Congress, and submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies of Senate bill No. 1398 and accompanying report No. 513 be printed for the use of the two Houses of Congress, the number heretofore printed being exhausted.

513 be printed for the use of the two Houses of Congress, the number heretofore printed being exhausted.

He never asked for a vote, he never asked for a hearing, he never said that Mr. Hollsday or his friends were even anxious for a hearing. Why did they not insist upon it then? That was a republican Congress up to March, 1879, and that side of the House now seems to be solid, or almost solid, in their efforts to push this claim through. Why did they not do it then? They say we have instructed our committee. The Forty-fifth Congress, a republican Congress, instructed its committee, if you please, but that committee did not even venture to present this or any other bill for hearing. They allowed that Congress to die, and no instructions given to the republican committees of the last Congress have any binding effect, unless they are right, upon the democratic members of this Congress. We are responsible now; they were responsible then. They did not venture then to ask to put that bill upon its passage, or call for a vote, or face the people in the late election upon that proposition, and now they claim that the democratic committee that was organized after the 4th of March, 1879, to which no instructions had been given or could be given by that vote in March, 1878, nor have any been asked for or given since, and the democratic members of the Senate are bound to do whatever Mr. Mitchell, Mr. CAMERON, and the republican leaders who controlled that committee advised them to do, and yet dared not submit to the Senate and ask their own party friends to do. That is all there is in what the Senator from New York has just said to me.

But I am anticipating. It is a good place, however, to let these two just said to me.

But I am anticipating. It is a good place, however, to let these two statements of his and mine go in the RECORD together. When I was interrupted I was showing that there were in the lower House of the Thirty-ninth Congress many distinguished members of the present Senate, Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON, Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE, Hon. ROSCOE ate, Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON, Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE, Hon. ROSCOE CONKLING, Hon. HENRY L. DAWES, Hon. THOMAS W. FERRY, Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL, Hon. EDWARD H. ROLLINS, Hon. DANIEL W. VOORHEES, and Hon. WILLIAM WINDOM. That is what the Congressional Directory shows; and in that Congress no man of all the now warm advocates of this bill pressed it, or complained of the action taken. Then was the time when justice should have been done if injustice was being done. Then was the time for the friends of this claim to have risen in their places and maintained that it was unjust to strike out all but the two clauses, in which there was less than one hundred thousand dollars involved, and show that it was wrong to reject $426,000, which they now say is due to this claimant, and rail against us because we will not pay it, ten years afterward or twelve years afterward.

The resolution passed by the House in the Thirty-ninth Congress went to a republican Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on Claims, to whom it was referred and by whom it was again considered, Hon. Mr. Clark, of New Hampshire, was unwilling even to go as far as the House went, and he reported that there had been referred

That so much of the claim of Benjamin Holladay as relates to a change of routes by military orders, and property taken by the military authorities and appropriated to use by the Government, be referred to the Court of Claims for adjustment.

That is the House resolution. He said:

The Committee on Claims came to the conclusion to recommend to strike out that part of the claim which was for damages for change of ronte, but to let the other part of the claim for property alleged to be taken by military orders go to the Court of Claims and no more, and we think that is a better tribunal than the Committee on Claims and this House.

It will be observed that the Senate would not even go as far as the House. It struck out what is now claimed to amount to $60,000 or $70,000 out of the $100,000 that would have been involved in the case if the House resolution had passed, and it fell because it was, by the action of the Senate, cut down to such a small sum that Mr. Holladay and his friends did not even care to go to the Court of Claims day and his friends did not even care to go to the Court of Claims with it.

That is the reason why I bring up the action of the Thirty-ninth Congress, and I have been amazed at gentlemen here now, nine or ten of them, influential members on the other side of this body, then leading members of the House of Representatives, after their silence while the claim was before them when all the facts were fresh, becoming so zealous now, because it must be assumed that Mr. Holladay then presented every claim that he presents now. If he did not, he ought to; there could be no excuse for withholding it from that Congress and bringing it before subsequent Congresses. The presumption is that he presented all he regarded as just, and all his claim except about $100,000 was rejected by these very gentlemen themselves in a thoroughly republican Congress, and that amount was to go to the Court of Claims.

What then happened? After that rejection Mr. Holladay withdrew his papers from the files of Congress. In 1866 the action spoken of was taken. The original petition, as the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] said, and the papers were taken from the files, and are all gone. In the Fortieth Congress the case is not heard of; in the Forty-first Congress it is not heard of. Is that diligence? Is that pressing the claim, as the friends of this claim insist has been done all the time? From 1866 to 1872 Mr. Holladay does not appear before either House of Congress. Beaten for all but a right to appear in court and try to prove a small proportion, in the Thirty-ninth Congress, files a petition in the Forty-second. There is no report in that Congress from any committee; no new affidavits were taken; no additional evidence furnished. The Forty-second Congress passed; the Forty-third passed; still not a single affidavit added to what was filed in 1866; and it was only when it reached the Forty-fifth Congress, in 1878, that a committee, the republican committee of this body, brought it to light for the first time; and after all these y in 1878, that a committee, the republican committee of this body, brought it to light for the first time; and after all these years of negligence, of want of preparation, of absolute abandonment of the claim so far as any further proof was concerned, because the record in my hand at least fails to show that a single further witness was called or a single new affidavit was ever taken until after the action of this body in the Forty-fifth Congress, after March, 1878, it is absurd to say that we have trifled with Mr. Holladay. That is not the way claims are presented when men have faith in their justice.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me? If he read my name for the purpose of involving me in any inconsistency, I desire to state that my connection with the Thirty-ninth Congress was very peculiar. I had an actual service, I think, of about five weeks during that winter, during which time I was trying my best to keep the dominant party from expelling me because of my devotion to the Constitution and the laws of the country, under the guise of a contested election. I went out at the end of the struggle, and I never saw or heard at all of the Holladay claim while I was a member of the Thirty-ninth Congress. I had other matters engaging my attention, and I was only there a little while.

Mr. BECK. I read the Senator's name because the record showed the fact. I suppose that Congress met in December, 1865. On the 24th of January, 1866, this matter came before Congress for the first time. So says the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.]

Mr. VOORHEES. That was about the time I terminated my connection with that body by the vote of my friends on the other side.

Mr. BECK. I did not feel at liberty to leave out, in reading the official record, the name of the Senator, though aware of the fact to which he refers; I read the names of the gentlemen who appear in the Congressional Directory. I am not seeking to convict anybody of inwhich he refers; I read the names of the gentlemen who appear in the Congressional Directory. I am not seeking to convict anybody of inconsistency. I am seeking merely to show why I desire an investigation of this case before the judicial tribunals of the country. That is all I am trying to do. I impugn no man's motives, no man's integrity or consistency; the fact is clear that the Thirty-ninth Congress in 1866 rejected and refused to allow the courts to consider four-liths of this claim, no matter who were members of it. fifths of this claim, no matter who were members of it.

Just here I may as well say that I differ entirely, absolutely, from the able and usually careful Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] in regard to the urgent pressure that had been put upon Congress from year to year by Mr. Holladay, and as to the unanimous action of three committees of this body. That is his statement as shown by the Record, three times nine, he says, twenty-seven Senators all united, unanimous reports from twenty-seven men, or nine times three had, he maintained that it was wrong for us now, indeed that it was an insult to those men, not to indorse what twenty-seven of them have done. There never has been, to begin with, as I understand it, reports except in but two Congresses, so that there were but eighteen men that ever considered it. There were two reports, it is true, in the last Congress, but it was the same committee twice reporting, not eighteen, that ever considered it. There were two reports, it is true, in the last Congress, but it was the same committee twice reporting, not eighteen, but nine making two reports. I have the names of those gentlemen of the committee of the Forty-fifth Congress who made this report in 1878. They were Mr. McMillan, of Minnesota; Mr. Mitchell, of Oregon; Mr. Cameron, of Wisconsin; Mr. Teller, of Colorado; Mr. Hoar, of Massachusetts. They constituted the republican majority of the committee, and they made the report and had the power to pass it. The minority was composed of Francis M. Cockrell, of Missouri; Frank Hereford, of West Virginia; Isham G. Harris, of Tennessee, and John T. Morgan, of Alabama. While I have no right to know how any one of those democrats will vote, I shall be very much disappointed if any democratic member of that committee in the last Congress votes for this claim, unless it be the Senator from West Virginia. He is not here. I doubt whether he would vote for it. So much for the unanimity of these committees.

Mr. GARLAND. As the Senator from Kentucky seems to know so much about those gentlemen, will he let me ask him if they filed any much about those gentlemen, will he let me ask him if they filed any minority report in either Congress?

Mr. BECK. I think before this debate is through they will file minority reports that the Senator will hear; their vote will be a minority report.

Mr. GARLAND. Have they filed any up to this date † That is the question.

Mr. BECK. Has any democrat on this floor in this Congress or the Mr. BECK. Has any democrat on this floor in this Congress or the other who was a member of that committee spoken for this bill or asserted they were unanimous for it? But they will rise in their places and say they were not, or I am very much mistaken.

Mr. GARLAND. The question I put has not been answered. Have they filed a minority report yet in the case?

Mr. BECK. They have as yet filed no written report that I ever saw; but when the Senator from Arkansas avowed that three committees were unanimous, twenty-seven men—I will read his language, so there will be no mistake about it—

Mr. GARLAND. That is what I said.

Mr. GARLAND. That is what I said.

Mr. BECK. I say there were but eighteen. Is not that the fact? Silence gives consent to that. Has any democrat yet on either committee said one word in favor of the claim? Is this Congress bound mittee said one word in favor of the claim? Is this Congress bound by the action of the last Congress in its instructions to its committees? The argument was forcibly made by the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. Garland,] the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. Voorhees,] and by the Senator from New York, [Mr. Conkling,] this morning, that we are honorably bound; that I, as a man with the courage of my convictions, as I hope I have, ought to be bound to carry out what they have done because we have so referred it. Am I, as a member of a democratic Senate, bound now to vote for a report made by a republican committee of another Congress to a republican Congress. republican committee of another Congress to a republican Congress when they themselves did not dare to present that report for action when they themselves did not dare to present that report for action even before a republican Congress?

Mr. KERNAN. How is the present committee made up?

Mr. BECK. The present committee is made up as follows: Mr. Cockrell, of Missouri, is chairman. I do not think he is unanimous for the bill. Mr. Harris, of Tennessee, who sits before me, is a member. If he is unanimous he will have to declare it yet. Mr. Groome, of Maryland, and Mr. Pugh, of Alabama, are members of the committee. As I say, with the exception of Mr. Hereforn, who is not here, the others being here, they will speak for themselves. The facts will show before the vote is taken that there never has been but one democratic member, and I will not speak of him because his not here—Mr. Hereforn, from West Virginia—who has given any not here—Mr. Hereford, from West Virginia—who has given anything like assent to this report, and I do not know that he even has.

Mr. GARLAND. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.
Mr. GARLAND. If the Senator means all that his argument imports let me say that if democratic members of the committee were not in favor of the report, it never could have been made, because not in favor of the report, it never could have been made, because they have a majority of the committee.

Mr. BECK. What I desire to say is this: the republican members of the committee at the last Congress could make the report without any assent from any democrat. The republican members of this committee could make it now, composed of Mr. McMillan, Mr. Cameron, Mr. Teller, and Mr. Hoar, with the aid of one democrat sustaining them, and I have an idea that perhaps Mr. Hereford did enable them to make it. I do not know the history of the action of the committee, but the present committee only required one democrat to enable them to make the report now; the last committee did not need one.

I am combating the very broad statements heretofore made which would necessarily, from the high character and ability of the Senator from Arkansas, have their effect upon the Senate, first, that Mr. Holladay had prosecuted his claim with great vigilance, and had been kept waiting here longer than the siege of Troy lasted, longer than the American Revolution; that we had the reports of three committees—twenty-seven men—unanimously; that we had referred the case back to the committee, and we are in honor bound to stand by their report. I combat each one of these statements. As I said, there their report. I combat each one of these statements. As I said, there were but eighteen. The last Senate was republican, and the republican members after they reported it did not dare to bring it up. Not one of the four democrats ever rose in his place or elsewhere to ask for it, and I believe they voted against it. I assert that the last republican Congress could give no order to this Congress, and could not place it under any obligation. On the contrary, the fact that they did not bring it up has to my mind a wonderfully suspicious look, coupled with their action in the Thirty-ninth Congress, when they had an overwhelming majority in both Houses and would not indorse it, and did reject four-fifths of it absolutely.

If the claim has been delayed it has been by Mr. Holladay himself. If the claim has been postponed and injustice done, it is the act of republican gentlemen who are now so anxious to make this Congress responsible for it. I am proud of one thing. While we have not responsible for it. I am proud of one thing. While we have not been allowed to retain power in both Houses after the 4th of March, we have had that power for six years in the lower House and for nearly two years in the Senate, and the record of the democratic party, while it may have been stingy, while it may have been mean, if you like, has been extremely free from all extravagances; it has been very careful in seeing that every claim was fairly investigated before money was taken out of the Treasury of the United States. There never was as little taken out before under any administration for the money was taken out of the Treasury of the United States. There never was as little taken out before under any administration for the last twenty years as we have the credit of showing is the case under our management of public affairs. Whether this claim is right or wrong, I will not throw a straw in Mr. Holladay's way to get the last dollar the courts will give him; but I am not prepared to vote for the payment of the claim in the face of the facts, first, the rejection by the Thirty-ninth Congress; ten years without even taking additional affidavits; then a report made in the Forty-fifth Congress asking that it shall go to the Court of Claims upon ex parts affidavits, and when the men who desired it to go fairly to the Court of Claims voted that it should go upon fair terms, to get clear of that, the Senator from it should go upon fair terms, to get clear of that, the Senator from Oregon moved to have it placed back into his own hands with authority to make a report; and when he did make it, it was only to move that an extra number of copies be printed, and did not even dare to that an extra number of copies be printed, and did not even dare to present it to Congress, because he had said in the report made in March, 1878, that the committee could not, from the evidence, feel justified in saying that any amount was due. That was only a few months before his second report appeared. I do not, in the face of all these facts, feel that I am doing justice to the country to vote a gross sum under circumstances like these, especially when I am pressed to do it by a body of men who, while they were responsible before the country for the passage of claims, never dared to do it, or even to ask that it should be considered.

What did the committee state when Mr. Mitchell or Mr. Cameron, of Wisconsin, made the report in March, 1878? They say:

That said depredations were continued during the greater portion of the time that said Holladay was so engaged in transporting said mails on said route, and the effect of which was to prevent travel over said line, and to render it a task of constant peril to the men engaged in running said coaches and in transporting said mails; that the evidence as to the amount and value of the property so taken and appropriated, being in the form of ex parte affidavits, is, to a great extent, unsatisfactory; and your committee, although satisfied that a large amount of valuable property belonging to memorialist was so taken, do not feel justified in attempting to determine with any degree of accuracy the amount or value thereof.

So said the Senator from Wisconsin, the Senator from Minnesota, and his associates on that committee two years ago, and it was only when they did not want the case to go to the Court of Claims upon fair terms, as we were willing that it should go, that they got it back into their own hands. They then endeavored to figure up the amount they were willing to allow, and when they had so figured it up they did not venture to ask Congress to pass upon it, but waited until the power passed out of their hands; and then, under a committee without instructions and without any obligations and without any act binding upon us as a Congress, they come now and insist we are acting in bad faith because we do not give what that republican committee did not dare to ask a republican Congress to give. I do not propose, if I can help it, to be deciding questions that they dared not decide. They go on further to say:

But your committee are not willing that the value and amount of property takes. So said the Senator from Wisconsin, the Senator from Minnesota,

But your committee are not willing that the value and amount of property taken or the loss suffered by the memorialist should be determined on ex parte affidavits alone; but believing that it is a case wherein the rights of the Government can only be properly protected by an exercise of the privilege of cross-examination and by a thorough investigation in a court of competent jurisdiction wherein the Government shall be represented by counsel, and wherein not only the right of cross-examining the claimant's witnesses but also to call witnesses of its own shall exist, your committee decline to grant the prayer of memorialist and refuse to recommend a direct appropriation.

refused to give, they cry "injustice;" demand us to act at once, and want us to carry out the acts of a committee that that committee itself said was improper, and what it did not venture after it made its calculation to ask its own party to do. That is this case.

There were facts presented in this case when it was up before which ought to have alarmed the country, and the utmost that gen-tlemen could properly ask was that the court should be opened to hear the case, that all limitations and all bars against its consideration should be removed. When the distinguished Senator from Kansas, [Mr. Plumb,] whom I now see in his place, then said—I have the Record before me, and I suppose he will say it again—that during a portion of the time for which this claim is set up he, in command of his regiment of Kansas troops, carried those mails in wagons owned by the United States, drawn by horses and mules owned by the United States, driven by private soldiers of the United States, and for two months Mr. Holladay performed no service whatever, although he drew from $50,000 to $60,000 for the services performed under the direction of the Senator from Kansas with the wagons, mules, and the soldiers of the United States, and there is no pretense that any credit is given for it as against any damages now claimed; when the Senator from Kansas rose in his place and said that he knew many of those stations for which exorbitant sums were now charged, and for the destruction of which we are expected to give the last dollar claimed, were used not in connection with the military service, but as hotels, warehouses, depots, places where travel and traffic should be removed. When the distinguished Senator from Kansas, [Mr. dollar claimed, were used not in connection with the military service, but as hotels, warehouses, depots, places where travel and traffic disconnected altogether with the United States was carried on, and which in his opinion did not cost anything like as much as is asserted, it staggered me then and it amazes me now. Why the committee, if it intended to do justice to the United States, being under the lead of the Senator from Minnesota, the Senator from Wisconsin, the Senator from Colorado, and the Senator from Massachusetts, did not call upon the distinguished Senator from Kansas after he had stated on this floor that to his own personal knowledge these things were true, and he himself had hear as actor in regard to many things were true, and he himself had been an actor in regard to many of them, in order to give the Government the benefit of a statement like that, their neglect to do so passes my comprehension. If nothing else, their failure shows the importance of sending it to the courts, where the Senator from Kansas can be summoned by the Government, where the then Postmaster-General, whom I see now on this floor, (Hon. Montgomery Blair,) can be summoned by the Government, and where all the men who knew anything about it on either side can appear.

It is absurd to talk about death and about witnesses being gone! The claimant's own petition shows that he had four hundred and fifty stage-drivers. Ten per cent. of them are not dead. Ninety per cent. The claimant's own petition shows that he had four hundred and fifty stage-drivers. Ten per cent. of them are not dead. Ninety per cent., I suppose, of his men are alive yet. All that was done was done publicly; it was not done in a corner. Indian depredations are not committed in the dark; or if they are, what existed before and what existed afterward can be seen in daylight. The value of every station can be ascertained—what it was used for, what it cost can be proved by numbers of men yet alive. The books of the company can be produced, the facts can be ascertained. There never was a case where there was less liability to injury to the claimant by the loss of testimony than in this case. The books of the Post-Office Department are still in existence. Out of four hundred and fifty men who were drivers, four hundred are doubtless alive. The men who built the stations, the men who traveled over the route, all can testify yet before any court what was paid for these things, and what their value was. Take Julesburgh, for example; $35,000 is claimed for its destruction. Does any gentleman believe that stations worth $35,000 were necessary to be built, or were built in a wild country, for the United States mails? They may have been necessary to establish a great overland route for passengers, and establish depots to sell goods to traders and to ranchmen, and independent transactions, for which I assume that nobody will pretend the United States is liable, but that buildings worth $35,000 at Julesburgh were necessary for the United States mails, would have to be proved before a court before I would vote to pay it.

So $142,000 of this claim is made up of corn at from eleven and vote to pay it.

So $142,000 of this claim is made up of corn at from eleven and a-half to twelve and a-half dollars per bushel. Nine-tenths of that corn perhaps was carried to the places where it was needed to feed horses and mules used not for mail carrying, but for the carrying of passengers disconnected with the Government of the United States altogether, and if it was so used the Government of the United States altogether, and if it was so used the Government of the United States. is not obliged to pay for that on any pretense or theory. These facts ought to appear before a court; and they can be made to appear. So with the great Concord coaches that are said to have cost twelve hundred dollars each; were they all as good as new when taken. The contract gave the contractors the right to use spring wagons in carbe properly protected by an exercise of the privilege of cross-examination and by a thorough investigation in a court of competent jurisdiction wherein the Government shall be represented by counsel, and wherein not only the right of cross-examining the claimant's witnesses but also to call witnesses of its own shall exist, your committee declineto grant the prayer of memorialist and refuse to recommend a direct appropriation.

They made in that report the speech that I am making now. That is precisely what I insist ought to be done. They all said it then, and as long as they were responsible for the legislation they stuck to it; but now when it would be a glorious thing to go before the country and charge the democrats with sticking their arms up to their elbows into the Treasury to take away money that for ten years they had and that if this claim was allowed and the principle recognized that the United States was a guarantor for all damages done by Indians to anybody in the service, then these claims would all come up against us and be as legitimate as this. This is the language used

There are, I understand, on file now in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs from $35,000,000 to $40,000,000 of claims on account of depredations by the

I think that is a misprint. It must mean $3,500,000 and $4,000,000. That may not be, however-

That may not be, however—in fact, embracing depredations committed by probably every single Indian tribe within the limits of the United States and embracing every possible character of depredations that naturally result from the efforts of people to push their settlements out on to the frontier and from the endeavor to do business between one frontier settlement and another and between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

If Congress is to pay Mr. Holladay it would, it seems to me, establish the principle of paying all these other claims. I do not say they ought not to be paid, but I say that the equity, the justice of the claims of which I have spoken as being on file in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is equal to that of Mr. Holladay's claim. More than that, those claims are in behalf of a class of persons who have not the means to be here either in person or by attorney in order to bring their claims to the attention of Congress. The probability will be, therefore, if this bill shall pass, that we shall have simply given to Mr. Holladay what in effect amounts to a gratuity, because we will not give the same relief to other people who have sustained losses which entitle them to just as much relief as that to which he is entitled.

When the bill came up the next day and the word "affidavits" was sought to be striken out by the Senator from Michigan, Mr. Christiancy, the Senator from Colorado, Mr. Chaffee, rose in his place and said he hoped the amendment would not prevail.

While I know nothing about this individual claim-

He says-

I do know that there are a great many citizens of the State of Colorado who have similar claims, and they have been advised by the heads of the Departments to perfect their testimony, and they perfected their testimony by obtaining afflicavits. If they had not perfected their testimony in regard to their losses and spoliations of their property, the witnesses and testimony would have been scattered.

He stated that all these claimants were waiting to see the recognition of this class of claims, that they are all as just as this claim and all will be pressed before Congress as being equally meritorious when we establish the precedent here.

I turn to Executive Document No. 65, second session Forty-third Congress, 1874-75, which is a communication from the Secretary of the Interior giving a list of the claims filed for depredations committed by Indians called for by House resolution of April 30, 1874. Senators can examine it. There is a list covering forty or fifty pages.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not all.
Mr. BECK. This lot runs up as far as I have looked over them to $4,700,000, all awaiting action here; and the chairman of the Committee on Claims advises me now from his place that this is not all, that there are more than those. How many more there are I do not know; but this is to be the entering-wedge by congressional action to all that class of claims of which there are so many filed and shown in that executive document besides the others referred to by the Senator from Missouri.

I do not care to read any more. I rose more for the purpose of explaining why I should vote to send the claim to the Court of Claims than to present arguments directly on the question. I have no doubt the chairman of the Committee on Claims will be heard. I have no doubt the Senator from Kansas will be heard; but I confess that when the committee failed to summon him after he had used language such as I have referred to in the open Senate it shook my faith in the report they had made. The Senator from Kansas said among other

I object to it further because of the contents of these affidavits themselves. I have read them. They set the value of houses on that route at $2,000, mere shanties that never were worth one quarter of it, and yet we propose here to send those to the Court of Claims—

He was even opposed to going that far; I am willing to send them there and see what they are worth-under the sanction of this Congress as testimony to the full extent to which any declaration may be testimony, and provide no adequate means really of contradicting them.

He said further, and this is what I referred to before:

He said further, and this is what I referred to before:

I took my own regiment out there in the spring of 1865, and as long as this matter has been mentioned I may say further that while on the route, and while under direction to see that that mail was carried at all hazards, I did carry it on nearly three hundred miles of the route of Mr. Holladay for nearly two months during which time he had not a teamster or a mule of his own on that part of the line-carried it with Government mules and Government horses, with Government private soldiers as drivers. Now, I submit that if this man is to be paid, the Government is entitled at least to a recoupment for the full amount of that service so rendered. It was a part of it which I did not care to say anything about. More than all that, it was a part of the unwritten history, and it was a part of the history in the mouths of all men along that route, that every time a coach was taken there were at least a dozen mules counted against the Government that had not been taken at all, and that was the talk among Mr. Holladay's employés themselves. I say from the knowledge I have that I believe two-thirds of this claim is just as base a fraud as was ever attempted to be imposed on the American Congress.

That was the language of a Senator on this floor in the hearing of that committee, and yet the committee did not deign to call him after he had stated these facts. He said again:

When I spoke of the time during which Mr. Holladay had no mules, had no employés on the line of the route, it was only for the purpose of bringing out to some extent the history of that time, and showing exactly what the condition of things was. During that time Mr. Holladay received fifty or sixty thousand dollars, or a large sum of money at all events, for services rendered on that route when he rendered none whatever.

dered none whatever.

Mr. COCKRELL. When was that?

Mr. BECK. That was on the 11th day of March, 1878, on this floor, being page 1634, part 2 of volume 7, second session of the Forty-fifth Congress. With all due respect to the individual Senators who made this report, I cannot have so much respect for a report made under those circumstances, a report leaving out all that testimony which was so well known to them. I will not obey when they come here and demand that I shall vote that all that money is due which the Senator from Kansas says he knows is not; that horses shall be declared to be worth three or four times what a Senator on this floor says they were worth; with no claim made against the Department for the injuries done; with the wages or prices paid for carrying the mail increased from $600,000 to $1,000,000 so as to cover all these contingencies, Indian depredations and all, as they in all probability were.

As the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] showed the other day, pony expresses were run on private account at $5 for every half-onnce carried over five pounds, with a heavy mail sent round by the Isthmus of Panama at a cost of one hundred and sixty thousand and odd dollars a year, and eight hundred thousand and odd dollars paid for the carriage of letters and light mail matter over the plains. When all these contingencies were perhaps guarded against; when the new contract was made in 1864 with full knowledge of all these facts, and no claim for damages was made to the Department that I have ever heard, and when these things are now brought before us, I say that it is just to Mr. Holladay, it is just to the Government, it is just to us all, that we should send the claim to the court where the Thirty-ninth Congress spoke of sending it, where the committee themselves in the Forty-fifth Congress said it ought to go.

The remarkable fact remains, that all the additional testimony in the form of depositions as they call them that appear in this record were taken in the Forty-fifth Congress before a republican committee with a republican majority. The present committee of this body odd dollars a year, and eight hundred thousand and odd dollars paid were taken in the Forty-fith Congress before a republican committee with a republican majority. The present committee of this body so far as the record shows have never taken an affidavit, nor examined a witness, nor done a single act except to report back this bill; and how do they report it back? You will observe that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] introduced it so as to cover the case they had proved. He introduced it to read as follows:

That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $326,739, to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to Ben. Holladay, in full payment and satisfaction of all claims of said Holladay against the United States—or spoliations by hostile Indians on his property while carrying the United States nails, during the existence of Indian hostilities on the line of said mail-route.

For what?

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator that I introduced the bill exactly as the committee determined the bill should be introduced at the former session of Congress. I had no special interest in it, nor have I now.

Mr. BECK. I have no doubt they had taken proof to work up to this condition. The language of the bill introduced, as I was reading it, is as follows:

For spoliations by hostile Indians on his property while carrying the United States mails, during the existence of Indian hostilities on the line of said mail-route; for property taken and used by the United States troops for the benefit of the United States; and for losses of property and expenses incurred in changing his mail-route, in compliance with the orders of the United States commanding officer.

That was what they endeavored to prove in the last Congress. is why the Senator from Colorado was instructed to prepare the bill to meet the case that they had proved, but did not venture to present. But when this committee came to present it they struck out all the language in the bill "for spoliations by hostile Indians on his property while carrying the United States mails, during the existence of Indian hostilities on the line of said mail-routes," &c., and inserted—

On account of his contracts with the Post-Office Department to carry the United States mails, and in full payment and satisfaction for all losses sustained by him by reason of his having carried the mail on a route different from the one specified in the contract under the order of the military authority of the United States, and upon the request of the President, during the existence of Indian hostilities on the line of said mail-route; and in full satisfaction for the property taken and used by United States troops for the benefit of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Colorado?
Mr. BECK. I was going to finish what I have to say, but I will listen now just as well as afterward.
Mr. TELLER. I was going to say in reply to the Senator, if he permits me, that that change was made on the second examination of the case in the present Congress, and made at the suggestion of a democratic member of the committee.
Mr. BECK. Observe that the change is made so as to make it appear that we are not paying him for any Indian depredations com-pear that we are not paying him for any Indian depredations committed, but on account of his contract with the Post-Office Department, on account of his carrying the mail by a different route from that specified, and on account of property taken and used by the United States troops. The amount claimed for the change of route and the amount claimed for property taken by the United States troops does not reach over one hundred thousand dollars; but call it one hundred and twenty thousand dollars, or call it one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and it does not amount to one-fourth of the $526,000. The balance is made up of Indian spoliations. Yet they strike all that out, and what is the balance for? On account of his contract with the Post-Office Department for carrying the United States mails. He has received every dollar due on his contract. If he has not, all he has to do is to go to the Post-Office Department and get it. There is nothing due for that. They have stricken out the amount for Indian depredations. They did not want all these claims to appear to set a precedent for the payment of similar claims; they did not want all the untold millions that may yet come from Minnesota and elsewhere through the Sioux war to be paid by the United States under the precedent of Mr. Holladay's case. They struck it all out; but they report the original amount which by the first bill was to be given, $526,739, and although they give him nothing for Indian depredations or Indian spoliations, but expressly ignoring it on the face of the bill, they give him $526,739 for change of route and for property taken by the United States troops, when they do not pretend that the damages by the change of route or the property taken by the United States troops amounts to one-fourth of the $526,000, and when they do not pretend that he has not received every dollar to which he is entitled under his contracts with the Government, and had it increased from $600,000 to $1,000,000, with three hundred and twenty acres of land for village sites given every ten miles, thirty-two hundred every one hundred miles over twelve hundred or fifteen hundred he is entitled under his contracts with the Government, and had it increased from $600,000 to $1,000,000, with three hundred and twenty acres of land for village sites given every ten miles, thirty-two hundred every one hundred miles over twelve hundred or fifteen hundred miles of route, pony expresses, modifications to allow all the heavy weights to go by sea, no complaint made at the Department, and every dollar paid; and yet, while they did not venture to assert that we ought to pay for Indian depredations, because it would open too wide a door, they still furnish all the money, and yet disguise the fact, though they want to pay it. The account exhibited with the report shows that $400,000 out of $526,000 is alone for Indian depredations, which they have stricken out of the bill, and yet propose to pay for and complain because we will not do it.

That is one reason why I say that I have but little respect for the report that is presented; and I will say that it comes with a bad grace from gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber who have had control of the legislation of this body so long to be taunting us with meanness when we are willing to allow this case in all its bearings to go before the court and give Mr. Holladay a full and fair hearing, far wider and broader than they were willing to give him in the Thirty-ninth Congress, when we are willing to give him opportanties that hundreds of the best citizens in the country are standing here and pleading day by day that we shall give them. This report comes from men who when the case of my old friend Warren Mitchell was up, reported against it not long ago—a most meritorious case of an old man who owned the money that is now lying in the Treasury, who was as loyal as any man in the land, who had a permit from the rebel authorities to go south and collect his debts and when he had got property in payment of his demands and had it in his hands, it was taken away from him under circumstances lying in the Treasury, who was as loyal as any man in the land, who had a permit from the rebel authorities to go south and collect his debts and when he had got property in payment of his demands and had it in his hands, it was taken away from him under circumstances that the Supreme Court of the United States said that if it had been the property of Mr. Jefferson Davis or of any other confederate general or of any other high officer they would not have a right to recover it. All the confederates did recover and get what belonged to them under exactly similar circumstances, and yet all these just and liberal gentlemen turned that poor old man out of the Senate, when it was admitted that the money was his, that the cotton sold was his, the decision of the court was in his favor on the merits, and all that was necessary to entitle him absolutely to recover it was that he should have been in the confederate army, a citizen of the South.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the decision of the court was in favor of him, why did he not get the money?

Mr. BECK. The decision of the court was that every confederate could get it under exactly similar circumstances, and they all did, yet when he came for relief, asking for his own money, the Senator from Wisconsin and his confreres on that committee turned him out of doors and he is here now almost a pauper on the streets.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Yet the decision of the court was against the Senator's old loyal friend.

Mr. BECK. I will tell the Senator of another case. When 1,200 acres of land were taken for Camp Nelson—the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Burnside] has testified as to that—from a poor old woman seventy-four years of age, bed-ridden, and it used by the Government for five years as a military camp, the grandest in the West, six hundred seventy-four years of age, bed-ridden, and it used by the Government for five years as a military camp, the grandest in the West, six hundred acres of her timber having been cut down and used; when the military officers reported that she ought to be paid and that her heirs are tary officers reported that she ought to be paid and that her heirs are entitled to it, they have been year after year and day after day begging for what every Department of the Government said was their due, the whole place being made a desolation; that same committee, now so clamorous for the payment of this sum of money under these circumstances, have kept that poor family waiting and have their case now hung up before them and will not report for them a dollar. I have no sort of confidence in reports made by committees that will insist upon a claim like this and force it through without a hearing, and still withhold claims like these and many others I might name and give them no attention at all.

I am willing that every case should go to the Court of Claims. I think this is the worst body upon earth to try cases. I think there is less of justice, more done by personal solicitation, personal urgency, favoritism, and constant ding-dong than is achieved by the real merits of any case. Therefore whenever the proposition is made to me I will vote to send a claim to the courts where lawyers on both sides can be heard, where the judges cannot be approached by any sort of solicitation either because of great suffering, poverty, bankruptcy, or anything else. The testimony has been volunteered here that Mr. Holladay is poor and a bankrupt. That is not in this record. I do not know whether he is or not. If so, I am sorry for it and I hope that he will get speedy relief, that he will get a judgment for every dollar to which he is entitled; but I want the claim to go through the regular channels, through the established courts of the country, and not have it decided upon a report made up as imperfectly as this obviously is.

ously is.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not exactly see how the honorable Senator from Kentucky makes this a political question. Certainly so far as we have gone there is no indication that the Senate will divide upon it according to the political standing of its members. Both of the Senators from Vermont are not charged with being democrats, and they have both made speeches against this bill. I believe they have both given it some very hard knocks and have spoken in pretty severe terms of this bill and of this claim.

Before I proceed to say a few things that I wish to say about the

Before I proceed to say a few things that I wish to say about the bill, I desire to remark that when the bill was before the Senate some bill, I desire to remark that when the bill was before the Senate some days since I took exceptions to the words of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Morrill.] I used the language from hearing him. I looked afterward at the Record, and I think I was not justified in my inference. I think the Senator's words were not intended to convey the idea that I supposed, and I regret that I should have been led in haste to say anything that might seem unkind or unfair. I desire that whatever I may have said that it was not proper to have said shall be considered as unsaid, for I know very well that I ought to have reflected that the Senator from Vermont could not have impugned the motives of any member of the committee or of any member of the Senate.

I recognize the right of every Senator upon a question of this kind.

ber of the Senate.

I recognize the right of every Senator upon a question of this kind to follow his own judgment. I propose to do that so far as I am concerned, and I have never been one who is prepared to change my views to please the public whim, either. The newspaper criticisms that have been brought out on this bill have no terrors for me if the bill is honest and fair. I believe that it is, and I am prepared to support it whether it is a prepared to support it is a prepared to s bill is honest and fair. I believe that it is, and I am prepared to support it, whether it is an unpopular bill, or whether it is not. I think I shall hardly, while I stand here in the Senate, govern my vote upon questions of this kind by what may be the popular impression as to them; neither shall I direct my vote in accordance with what may seem to be the interests of the political party to which I am attached. If this were a republican Senate I should be prepared to vote for this bill, as I was when it was passed in a republican Senate. I am willing to take the responsibility of this question. I have investigated it; I have looked into it; I have knowledge of and concerning it that induces me to vote for the bill. If anybody else thinks differently I concede to him the right to vote differently, and I demand the same right for myself.

right for myself.
Suppose when Mr. Holladay came here (and the proof is unques-Suppose when Mr. Holladay came here (and the proof is unquestioned, I think, that he came here) he had said to the President of the United States, "I decline further to carry this mail," nobody pretends that he had not the authority so to do. His contract was at an end, not by any act of his but by an act of warfare. He could have said to the General Government, "I shall no longer carry this mail." Is there a Senator familiar with that mail-route who does not know that he could have exacted from the Government at a time know that he could have exacted from the Government at a time when nobody would have bid on it, at a time when there was no opportunity for anybody else to have come in and been a competitor, and the Government would have been compelled to pay in excess of his contract more money every year that he carried this mail than is now proposed to pay for the losses he suffered in five years? If it had cost $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 or $5,000,000 a year the Government must have carried this mail. We had scattered all along the line of this mail-route more or less army supplies and soldiers. We had a fort half-way across the continent garrisoned with men. We had troops at Salt Lake, as everybody remembers; we had troops at Denver; we had troops at Fort Lyon and other places whose communication was through and over this line. The Government would have kept this mail running if this man had demanded three or five million dollars to carry it.

have kept this mail running it this man had demanded three or live million dollars to carry it.

It seems to me that the Government gets out of this transaction very lightly. We have had this case before the Senate ever since I have been here. I came here prepared to vote for this bill, from my knowledge of the case before my arrival. I see it stated in the public press that this claimant has wined and dined the Senate until we are oblivious to the fact that this is a fraud. Mr. President, I never put my feet beneath his table; I never crossed his threshold; I have ne social relations with him except to meet him occasionally. I never no social relations with him except to meet him occasionally. I never knew him until after I knew that this claim was a just one, and one for which he ought to be paid. It stands upon special grounds, upon the promise of the President of the United States that if he would continue to carry the mail he should be paid for the losses he suffered.

I know that some of the statements made with reference to the loss of stock are correct. I said the other day that I had traveled over the route, and that I know it. The Senator from Kentucky read from the remarks which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Plumb] made two years ago on this matter, in which he said that for three hundred miles of this route Mr. Holladay had neither men, horses, nor coaches. True, I have no doubt of it. What became of them? Where had the horses and the mules that stocked three hundred miles of the stage line gone? They had gone into the hands of the Indians, and when-ever the Government retook the stock the evidence will show, and it is a notorious fact that the Government never turned them over to Mr. Holladay. When they took stock from the Indians, it became Government stock. Much of this stock subsequently passed into the

Mr. Helladay. When they took stock from the Indians, it became Government stock. Much of this stock subsequently passed into the hands of the Government undoubtedly.

It is said that it will be a precedent. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky has spoken of three or four millions claimed for Indian depredations. I can correct the Senator. I can tell him how many millions are here. I can tell him that the claims presented and filed amount to nearly seven million dollars for depredations committed by the Indians. It is said that if we allow this case all these claims will come up and must be paid. If we want a precedent we can find it. You can find a precedent from the State of Colorado, where a man who had no connection with the Government at all, a man simply a stock-raiser, had lost a number of horses, and the Government, by a bill passed through both Houses, paid for them. Every other such claim stands as strongly as that claim; but that claim happened to strike the committee just right, and the committee reported it, when they felt that the Government should do justice to the frontier people. In time, when they saw there were a great number of such cases, they became economical, like the Senator from Kentucky, and it became a question not what was just to these people, not what we ought to do, but what we can afford to do; and they said, "we cannot afford to pay;" and they have declined ever since to pay such claims. I can show a great many precedents where we have paid for spoliations of this character, and the party had no special relation to the Government. I said the other day that until within a very few years we always paid for such depredations. Then we took it out of the Indian annutites, if they had any; and if they did not have any, we took it out of the general treasury; but within the last twenty-five or thirty years we have adopted another rule in dealing generthe Indian annuities, if they had any; and if they did not have any, we took it out of the general treasury; but within the last twenty-five or thirty years we have adopted another rule in dealing generally with these claims, but not as to all of them.

Mr. President, this case, as I said before, has been before the Senate again and again, and while it is now complained that there has not been proper diligence, I have heard since this case has been up that there has been too much diligence, too much pressure on the Senate. The Senator who has this bill in charge has repeatedly tried to bring it before the Senate within the last two years and the Senator. Senate. The Senator who has this bill in charge has repeatedly tried to bring it before the Senate within the last two years and the Senator who had it in charge before repeatedly tried to bring it to the attention of the Senate. Within the four years I have been a member of the Senate it has been here, the friends of the bill have always been ready to take it up. It ought to have been taken up and disposed of long ago. If it is a fair claim, it should be met; if it is a fair claim it should be paid, but I do not think there is any politics in it. I do not think it makes any difference whether the majority of the Senate and the majority of the other branch are democratic or republican, if the debt is due either by the general rules governing transactions of this character or because the President of the United States and the Postmaster-General said to this man, "Now do not do that which the law authorizes you to do, throw up your contract and States and the Postmaster-General said to this man, "Now do not do that which the law authorizes you to do, throw up your contract and make us pay you more or quit; do not do that; carry this mail, and whenever you meet with losses come to Congress and you shall be paid." Why, Mr. President, nobody will pretend that the mail could have been stopped. Would the Government for a moment have thought of leaving the great number of people on the line of that route without mail communication? In a time of war would the Government have left its troops at a great distance from the base of supplies without communication, or would the Government have taken them away? Certainly not. The mail must of necessity be carried, and it was carried in war just as cheaply as it was carried in peace, because the Government said "whatever extra it costs you in the increased price of it and whatever losses you suffer by acts of war because the Government said "whatever extra it costs you in the increased price of it and whatever losses you suffer by acts of war we will make good;" and I say that it behooves us to make good the promises that were made to this man by the President and the Postmaster-General who had the authority to make such a contract.

Mr. President, I have said all I propose to say on this bill. I have no more interest in it than anybody else. I believe I have a great deal more knowledge of it than a great many others who will vote more this greation.

upon this question.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the question whether this money is due to this claimant or due to the original contractors. I have heretofore stated that there is no just claim, in my opinion, against the Government in this case. I have not been able to arrive at the same conclusion with the Committee on Claims, late I desire to treat that committee with all the respect to which it able to arrive at the same conclusion with the Committee on Claims, but I desire to treat that committee with all the respect to which it is entitled, and I am somewhat embarrassed in differing from them about this testimony, because such eminent lawyers as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] and others have expressed the opinion that by the testimony the case is completely made out. The little experience I have had in the trying of causes, and the weighing of evidence, leads me, I must say with a great deal of deference, to an entirely different conclusion. entirely different conclusion.

I want to say, however, in regard to the committee and one portion of its report, that I do not think it treated one branch of the case quite fairly when it adopted substantially the language of Mr. Holladay's memorial with reference to what had occurred in a previous Congress. The memorialist states—I quote now from the printed re-

As a reason for his delay in urging his claim of damages for his losses occasioned as aforesaid, says that his claims were presented to Congress in A. D. 1866, and that on the 24th day of January of that year his petition for redress was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, and that subsequently, by a disagreement of the two Houses of Congress as to the proper relief to be granted, the measures of relief failed by the adjournment of Congress.

That hardly covers the facts of the case. The fact is that at that time, when this mail-route and all that pertains to it and all the servtime, when this mail-route and all that pertains to it and all the services rendered on it were well known to everybody who was posted at all in the history of the country, and when all these losses could have been made to appear, the two Houses of Congress did differ somewhat, and yet they did agree upon the material part of the bill, and did agree to it adversely to Mr. Holladay.

I do not care to go over the facts, because the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. Beck,] with the books before him, has gone over them thoroughly; but it is important to know that all that damage which was supposed to have been promised to be paid to Mr. Holladay by Mr. Lincoln was a damage which both Houses of Congress agreed he should not receive compensation for at all. They only differed as to whether he should have pay for the damages which he incurred by a change of route, said to have been under the order of Colonel Chivington, and added to that the price of certain stores which he said ington, and added to that the price of certain stores which he said

This case is thought to be taken out of the class known as Indian depredation cases, by the allegation that Mr. Lincoln, then President of the United States, promised Mr. Holladay that if he would carry depredation cases, by the allegation that Mr. Lincoln, then President of the United States, promised Mr. Holladay that if he would carry the mail on this route according to his contract, Congress would appropriate money to pay him all the damages he incurred thereby. Mr. Lincoln lived till the spring of 1865, the 14th day of April of that year. Nine-tenths of all the damage that Mr. Holladay asserts occurred on that line and which he here sets up a claim for occurred before that time. The matter was, according to the testimony of Mr. Holladay, discussed in Cabinet meeting. The members of the Cabinet, every one of them, I think, was alive at the time Mr. Holladay first presented his claim to Congress; the Postmaster-General, who made the contract and who was the right hand of the President for the purpose of carrying on the business of the Post-Office Department, was then alive and is still and is living in this city. If Mr. Lincoln made a promise of that kind, if Mr. Lincoln made a promise which he understood as Mr. Holladay claims that he understood it, that was a fact much more easily proved in 1866 than it is in 1881. If Mr. Lincoln had made that promise and Mr. Holladay depending upon it, had gone on to carry this mail, and in carrying the mail had incurred this damage, he should not have permitted the two Houses of Congress, I submit, to entirely and totally ignore four-fifths of all his claim without ever even setting up in either of the Houses of Congress or before either of the committees the fact that he depended on the promise of Mr. Lincoln for his reimbursement. I am not here to say that the statement was made without foundation. I am simon the promise of Mr. Lincoln for his reimbursement.

on the promise of Mr. Lincoln for his reimbursement. I am not here to say that the statement was made without foundation. I am simply submitting it to the tests which we apply to testimony offered in courts of justice, and as this involves, as I said, four-fifths of all the claim it ought to be submitted to some, at least, of those tests.

Mr. Holladay presented the claim in 1866. A good deal has been said about the fact that he has been waiting a long time. It was six years after 1866 before he himself ever presented it again to Congress. It was before Congress from then on intermittently, and has come before Congress from then until the present time intermittently. In 1878 it received some consideration at the hands of the Claims Committee of this body. I found among the papers in the case, when I came to examine them, a letter from the Quartermaster-General's Office, on the subject, which I will ask to have read as a contribution to the current history of this case.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1875.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of February 5, 1875, requesting information relative to the claims of Benjamin Holladay for losses alleged to have been sustained by him when he was a contractor for the transportation of the United States mails from the Missouri River to Salt Lake City, on what was known as the "Overland Mail Route."

Your letter states, "the losses are said to have occurred through Indian depredations upon his property, change of routes made by military order to insure the better defense of the line, and appropriation of sundry supplies for the troops by the military authorities without compensation therefor."

Also, that "in December, 1884, Colonel J. M. Chivington, commanding district of Colorado, required Mr. Holladay to run on his line from the Platte to the 'Cut-off' route that he might be better enabled to protect it against the Indians, and the troops mentioned are understood to be the soldiers placed on the line to defend it."

You ask whether any application was ever made to this office by Mr. Holladay for compensation for the alleged appropriation of supplies for the troops by the military authorities.

In reply you are informed that no such application has been made.

You also ask for any information bearing upon the case which this office may be able to impart.

In compliance therewith, I invite attention to the accommanying conies of papers.

You also ask for any information bearing upon the case which this office may be able to impart.

In compliance therewith, I invite attention to the accompanying copies of papers, the originals of which are on file in this office, showing that in 1866 a series of accounts, one hundred and ninety-three in number, of the "Overland Stage Company," "Overland Mail and Express Company," and "Overland Mail Company," Benjamin Holladay, president, for military transportation from the spring of 1864, to October, 1865, amounting in the aggregate to $28,345.63, were settled through this office.

These accounts were settled as rendered, at the full tariff rates of the company. It was proposed by the Quartermaster-General at the time, however, to reduce.

the rates charged by the company for military transportation, upon the following general principles and for the following reasons:

"First. That all services as well as supplies can be more cheaply furnished on a large scale than to individuals, and therefore should be furnished cheaper to Government, the heaviest customer of all.

"Second. That Government should not submit for the services it requires to the excessive rates which a monopoly exacts from individuals, but pay only a reasonable and just equivalent, such as, were there fair competition, would alone be demanded.

excessive rates which a monopoly exacts from individuals, but pay only a reasonable and just equivalent, such as, were there fair competition, would alone be demanded.

"These principles have been recognized and followed in the settlement of transportation accounts throughout the war.

"Upon ferries, bridges, and turnpikes a reduction is made of 50 per cent. upon the charges to the public.
"The rate paid railroad companies, two cents per mile, is equal to a reduction of between 50 and 33 per cent. upon their charges to the public.
"Usual stage transportation averages not above eight cents per mile. This road charges about thirty cents per mile. That there is a great difference between this and eastern stage routes is recognized."

It was therefore considered by the Quartermaster-General that this company should be allowed its own tariff rates, with a reduction upon the general grounds above stated of 33} per cent., making a rate of about twenty cents per mile, which was believed to be, taking also into consideration the facilities afforded this company by Government, a sufficient compensation for the services rendered.

As to the facilities afforded to this company by the Government, through the United States military authorities, I invite attention to the accompanying copy of report of the Quartermaster-General dated September 30, 1857, with its inclosures, showing that the United States has furnished to Mr. Holladay for his stage line at various times, the services of enlisted men and other employés of the Government, in building, removing, and repairing stations, herding stock, taking care of teams, and cooking rations—has furnished teams to transport their forage, and has furnished forage for their teams and horses to draw their coaches, quarters, and rations for their men—it does not appear that any charge has ever been made, or any consideration received from Mr. Holladay for these services and supplies furnished.

Full copies of the arguments used and memorials presented by the Overland Mail and Express consideration received from Mr. Holladay for these services and supplies furnished.

Full copies of the arguments used and memorials presented by the Overland Mail and Express Company, in opposition to the proposed reduction of their rates, are herewith, in which there is no denial of the facts presented that the United States military forces located at the time at points on the route of travel were diverted from their accustomed and legitimate sphere of duties to assist the company, both in the nature of services rendered and materials furnished, in a manner not required of them by law or regulations, and which operated to the detriment of the United States service and to the advantage of the stage company, for which no remuneration was asked of or received from the company.

Nor does there appear in these memorials and arguments a counter-statement to the effect that any services or supplies were furnished by the company to the United States for which full remuneration was not asked and received by the company, although it appears by your letter that such statements are now made to Congress in Mr. Holladay's claim for relief.

The reduction of rates proposed by the Quartermaster-General was not approved by the Secretary of War, and full rates were paid to the company in accordance with the following decision of the Secretary of War ad interim that there should have been a stipulation arranged by the proper officers of the Quartermaster's Department with the proprietors of the stage line at the commencement of the transportation service to be performed, fixing the rates of such transportation. In default of this and in view of all the facts, it is concluded that justice requires the allowance of 33½ per cent. hitherto withheld. The Quartermaster-General will accordingly pay that amount."

As to any orders of the military authorities to change the route of travel, &c., you are respectfully informed that copies of such orders if issued can probably be furnished from the records of the Adjutant-General's Office.

J. D. BINGHAM, Acting Quertermaster-General, Brevet Brigadier-General, United States Army.

Hon. JOHN SCOTT, Chairman Senate Committee on Claims, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PLUMB. It does not appear that Mr. Holladay or any one for Mr. PLUMB. It does not appear that Mr. Holladay or any one for him cared to press the claim at that time in view of all the declarations then made from the Quartermaster-General's Office in regard to the state of the account between the Government and Mr. Holladay in regard to that service. I speak of these things because I think there is something in this lapse of time that is significant; and instead of its being properly said here that the Government has been tardy with Mr. Holladay, Mr. Holladay himself has been tardy in presenting his claim for reasons, of course, which are satisfactory to him, but which are far from satisfactory to me, especially when I am asked now to believe that Mr. Lincoln promised Mr. Holladay indemnity to the amount of half a million dollars, and Mr. Holladay did not discover that, or at least he did not make profert of it to Congress in any authentic way until about twelve or fifteen years after did not discover that, or at least he did not make profert of it to Congress in any authentic way until about twelve or fifteen years after the promise was made.

I have not anything to do with the political aspect of this case. I do not care to consider it as a democrat or as a republican. It does not make any difference to me whether a republican Senate or a democratic Senate may be charged with the responsibility of passing this bill. I am simply here to consider it as an individual acting under a sense of obligation to the Government of the United States, and I shall follow the conclusion at which I arrive, no matter whether the shall follow the conclusion at which I arrive, no matter whether the persons with whom I associate in following that conclusion are republicans or whether they are democrats. I shall regret, of course, that a number of my republican friends do not see it as I do; but that is neither here nor there.

neither here nor there.

In considering this claim I have been struck by the character of the proof. I find here the affidavit of Mr. R. L. Pease, a gentleman who is undoubtedly a pure and upright man. Mr. Pease says, referring to certain losses, that the losses were "reported" to him. He does not undertake to say of his own knowledge that the Indians did take this stock. The men who kept the stations where the stock was taken from, the employes of the Government, as well as the stagemen, who were present at that line, (because they were taken from the neighborhood of the military posts,) are not heard themselves to say anything at all about these losses.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to call his attention to the fact that Mr. Pease at that time was the superintendent, or at least the person in charge, of this overland mail, and the losses were reported to him officially, just as the losses that occur on a railroad are reported to the superintendent of that railroad ?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would suggest in addition that there is proof of the purchase of the stock to replace that which was taken.

Mr. PLUMB. There does not appear to be any evidence showing what was the practice on Mr. Holladay's line in that regard. The stock had to be replaced; but if any lawyer will tell me that the testimony of Mr. Pease establishes beyond controversy that that stock was lost, then I shall be willing to withdraw my convictions. He says:

From the 31st day of December, A. D. 1861, to the 21st day of March, A. D. 1862, I was one of the trustees in charge of all the property belonging and appertaining to the stage line carrying the mails from Atchison, Kansas, to Salt Lake City, commonly called now the Overland Stage Line.

Between the 31st day of December, 1861, and the 21st day of March, 1862, the lasses to said stage line were reported to me as such trustee, by the officers and employés thereof—

No officer or employé is named, no report is furnished to accompany the affidavit-and the number of mules and horses taken from said stage line by hostile Indi-ans, amounted to one hundred and seventy-three, and that this number of animals employed in said line were so taken by said Indians there certainly can be no doubt.

An opinion expressed by a very good man, and one which he undoubtedly believed; but the point I make is, where was the man who kept the station, where was the person in the immediate charge of the stock said to have been lost? To say that some good man testifies such losses were reported to him is not sufficient. Then some one conveniently, and not Mr. Pease as I will show you by his letter, puts an appendix to Mr. Pease's testimony to this effect:

LOSS AND DAMAGE DONE AS PER AFFIDAVIT OF R. L. PEASE.

Mr. Pease, conveniently, although he is used for some purposes, is not a witness for the purpose of stating the value of that stock; he makes no statement of the value of the stock; and yet some one, annomakes no statement of the value of the stock; and yet some one, annotating his testimony, puts at the bottom of it the statement that one hundred and seventy-three horses were stolen or lost, worth $200 apiece, and in the summer of 1863, thirty-four head of mules near Fort Halleck, worth $200 each, $6,800, Mr. Pease making no statement whatever in regard to the value of this stock. If Mr. Pease was good enough as an official to state on information and belief testimony which is to be taken to cover and establish the fact that that stock was left he suggest to have been early like and the stock it has stock to be stocked to the stock.

was lost, he ought to have been equally good to have established the fact that it had some value and what that value was.

Then there is Mr. Lemuel Flowers, who says he was division superintendent, and that during the time he was division superintendent, and that during the time he was division superintendent certain stock was taken off that portion of the line of which he was superintendent; but Mr. Lemuel Flowers does not state that one single bit of that stock was taken under his observations he does not bit of that stock was taken under his observation; he does not say that he saw a single bit of it taken or a single particle of the damage that he saw a single bit of it taken or a single particle of the damage done on that division; and yet there were hundreds and thousands of men traveling that line all the time; there were ranchmen every ten or fifteen miles; there were Mr. Holladay's employés; there were passengers in the coaches; there were soldiers at the stations which the military had along that line, and these facts, if they were facts, could have been attested, either one of them, by the separate affidative of twelve or fifteen or perhaps fifty.

vits of twelve or fifteen or perhaps fifty men.

There is something due to the consideration that when a man has There is something due to the consideration that when a man has it in his power to bring testimony to the front and does not do it, some little suspicion is to be cast on what he does bring, provided it all makes in his own favor. I do not care to go over this, because what I have already stated is about a sample of the whole. There is hardly an affidavit that is more specific until we get down to the Julesburgh affair; and when we come to consider the damage that was done at Julesburgh, the affidavit of the party who specifies what the losses were, says one item of loss was "about six thousand bushels of corn." Any one reading that affidavit must say that would have been stretching the thing to have said that it was more than six thousand bushels of corn; and yet whoever performed the annotating service to that affidavit in the addition to it, as in the other case, conveniently adds a thousand bushels of corn and makes it 7,000 bushels, and that goes into the total to make up the verdict of this committee. As corn, according to the testimony of these men, was worth only $13.66 a bushel, here was a small item of $13,666 that, by a slip of the too willing penman of this affair, creptinto the verdict.

And I notice another thing, that this corn is all worth a large sum of money, and that while witnesses called apparently on behalf of the Government testify that the cost of transportation was much less in bulk, the testimony of the witnesses of Mr. Holladay is taken in all instances, and there is an attempt to discredit the men who testified against them. Here is Mr. Foote, who was put on the stand by the claimant. Mr. Feote testifies not only in recard to the price tified against them. Here is Mr. Foote, who was put on the stand by the claimant. Mr. Foote testifies not only in regard to the price of corn but in regard to the value of the stations said to have been destroyed, and he says the retail price of corn was ten cents a pound, and yet the Indians did not burn up any corn of Mr. Holladay that is charged for at less than twenty cents a pound, I believe. So all the way through, the affidavits of persons not submitted to cross-examinaway through, the affidavits of persons not submitted to cross-examination, to the number of twelve or fifteen, have been taken against the oath of living witnesses, who were present before the committee to say that an entirely different state of facts existed throughout.

Mr. President, I am sustained in the statement I made, without any particular desire on my part to testify in the case, that in the summer of 1865 the Government paid for transporting corn from the Missouri River to Fort Halleck, one hundred and eighty miles beyond Julesburgh, where this great loss occurred, ten cents a pound. Corn during that period was never over a dollar a bushel on the Missouri River. Mr. Foote certifies that he bought it during some portion of that time as low as fifteen cents on the frontier of Kansas. Corn at a dollar a bushel would be nearly two cents a pound, and adding ten cents a pound for transporting it would make twelve cents a pound at Fort Halleck, and as a large amount of the corn that was destroyed was not transported so far, that might well have been taken into consideration in making up the sum total of Mr. Holladay's damage. damage.

When it comes to considering the losses of Mr. Holladay which occurred by reason of the removal of the route, it is assumed that the removal was an unwarrantable one, that the contractor was compelled to move the line from Julesburgh by way of Fort Laramie to the South Pass and the Cache la Poudre and Bridger's Pass upon the order of the Government. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. Edmunds] the other day made profert here of the letter of the Postmaster-General, in which he said, "Mr. Holladay is permitted" to do it. Any man who is familiar with the geography of that country will see that Mr. Holladay had good reason for desiring to make the removal, because he not only saved one hundred miles of travel but he saved as much, more in fact, because between Julesburgh and the mouth of the Cache la Poudre he was going in the direction of Denver west, where he was already required to carry the mail, thereby saving one hundred miles.

wer west, where he was already required to carry the mail, thereby saving one hundred miles.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. No one has stated or claimed that the removal made in 1862 was made by order of the Government. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPherson] referred to it the other day in some remarks which he submitted to the Senate, and I at that time stated distinctly that it was not claimed by Mr. Holladay nor has the committee found that that removal was made in con-day nor has the committee found that that removal was made in consequence of the order of the Government, but that it was made in consequence of Indian hostilities, which rendered it absolutely necessary that the line should be moved from the north line on which they were then running to the line farther south, which was farther removed from hostile Indians.

Mr. MORRILL. But I believe the Senator also admitted that claims for both removals were allowed by the committee.

Mr. PLUMB. Whatever the facts may be, I cannot understand on what basis the Government is to pay Mr. Holladay for the loss of stations unless in some cases where he was compelled by the act of the Government to abandon them. But Mr. Holladay puts in a claim for $2,000 apiece for twenty-six stations. I saw nearly all these stations in 1865, but I do not mean to say anything about that. The statement of Mr. Eaton, who does not even claim that he ever saw them, is the only testimony, I think, upon the subject of the value of the stations, except the testimony of Mr. Foote, and Mr. Eaton says:

That in the abandonment of said old route he abandoned twenty-six stations, which this officer temporary was a reconstructed and the same of the same of the construction.

That in the abandonment of said old route he abandoned twenty-six stations, which this affiant supposes were worth the sum of $2,000 each.

That in the abandonment of said old route he abandoned twenty-six stations, which this affiant supposes were worth the sum of $2,000 each.

Mr. Foote, who lived in this country, as he testifies, says he examined the stations left on each side of Laramie, which was the old route, and he thinks they are probably worth from $600 to $500 apiece, and yet the committee have taken the statement of Mr. Eaton, who says he supposes they were worth $2,000 apiece, against the positive testimony of Mr. Foote as to what the value was. More than that, Mr. Foote put up two stations on Mr. Holladay's line, and he says to you that he made a contract price for those two stations for $750 apiece. They were stations twenty-five by fifty feet, in which passengers along that line were fed. They were the hotel stations, and undoubtedly of much more than average value. In fact, except as to the eating stations, the stations along that line were decidedly inferior; many of them I have no doubt could have been replaced at any time for $100 apiece. They were simply single rooms, six or seven feet high, without a floor, floored with the sacks in which the corn was hauled, with an aperture cut in which sometimes glass was put, without any door, only a plank put over, with no roof except such as could be made by a pole and weeds; and yet they are said to have been worth $2,000 apiece, and the Government of the United States is to pay a man $2,000 apiece, and the Government of the United States is to pay a man $2,000 apiece for that kind of houses, abandoned as they were by his own suggestion, for his own benefit, and for his own profit.

Then there is a singularity about the value of horses upon this line; they were all worth the convenient sum of $2000 a piece. I have two

Then there is a singularity about the value of horses upon this line; Then there is a singularity about the value of horses upon this line; they were all worth the convenient sum of $200 a piece. I have two letters from Mr. Pease, both of which are important as fixing the value of the stock of the line and fixing the price that Mr. Holladay paid for the entire property when he bought it. He bought it some time after some of these damages occurred. He was not the owner of it in 1861 when the first of these damages occurred. He bought it on the 21st of March, 1862, and he paid for the entire line, stations, horses, mules, stages, harness, supplies of all kinds and descriptions whatsoever, the sum of $100,000, less than one-fifth what this committee allows him for what was destroyed. This was the price he paid at public vendue, he having a mortgage on the line to the amount of $220,000. I do not say that is conclusive as to the value, but I say it ought to come within forty rods of it, as the saying is. It is not credible that on a property which he bought at public vendue at $100,000 in the spring of 1862, he lost $526,000 upon during the time he carried the mail, and then had enough left to carry on his business.

There is another significant fact about it. Mr. Holladay had this sub-contract under the Overland Mail Company who took the original contract at $500,000 a year, the contract expiring by limitation at $365,000 a year; and the contract was let during the time when the Indian depredations on that line were as severe as they ever had been. Mr. Pease explains how that may be, because Mr. Holladay at the time of the losses which he did incur—he did incur losses—was making a large profit. I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read a couple of letters written by Mr. Pease.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

ATCHISON, KANSAS, March 31, 1878.

Dear Sir: Yours of the 28th at hand, in which you make a few inquiries as to Holladay's stage line that used to start overland from this place.

First. He acquired his title to the property of the line on March 21, 1862.

Second. The average value of the horses used on the line at that time I should say $125 to $140 each. As to the value of the mules there were two kinds in use—one, the small Mexican mule, worth say $75 to $190 each, and the ordinary sized mule worth $125 to $150. The value of the stations varied greatly—some were not very expensive, while others cost considerable money to build.

I could not, on the stations as a class, fix anything like a value. Harness, I think, was worth $60 to $75 for a "four-horse set."

Third. I ran the line as trustee from December 31, 1861, to March 21, 1862, a period of eighty-one days, during which time the receipts and expenses were in amount as follows:

Amount received for mail pay. Amount received for passengers and freights	$95,984 26,656
Total receipts were	122,641 87,051

Yours, truly,

R. L. PEASE.

Hon. P. B. Plumb, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Atchison, Kansas, April 13, 1878.

Dear Sir: Yours of the 4th at hand. A corporation known as the "Central Overland California and Pike's Peak Express Company" owned the property previous to Holladay's purchase.

The property of the line was bid off by Mr. Holladay's agent at the sale on March 21, 1862, for $100,000, which amount was credited on the above company's notes due to him; the total amount of said notes due Holladay was about two hundred and twenty thousand dollars, to secure which the trust deed was made, and under it the property was sold.

Holladay's purchase covered all the stations then built and property of the line. The mail contract was held and controlled by a company or corporation known as the "Overland Mail Company," from Missouri River to California, at $1,000 000, and they contracted with the above named Central Overland California and Pike's Peak Express Company to carry that portion of the route from Missouri River to Sale Lake City for $500,000 per year. The stock, stations, &c., purchased by Mr. Holladay were used in transporting the mails over that part of the route. By reference to the books at the Post-Office Department you can tell in whose name the "Overland contract" was made. It took effect July 1, 1861, I think.

Respectfully, yours,

R. L. PEASE.

Hon. P. B. Plumb, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

R. L. PEASE.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not propose to inquire how much money Mr. Holladay made on this line. Of course that would not affect the liability of the Government, but the fact is that he made a very large fortune to a certain extent, and the further fact is apparent from the reading of the letter of the Quartermaster-General that during about eighteen months of this time the Government paid him for transporting passengers on the line the sum of nearly ninety thousand dollars, paying him at the rate of thirty cents a mile. The papers that accompanied that communication I have in some way mislaid, but I think they are among the original papers in the case. The reference to the circumstances in the letter of the Quartermaster-General undoubtedly relates to the fact that Mr. Holladay had had more or less trouble along his line, that he had lost some stations, and so on, as was unquestionably the fact, and in view of all the circumstances the Quartermaster-General was pleased not to enforce a rule that he had observed with all other carriers in the settlement of their accounts, and did not therefore deduct the usual perceutage which the Government had been in the habit of deducting from railroads, from stage companies, from ferry companies, and so on.

the nable of deducting from railroads, from stage companies, from ferry companies, and so on.

It is a pretty large sum of money to pay to a line, especially a line which was vexed and harassed as this was; but it is further shown in the testimony that Mr. Holladay had the use of enlisted men who were in service along this line of road to help him rebuild his stations, to do the service which otherwise he would have had to employ civilians to do, that he had access to the mess of the men, their provisions and on the Holladay hears and his witnesses well know. visions, and so on. Mr. Holladay knew, and his witnesses well knew for him, that if the Government had taken from him supplies, sugar, coffee, hard-bread, and other provisions he had in use along his line, the Government was ready to pay him, and that all he had to do was to make proof of that claim before the Quartermaster-General and get it. That that fact was considered by the Committee on Claims in 1875 is evidenced by the response of the Quartermaster-General to the letter of Mr. Scott, chairman of the Committee on Claims, Mr. Scott having inquired whether Mr. Holladay had made such claim on the Quartermaster's Department or not. There was his easy and ample remedy for all that. He could have gone and said, "You have got so much of my hard-bread, so much of my coffee, so many of my tin-cups, and so many of these other things that go into the living of the soldier," and the Quartermaster-General would have paid him every dollar instead of his awaiting the action of Congress for fourteen years for that which he could have had in an easy, a simple, and a well-known way.

Mules and horses were lost along the line; stations were destroyed; men were killed; stage-coaches were damaged undoubtedly, but there is a great deal of that which was known simply because it was reported. The mules were turned out on the grass, the buffalo-grass of men were killed; stage-coaches were damaged undoubtedly, but there is a great deal of that which was known simply because it was reported. The mules were turned out on the grass, the buffalo-grass of that region; there was next to no corn, in fact no corn during the summer-time anywhere north of the Platte along that line; the mules were turned out, Indians occasionally got in, and a lone station-keeper, who went out onto the neighboring hills to look for the mules and did not see them, was swift to account for the absence of the mules that he lacked the courage to go out and look for across the prairie by reporting to the next stage that came up that the reason he did not have the mules there for a relay was the fact that the Indians had run them off. It is part of the history of that line. There were many instances of the return of mules of that sort to the line and of their employment at other portions of the line, and Mr. Murdock, in his testimony, speaks of the fact that some mules, which were supposed to have been run off by the Indians—and I am not sure but he says they were run off—were captured and brought back; that it was so in a great many cases I have no doubt, and I may say in a great many cases I know just as well as many of these witnesses know what they testify to here. The mules had simply got a little further away than usual, and in the course of two or three days they came back, when the Indians had not been around, and instead of being a case of larceny or of war it was simply a case of straying away; the mules turned up and went into the service again, but in the mean time the convenient affidavit or official report had intervened.

I have no ill-will toward Mr. Holladay. I am perfectly willing to say that whatever he was entitled to he ought to have had, two dollars for one. An effort has been made to enlist western people because Mr. Holladay was a western man and showed western enterprise.

lars for one. An effort has been made to enlist western people because Mr. Holladay was a western man and showed western enterprise. I had occasion to say when this bill was before the Senate heretofore, by way of comparison, that I thought the men who went out into that by way of comparison, that I thought the men who went out into that section of country, invited there, upon the surveyed lands of the Government, freighted across the plains between the frontier settlements of Kansas and the lines of Colorado and Montana, went there under the promise of the Government just as sacred, and it ought to have been just as powerful and just as effective as any promise Mr. Holladay went under when he carried the mail of the United States; but they did not get any pay from the public Treasury. If there is to be a discrimination made, it ought to be made in favor of the settler by the Government of the United States. When the trains were crossing the plains as they got to Fort Kearney, the order was that they a discrimination made, it ought to be made in favor of the settler by the Government of the United States. When the trains were crossing the plains, as they got to Fort Kearney, the order was that they should collect together in bodies of one hundred men, keeping the wagons together, and selecting an officer who would control them, and if they did not do this the Army said it would compel them to do it by military authority. Every man who freighted and every man who emigrated across the plains during those days was put under the control of military authority from the time he reached Fort Kearney until he passed the region where the Indians depredated. Those men are entitled to consideration; they are entitled to be dealt with on the same rule of justice. They were the men who built up the mining communities of Colorado, the constituents of my friend from Colorado, [Mr. Teiler.] They were the men who have made that mountain country what it is to-day, the chief mineral-producing region of the world. They are the men who endured the hardships without pay, and who gave to that country more in the way of enterprise and contributed more to its munificence than all the men of Mr. Holladay's stamp. There were enough men like Russell, Majors, and Waddell; like Walker; like Holladay; a class of men energetic and enterprising; but no one of them ever went beyond his lariat except he did it because he was a Government contractor. They got pay for every mile they went, and they did not go over untried trails either. The emigrants had been there before them; Frémont had been there, and all the men who followed in his trail.

As something has been said about the merits of Mr. Holladay, I desired simply to mention the merits of another class of men who have a sired simply to mention the merits of another class of men who have bested simply to mention the merits of another class of men who have bested simply to mention the merits of another class of men who have be and all the men who have have

As something has been said about the merits of Mr. Holladay, I desired simply to mention the merits of another class of men who have presented no claim here, who are seeking nothing at the hands of Congress. If this bill is to pass, why not provide for them also? Pass this bill, and you remove from the doors of the Senate the only unofficial and untitled man in the United States above all who, when the doors are opened, are to be found there, and the House of Representatives, on the other side of this building, will have the benefit which we are to be deprived of. As I said, I have no ill-will to anybody. I am just as much of a western man as any one on this floor; I rejoice and glorify in all the things that made that country, relieved it from the burden of the desert, made it what it is, as much as any one. I am willing to give the meed of praise, I am willing to give all due honor to every one who has contributed to the grand result; but when I am asked to vote for a claim like this I want proof as to the character of the damage done, as to the amount of the damage done, and I want that put in such a shape that there will be some justification for my vote to stand upon.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 13, noes 19.
Mr. INGALLS called for the yeas and nays.
Mr. WHYTE. I withdraw the motion.
The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. As I am a member of the Committee on Claims, and was a member of that committee at the time this bill was reported back to the Senate, I deem it proper to say a few words in defense of the report of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I understand it will be quite as agreeable to the Senator from Wisconsin to proceed at another time as now, and if the Senator from Maryland still desires to make his motion some persons who voted against it before will not vote against it now.

Mr. WHYTE. If the Senator will yield to me for the purpose of making that motion, I renew it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. WHYTE. I renew the motion that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

Superintendent of Census.

Hon. C. Schurz, Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. The communication will be referred to the Joint Select Committee on the Census.

Mr. COX. Would it be in order for me to make a motion as to the printing?

The SPEAKER. By consent it would.

Mr. COX. I ask consent to make a motion as to the printing of the document just read and the printing of certain other tabular statements which have been furnished as to the apportionment of Reprements which have been furnished as to the apportionment of Representatives under the tenth census.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. How does the gentleman desire to have them printed? In the RECORD? Mr. COX. Yes, sir. I desire to make a brief statement. Mr. STONE. For how long?

Mr. COX. Only a very few minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. The tables spoken of, I suppose, are from the Department?

The SPEAKER. The tables that have been read are from the Department

Mr. COX. I move to print the communication from the Secretary

Mr. COX. I move to print the communication from the Secretary of the Interior in the RECORD, together with two tables sent to the Committee on the Census this morning from General Walker, superintendent. These tables were finished on yesterday after much careful labor with the aid of a dozen clerks and their accomplished chief. I received them early this morning, and am directed by my committee to ask their printing in the RECORD and in pamphlet form. This ought to be done, as they bear upon the most important and interesting duty of Congress—apportionment. So much inquiry has been made by members on this topic that, before a report on the subject by the committee or action by the House, it would be well, in fact indispensable, to publish these official facts and calculations. The official return of the whole population of the United States is 50,152,866. Deducting Territories and District of Columbia, (783,271,) leaves the Representative population of the United States at 49,369,595. Table "A" shows this Representative population for the several States. It also shows the number of Representatives to be assigned to each State on an even division; that is, not counting any fraction, or residuum, or remainder. Besides, it shows, with the ratios and the fractions resulting, the final number of members for each State, running from the present number of members, 293, to 307, both inclusive. This calculation is made on this plan: the final number of members from 293 to 307 is used as a divisor in obtaining the ratio of representation to the whole Representative nonlation. 307, both inclusive. This calculation is made on this plan: the final number of members from 293 to 307 is used as a divisor in obtaining the ratio of representation to the whole Representative population. This ratio is applied successively to the population of each State. This process will yield in the aggregate a number less than the number of Representatives originally taken. The difference (according to the best and most equitable recent practice) should be made up by assigning to the States having the largest fractions additional Representatives. Whenever a sufficient number of additional Representatives has been assigned—on account of fractions to make up the total number taken—such assignment should cease. There is no place for moieties or arbitrary numbers, as will appear when the matter comes up for discussion. The first table, "A," is based on this method.

The second table, "B," is more compendious. It shows in its first column the present number under the apportionment of 1870 as dis-column the present number under the apportionment of 1870 as distributed among the several States; and in the second column the final number for each State on the census of 1880, on the basis of 293; and in the other columns that number with all the changes from 293 up to and including 307.

to and including 307.

From these columns gentlemen may see the loss or gain over the number of the present House under the apportionment of 1870 and the census of 1880, running from 293 to 307.

It appears that on the census of 1880 by the increase from 293 to 294, Massachusetts gains 1; by the increase to 295, Louisiana gains 1; by the increase to 296, Pennsylvania gains 1; by the increase to 297, Maryland gains 1; by the increase to 299, New York gains 1; by the increase to 299, Alabama gains 1; and when the total number of Representatives is increased to 300, one of the most striking features of the table appears. It is a curious eccentricity of mathematics—a paradox, the explication of which upon pure arithmetical logic, may be found in one of the communications which accompanies the tables. The paradox is that Alabama loses, at 300, the Representative she be found in one of the communications which accompanies the tables. The paradox is that Alabama loses, at 300, the Representative she gained at 299, and Texas and Illinois gain 1 each. At 301, Alabama regains the Representative so lost; by the increase to 302, Florida gains 1; by the increase to 303, Ohio gains 1; by the increase to 304, North Carolina gains 1; by the increase to 305, Tennessee gains 1; by the increase to 306, Pennsylvania gains 1; by the increase to 307, New York gains another, making two gains over 293, under the census of 1880, but still New York even then loses 1 from her present number assigned her under the apportionment of 1870.

of 1880, but still New York even then loses I from her present number assigned her under the apportionment of 1870.

Compared with the present number, under the census of 1870, each member can make his own calculation as to gains and losses. There are losses. There always will be during a lapse of ten years. The largest House we ever had before 1863 was under the census of 1830. Massachusetts then had 20 members; now she has 11. New York then had 40 members; now she will not hold her present number, 33, unless the number of members is 307. Virginia at one time had 23; now she has 9. New Hampshire once had 6; now she has 3. The losses are comparative, and every apportionment has witnessed such reductions. Vermont and New Hampshire may gain in population, but not relatively. They must lose in this apportionment, unless we make the number of members inordinately large. But all this is to be judged on a scrutiny of the tables. How high we must run the number of members so that no State will lose, members can compute for themselves from the data to be printed.

from the data to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York asks leave to introduce a bill in reference to the apportion-

Mr. COX. Yes, sir. This is not a bill from the committee; I desire to introduce it that it may be sent to the committee.

sire to introduce it that it may be sent to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the bill to be introduced by the gentleman from New York in his individual capacity as a member. Does he desire to have it read?

Mr. COX. No, sir.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask that it be printed in the Record.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6958) making an apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the tenth census; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Joint Select Committee on the Census, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COX. I ask that it may also be printed in the Record.

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

The bill is as follows:

An act making an apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the tenth census.

An act making an apportanement of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the tenth census.

Mr. COX. I ask that the communication from the Department of the Interior and the further tables to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD, and that 2,000 copies in pamphlet form be printed for in the RECORD, and that 2,000 copies in pamphlet form be printed for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER. The resolution for printing 2,000 copies must, under the rules, go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. COX. Can the order not be made by ananimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The law requires that the resolution shall go to the Committee on Printing. There will be little delay occasioned, as the committee can report at any time.

Mr. COX. I ask that the communication and all these tables be printed in the RECORD.

printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The resolution for printing 2,000 copies in pamphlet form was referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing.

The communication from the Interior Department is printed above.

The further tables referred to by Mr. Cox are as follows:

The further tables referred to by Mr. Cox are as follows:

Department of the Interior, Census Office, Washington, D. C., January 17, 1881.

Sir: I have the honor, in compliance with your request, to send you with this a table which exhibits the apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to their respective populations as ascertained at the tenth census of the United States, upon certain successive assumptions as to the total number of Representatives.

The numbers taken for the purpose range from 293 to 307, both inclusive. It appears that by the increase from 293 to 294, Massachusetts gains 1; by the increase to 295, Louisiana gains 1; by the increase to 296, Pennsylvania gains 1; by the increase to 297, Maryland gains 1; by the increase to 298, Mayland gains 1; by the increase to 298, Alabama gains 1. When the total number of Representatives is increased to 300, one of the most striking features of the table appears, Alabama loses the Representative she gained at 299, and Texas and Illinois gain 1 each. At 301, Alabama regains the Representative so lost; by the increase to 302, Florida gains 1; by the increase to 303, Ohio gains 1; by the increase to 304, Florida gains 1; by the increase to 305, Tennessee gains 1; by the increase to 306 Pennsylvania gains 1.

I have not carried the computation further, as this was the limit indicated in your request for the preparation of this table. The table exhibits in full the arithmetical process by which the number in each case is reached. The smaller table accompanying (marked Table B) exhibits simply the number of Representatives to be assigned to each State according to the total number taken.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANCIS A. WALKER,

Superistendent of Census.

FRANCIS A. WALKER, Superintendent of Census. Hon. S. S. Cox, Chairman Committee on Census, United States House Representatives.

FRANCIS A. WALKER, Superintendent of Census.

THE ALABAMA PARADOX.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, CENSUS OFFICE,

Washington, D. C., January 17, 1881.

DEAR SIR: I have your card requesting me to explain more in detail the peculiar feature of the apportionment tables submitted to you this morning, by which it appears that Alabama gains 1 Representative on the basis of 299 members, increasing from 7 to 8 members at that point, but loses 1 at 300, falling back at that point to 7 members. In reply I would say that this result is to be explained as follows:

creasing from 7 to 8 members at that point, but loses 1 at 300, falling back at that point to 7 members. In reply I would say that this result is to be explained as follows:

In increasing the number of Representatives, as shown in the table sent you, the number of inhabitants required to a representative is diminished at each such increase of members by between five and six hundred. Now, in dividing by the number so reduced the population of a State having a comparatively small population the influence upon its unrepresented fraction is very much less, necessarily, than in the case of a State having a large population. Thus, for example, if we assumed for convenience that the number of inhabitants would receive 30 Representatives were 160,000, a State having 4,801,000 inhabitants would receive 30 Representatives with an unrepresented fraction of 1,000; while a State having a population of 161,000 inhabitants would receive 1 Representative, with an equal unrepresented fraction.

If, however, the number of inhabitants to a Representative were reduced to 159,000, the fraction of the first State would rise to 31,000, while that of the second State would be only increased to 2,000. In other words, the effect upon the unrepresented fraction would be thirty times as great in the former as in the latter case.

Now, in the instances especially referred to, it happens that, with 299 Representatives, three States have fractions very closely approaching each other, namely: Alabama with 106,982. Illinois with 106,681, and Texas with 106,530. The number of inhabitants to a Representative sinks to 164,565, the net reduction being 551. This, which I may call a gain for the present purpose, to the States concerned, has to be multiplied in the case of Alabama only by 7, (the number of Representatives sassigned that State on an even division,) while in the case of Texas it is multiplied by 9, and in the case of Illinois by no less than 18.

The result is that, when we come to take 300 as the number of Representatives, the unrepr

 $106,982 + 7 \times 551 = 110,839$ $106,530 + 9 \times 551 = 111,489$ $106,681 + 18 \times 551 = 116,599$

Alabama's fraction becomes 110,839, while that of Illinois becomes 116,599, and that of Texas 111,489.

Consequently in the assignment of additional Representatives upon fractions, according to the total number of 300, Illinois and Texas receive an additional Representative each, while Alabama loses that which she gained at 299. At 301, however, she regains what was thus lost, her fraction rising to 114,668, while is sufficient to entitle her to the Representative whose addition to the previous number makes the House consist of 301, instead of 300 members.

Trusting that this explanation will answer your purposes, I remain, Truly, yours,

FRANCIS A. WALKER.

FRANCIS A. WALKER, Superintendent of Census.

Mr. STONE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The call for the regular order is equivalent to an objection to this resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, let it be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. STONE. I have no objection to that.

The resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

READJUSTING SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order, which is called for by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STONE,] is the unfinished business coming over from the third Monday of last month, being a motion under the direction of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to suspend the rules. The Clerk will read from the Journal.

The Clerk read as follows:

DECEMBER 20, 1880.

Mr. Stone, under instructions from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, moved that the rules be suspended so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3981) authorizing and directing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters in accordance with the provision of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866, and pass the same.

The question being put, namely, Will the House second the said motion? when no quorum voted thereon.

Mr. STONE demanded tellers.
Pending which,
On motion of Mr. White, (at four o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STONE] will resume their places as tellers. The question is on seconding the motion to suspend the

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that a fair and equitable plan would be to allow a portion of the time for the motion, then the time in opposition to be occupied, with the privilege for the affirmative side to close the argument, say for five minutes.

Mr. STONE. That is very satisfactory to us.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STONE] will open the argument.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STONE] will open the argument.

Mr. BLOUNT. Controlling the first ten minutes?

Mr. STONE. Or such portion as I may choose.

The SPEAKER. And the opposition to take fifteen minutes.

Mr. STONE. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads has had this bill under consideration, and has made a unanimous report in favor of its passage. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Haskell] introduced into this House a joint resolution providing for the standing of these postmasters in the Court of Claims. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, after looking into the matter, has reported unanimously the bill now pending as a substitute for that joint resolution.

has reported unanimously the bill now pending as a substitute for that joint resolution.

This question, Mr. Speaker, is not a new one. On two occasions the Senate has passed upon this matter. At the close of the last Congress an amendment was moved and placed on the deficiency appropriation bill in the Senate of the United States without any opposition whatever. It was, however, struck out of the bill in conference.

In the present Congress the Senate has again considered and passed a bill very similar to this one, Senate bill No. 903. It is the same as this with one execution; it extends only to providing for the read-this with one exception; it extends only to providing for the readjustment of those salaries where the postmasters have made formal application for readjustment.

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of the House has The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of the House has thought it proper and right, if we are to readjust those salaries at all, that all postmasters who have complied with the law of 1866 shall have the benefit of this readjustment. Under the law of 1866 amending the law of 1864, all those postmasters whose quarterly returns showed that they were entitled to an increase of their salaries were entitled to have their salaries readjusted, the act of 1866 making it the duty of the Postmaster-General thereupon to readjust them. The law of 1864, of which the law of 1866 is an amendment, provided in its second section as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster-General shall review once in two years, and, in special cases, upon satisfactory representation, as much oftener as he may deem expedient, and readjust, on the basis of the preceding section—

That is, the section fixing the salaries of postmasters anew, and changing the old law of 1854—

the salary assigned by him to any office; but any change made in such salary shall not take effect until the first day of the quarter next following such order, and all orders made assigning or changing salaries shall be made in writing and recorded in his journal, and notified to the Auditor for the Post-Office Department.

This law remained in force two years. It worked great hardship to many postmasters, especially in new sections of the country, where, in cases of postmasters of the fifth class, the only provision was that their salary should not exceed $100. Many of them were started in at $2 a year, and worked upon this salary. It became so apparent that the law was unjust that in 1866 Congress again interfered and passed the following provision as an amendment:

That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to establish salaries for postmasters, and for other purposes." approved July 1, 1864, be amended by adding the following: Provided, That when the quarterly returns of any postmaster of the third, fourth, or fifth class show that the salary allowed is 10 per cent. less than it would be on the basis of commissions under the act of 1854, fixing compensation—

That was the old law-then the Postmaster-General shall review and readjust under the provisions of

Now, Mr. Speaker, I contend, and the committee of the House has insisted, that this law is mandatory in its language; that it imposed a duty upon the Postmaster-General to readjust these salaries whenever the quarterly returns showed that the postmasters were entitled to such readjustment. No formal application was required to be made, but as the sworn returns came in from time to time it was the as tellers. The question is on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 149, noes 24.

So the motion was seconded.

The question was upon suspending the rules so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the following bill, and to pass the same:

Be it enacted, de., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to readjust the salaries of all postmasters and late postmasters of the third, fourth, and fifth classes, under the classification provided for in the act of July 1, 1864, whose salaries have not heretofore been readjusted under the terms of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866, who made direct official application or sworn returns of receipts and business for readjusted under the terms of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866, who made quarterly returns in conformity to the then existing laws and regulations, showing that the salary allowed was 10 per cent. less than it would have been upon the basis of commissions under the act of 1854; such readjustments to be made in accordance with the mode presented in section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866, and to do to this dreet; for in a letter dated February 10, 1879, addressed to Hon. D. C. Giddings, then a member of committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, the First Assistant Postmaster-General states distinctly that the act of June 12, 1866, and to salaries have not herefore been readjusted under the teams of such readjustment. Application having been made, and refused by the Department, a suit was brought in the Court of Claims, which awarded a judgment to a certain postmaster in the State of Kausas. The Government, however, appealed the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, which disposed of it by saying that until the salaries were readjusted there was nothing due the postmaster; that the readjustment was an executive act to be përformed by the Postmaster-General, and therefore these parties could have no standing in any court until this executive act had been performed. The case was turned out of court upon that proposition, the court suggesting that the claimant perhaps had a remedy by mandamus. A mandamus proceeding was then instituted in the district court of this city; but that court held that the Postmaster-General who refused to readjust having gone out of office and a new Postmaster-General having taken his place, a mandamus would not lie upon the successor for the refusal of his predecessor. There the matter ended so far as the courts were concerned; and then these parties came to Congress.

Mr. PAGF. I would like to ask the gentleman one question before he takes his seat. How much money will have to be appropriated out of the Treasury to meet the demands covered by this bill?

Mr. STONE. I am glad the gentleman has asked me this question. In the report which I had the honor to make to this House I stated, from the best information I had been able to obtain, that it had been estimated that these claims might amount to the sum of $500.000. from the best information I had been able to obtain, that It had been estimated that these claims might amount to the sum of $500,000. Since the question was up a letter has been written to the Postmaster-General requesting his judgment upon this matter. That letter was referred by him to the Sixth Auditor, who states that he has not at hand the information as to the amount that would become payable under the bill, but from the best information in his possession he presumes (and states it as his opinion) that at least $500,000 (the amount sumes (and states it as his opinion) that at least $500,000 (the amount stated in my report) will be required.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I would like to put one question to the gentleman. Is it or is it not true that a large number of these claims are held and manipulated here by special claim agents who would be largely benefited by this legislation?

Mr. STONE. Upon that point I have simply this to say: this matter was brought to my attention by the introduction of the joint resolution of the gentleman from Kansas. I understand that there is at least one attention by the area were when here some interest. lution of the gentleman from Kansas. I understand that there is at least one attorney—perhaps there are more—who has some interest in these claims. The particular attorney I have in my mind is the one who prosecuted the case through the Court of Claims and then unsuccessfully in the Supreme Court. Having thus become interested in the question he has since pursued it. I do not understand that there have been any sales or assignments of these claims. I do understand that this attorney has obtained powers of attorney from some of these postmasters providing for the payment of a certain percentage to him in case of the collection of their claims. Of this I know nothing except by hearsay. No gentleman has ever appeared before our committee or had anything to do with the maturing of this bill or report.

or report.

How many minutes remain to the affirmative?

The SPEAKER. Four minutes.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan who has just taken his seat, in response to an inquiry as to what amount of money would be taken out of the Treasury under the operation of this bill, stated that the Sixth Auditor of the Treasury, when the same inquiry was made to him, answered that he had not the data upon which to make a full and accurate estimate, but from what data he had he concluded it would appropriate at least $500,000. How much more it will take out of the Treasury he does not know, but that it will take at least $500,000 he is quite sure.

I find in the report of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate the following:

of the Senate the following:

It appears from a communication addressed to this committee by the Postmaster-General that in two States of the Union, namely, Iowa and Kansas, the persons who claim arrears of compensation under the acts referred to number seven hundred and forty-six, and the sum total of their claims is $55,324. If only one-half the number of claimants shall appear from each of the other States, and only half this sum be claimed by them, the total number will be 7,192, and the sum $525,578.

Suppose the number of claimants should be equal from the other States, suppose they should claim, instead of one-half the whole sum or double the sum, it is easy for us to understand then by the pending proposition we are asked to appropriate $2,000,000 from the public Treasury, and that, too, under a suspension of the rules. In reference treasury, and that, too, under a suspension of the rules. In reference to your various appropriation bills, you have seen fit, under the rules adopted for our proceedings, to require that they shall go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for examination, although a large number of the items contained in them are absolutely fixed by law. You are asked to pass this large appropriation under a suspension of the rules, when the gentleman from Michigan himself cannot tell you, and the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads cannot tell you, nor can the officers of the Committee laws.

like other claims presented for consideration to this body. It should have gone to the Committee on Claims. It should not have had the high prominence it now holds under the motion from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to suspend the rules and pass it.

What is the proposition contained in this report from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads? The act of 1854 compensated postmasters on the basis of the receipts of their respective offices. I have not time to read these acts in detail, and must content myself with merely stating their purpose. The act of 1864 provided for a different basis, and instead of compensating them by commissions upon actual receipts substituted a new system by which the receipts for two years preceding an adjustment of salaries were to be regarded as the basis; but in reference to special cases that act of 1864 contained this further provision:

And be it further enacted. That the Postmaster-General shall review once in two years, and, in special cases, upon satisfactory representation, as much oftener as he may deem expedient, and readjust, on the basis of the preceding section, the salary assigned by him to any office.

This was amended by the act of 1866. You will bear in mind the language is that "he shall review once in two years," and then it goes on, "and in special cases, upon satisfactory representation, as much oftener as he may deem expedient." Now, in the first place, it is uncertain as to the character of the representations. That is a matter for the Postmaster-General to determine whether the representations are sufficient or not.

entations are sufficient or not. Mr. HASKELL rose.

Mr. HASKELL rose.

Mr. BLOUNT. No; I must object to any interruption. The Postmaster-General, it is provided, shall review once in two years, and in special cases, upon satisfactory representation, as much oftener as he may deem expedient, readjust on the basis of the preceding section the salary assigned by him to any office.

Mr. STONE. The law of 1864—

Mr. BLOUNT. It is understood I have the time and I do not yield for interpretice.

for interruption.

The SPEAKER. No one interrupts the gentleman but gentlemen who make remarks sitting in their chairs.

Mr. BLOUNT. And that interrupts me. According to section 8 of the act of 1866 the following amendment was made to the act of

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted. That the act entitled "An act to establish salaries for postmasters and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1864, be amended by adding the following: "Provided, That when the quarterly returns of any postmaster of third, fourth, or fifth class show that the salary allowed is 10 per cent. less than it would be on a basis of commissions under the act of 1854, fixing the compensation, then the Postmaster-General shall review and readjust under the provisions of said section."

That is the whole of this question. The gentleman has failed to read, in this connection, the whole of the section which is proposed to be amended. This is only a part of the section. Under that section the discretionary power, to which I have already referred, was vested in the Postmaster-General. Under the operation of that section, and under the administration of the Post-Office Department, it tion, and under the administration of the Post-Office Department, it was complained that in one town or village or community readjustment was granted, while in another, and perhaps through prejudice or some improper motive, readjustment was refused; and that accordingly the discretion vested in the Postmaster-General in practice was being abused, and this provision, therefore, was rendered necessary to provide a remedy. Then the Postmaster-General was not to address himself to his discretion, but it was provided that when the quarterly returns of any postmaster should show that the salary allowed was 10 per cent. less than it would be on the basis of commissions under the act of 1854, then he should review and readjust under the provision of said section.

commissions under the act of 1854, then he should review and readjust under the provision of said section.

So far as I know, Mr. Speaker, there has been no difficulty in this matter. These readjustments have taken place from time to time. The report of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of this House embraces a letter from Mr. Tyner, First Assistant Post-master-General. He tells you these salaries were readjusted long ago. He does not know whether applicants for readjustments made their applications under the act of 1864 or 1866. It does not appear, however, there has been any complaint on the part of persons who their applications under the act of 1864 or 1866. It does not appear, however, there has been any complaint on the part of persons who saw fit to avail themselves of this section.

Now, sir, I desire the House to bear in mind when these things occurred. It was under the act of 1864—sixteen years ago. In 1872 the whole basis was changed. These readjustments waited under that act for all these years. This matter has been agitated from time to time. It has grown old. The Post-Office Department has discouraged it all the while. An attorney now appears connected with the case. With how many post-offices he is connected I do not know, but I am informed that with a large number of them he has a contract to the effect that if he can secure the passage of this bill he gets for himself one-fourth of the proceeds. That is, if we pay $2,000,000 he gets one-half million of dollars for his own services in he gets for himself one-fourth of the proceeds. That is, if we pay $2,000,000 he gets one-half million of dollars for his own services in although a large number of the items contained in them are absolutely fixed by law. You are asked to pass this large appropriation under a suspension of the rules, when the gentleman from Michigan himself cannot tell you, and the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads cannot tell you, nor can the officers of the Government tell you, exactly what amount of money is involved if the proposition should become a law.

Again, sir, this is a substitute for a joint resolution, providing for readjustment of the claims of postmasters, and it should be treated demand; claims that have no vitality whatever until they are brought to light by people hanging around the Capitol and seeking to get some hold upon the Treasury. This character of claims has been gathered up from all parts of the country by these claim agents and placed before us with a request that we shall authorize this raid and placed before us with a request that we shall authorize this raid upon the Treasury to the extent of perhaps two or two and a half million of dollars, for no one can tell the full extent of it.

These claims, as I have said, Mr. Speaker, for the last sixteen years have lain dormant. This House after all these years is now called upon to suspend the rules and pass a bill for their payment without opportunity of discussion or debate, only a simple allowance of fifteen minutes to state the points of the case for the Government.

The gentleman says that the Senate bill is similar in all respects to this one. It is by no means similar. The Senate bill confines the provisions of this act to places where application for readjustment has been made. This bill goes far beyond that. It takes a far wider scope. It takes in every possible case under that old construction; and, Mr. Speaker, let it be borne in mind that this issue, out of which these claims arise, grows out of a difference of construction between these claims arise, grows out of a difference of construction between the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of this House and the then Postmaster-General. That difference of opinion was in reference to the construction of a statute.

You are now asked to suspend the rules and give a construction dif-ferent from that which has already been given by that Department, and thereby take $2,600,000, perhaps more, out of the Treasury. I say it is wrong, and I hope the bill will not be permitted to pass this

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, how much time is there remaining?
The SPEAKER. The opponents of the bill have three minutes'

Mr. PAGE. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it will be dangerous for this House, with only thirty minutes allowed for discussion and without opportunity of amendment, to pass an important measure without opportunity of amendment, to pass an important measure like this, to involve this Government in an expenditure of perhaps a million of dollars or more.

I am satisfied that nearly all of the claims contemplated by this bill are now in the hands of claim agents. While, perhaps, at the time the parties may have had some right to demand from the Post-Office Department moneys which they did not receive, yet I believe that the passage of this bill will not benefit a single postmaster throughout the whole country, because not one dollar in ten provided here, or appropriated to pay for the purposes of this bill, will get to the men who really performed the service. Therefore I hope the House will reflect before allowing, under thirty minutes' discussion, the passage of such an important measure as this, and one involving the Government in a vast expenditure of public money.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia has well said that Government in a vast expenditure of public money.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia has well said that this bill should have gone to the Committee on Claims; that it should there have been first considered, and then brought into this House by that committee as private claims of all kinds are brought in; that it should have had the consideration given to private bills or claims, and presented with all opportunities afforded to the members of this House for amendment and debate. I went through the tellers myself and seconded the demand for the previous question, but I did it for the purpose of giving the gentleman from Michigan an opportunity to explain to this House the bill that he proposed to pass to-day under a suspension of the rules. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we ought to be a little careful at this time before we put our hands into the Treasury of the United States and extract therefrom a million of dollars, perhaps, or certainly not less than half a million of dollars, as to be a little careful at this time before we put our hands into the Treasury of the United States and extract therefrom a million of dollars, perhaps, or certainly not less than half a million of dollars, as admitted by the gentleman who reports the bill, to pay these claims and give certain attorneys now in the city of Washington an opportunity of handling this money. I hope, sir, the bill will not pass.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, the honorable gentleman from Georgia says the question involved this day in this bill is a matter of construction of law on the part of the then Acting Postmaster-General. It has been stated that the lower regions are paved with good intentions. If that be true, the penitentiaries of the country have been paved with just such constructions of law as this Postmaster-General has put upon the clear meaning of a statute of the United States, which he has not only willfully violated but refused absolutely to execute. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that this bill, which provides that the small salaries found to be due under the laws of the United States from 1866 to 1872 to these parties, shall be executed in accordance with their spirit and intent, and that the money actually found due to these parties shall be paid to them. It is not a construction of law at all. The bill remands the construction to the Postmaster-General and his Department. It takes not a dollar from the Treasury until that plain language of the law is complied with by the Department, which has refused up to this date to comply with it.

Mr. Speaker, it is claimed here that this comes from claim agents. I tell you I received, long before this was brought to Congress, letters and petitions from my constituents asking me to aid them in securing an act of Congress for their relief; and some of them had employed paid attorneys years ago to prosecute their claims, but were refused justice. And it is not until every legal redress has been exhausted that they come here now and in this bill ask you, not for any appropriation of money,

I have in my own district a man who was compelled to stay in his office at seventeen or eighteen dollars a year salary until the town grew and the business of the office demanded an expenditure of over one thousand dollars a year to run it. His salary was never fully readjusted. He received only a small portion of the money that was due to him under the law, only a small portion of what it cost to run his office, saying nothing of his expenses.

These claims are claims arising under the action of Congress. This bill merely says that the Department shall apply that law and pay whatever may be found due. I care not though it be ten million dollars, it is just and right, and I stand here to advocate that the law of the land shall be obeyed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Stone] to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill, and pass it.

Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. MORRISON called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered, fifty members voting therefor.
The question was taken; and there were—yeas 159, nays 81, not voting 52; as follows:

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I call for a second to the motion to suspend the rules, and ask that the bill and the report be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, &c.. That it was the true intent and meaning of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act confirming the title to certain lands," to ratify and confirm the adjustment and settlement of 1866 therein referred to, and the title to the lands claimed, allowed, set apart and received thereby and thereunder, as a full, complete, and final adjustment and satisfaction of all right and claim of the State of Iowa, and its grantees, under the joint resolution of Congress, March 2, 1861, entitled "Joint resolution to quiet title to lands in the State of Iowa," and the act of Congress approved July 12, 1862, entitled "An act confirming a land claim in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes;" and that the said act of 1871 was not intended to be, and shall not be construed to be, a grant of additional lands to said State, or its grantees; and that all lands for which indemnity lands were selected and received, except such as were sold by the United States prior to the said joint resolution of 1861, are, and are hereby declared to be, public lands of the United States: Provided, That the title of all bona fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with pre-emption or homestead claimants, are hereby ratified, confirmed, and made valid: And provided further, That the claims of all persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, entered or remained upon any tract of said lands, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, are hereby confirmed to them, their heirs or assigns, and upon due proof thereof, and payment of the usual fees and price, shall be carried to patent.

Sec. 2. That it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-General, within ninety days after the passage of this

The amendment reported from the Committee on the Public Lands was to add to the second section of the bill the following:

Provided, That no part of this act shall apply to or in any manner affect lands certified by the United States to the State of Iowa for the use and benefit of the Keokuk, Fort Des Moines and Minnesota Railroad Company, its successors or assigns.

Mr. CONVERSE. Cannot the reading of the reports be dispensed with? They are very lengthy, and several matters are discussed in them which are not of very vital importance. It will take at least an hour or an hour and a half to read the reports, and as fifteen minutes on each side is allowed for discussion, I think the merits of the bill can be presented in that time.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. It will take four hours to fully present the merits of this bill. It is one of the most villainous bills ever pre-

"[H. R. 1867, Forty-sixth Congress, second session.]

"A bill to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it was the true intent and meaning of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, entitled 'An act confirming the title to certain lands,' to ratify and confirm the adjustment and settlement of 1866 therein referred to, and the title to the lands claimed, allowed, setapart, and received thereby and thereunder, as a full, complete, and final adjustment and satisfaction of all right and claim of the State of Iowa, and its grantees, under the joint resolution of Congress, March 2, 1801, entitled 'Joint resolution to quiet title to lands in the State of Iowa, and the act of Congress approved July 12, 1862, entitled 'An act confirming a land claim in the State of Jowa, and for other purposes; 'and that the said act of 1871 was not intended to be, and shall not be construed to be, a grant of additional lands to said State, or its grantees; and that all lands for which indemnity lands were selected and received, except such as were sold by the United States prior to the said joint resolution of 1861, are, and are hereby declared to be, public lands of the United States: Provided, That the title of all bona fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with pre-emption or homestead claimants, are hereby ratified, confirmed, and made valid: And provided further, That the claims of all persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, entered or remained upon any tract of said lands, not exceeding one hundred and s lars.

The idea of improving the navigation of the Des Moines River had its origin more than thirty-seven years ago in the fertile brain of that impracticable theorist, Captain Fremont, of the Topographical Engineers, and he, more than any other man, is responsible for the squandering of so much treasure in an attempt to carry into practice his wild and speculative theories of civil engineering on that river. (Executive Document No. 32, third session Twenty-seventh Congress.)

The numerous acts of Congress and of the Legislature of Lows on this subject, the numerous and contradictory decisions and rulings of the different Secretaries the General Land Office, and of the Attorney-General, and the ingenious and apparently conflicting opinious of the Federal courts and of the State courts in one form or another on this prolific subject, form a curious history of many pages, instructive alike to the legislator, the lawyer, and the political economist.

The material facts which connect themselves with this measure and justify its provisions are the following:

In Angust, 1946, Congress assended an act entitled "An act granting certain lands for the contract of the Bessel and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be, and hereby is granted to said Territory, one equal moticity in alternate sections, of public lands, (remaining unsold and not otherwise disposed of, encumbered, or appropriated,) in a strip five Territory, one equal moticity in alternate sections, of public lands, (remaining unsold and not otherwise disposed of, encumbered, or appropriated,) in a strip five or agents to be appointed by the governor thereof, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the lands hereby granted shall not be conveyed or disposed of by said Territory, nor by any State formed out of the same, except as said improvement shall progress; that is, the said Territory or State may sell so much of said lands as shall produce the sum of $50,000, and then the said almost an entity to the residue of a said lands sufficient to replace the amount expended, and the fact of expenditures shall be certified as aforesaid.

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That tail can be discussed, and the fact of expenditures shall be certified as aforesaid."

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That as all Des Moines River shall be and forever remain a public highway for the use of the Government of

"Sir: In answer to your inquiry, I have the honor to state that the amount of unsold land within five miles on each side of the Des Moines River, from its mouth to the Raccoon Fork, proposed to be granted to the Territory of Iowa by House bill No. 106, is estimated at 261,000 acres. There have been sold in the Territory of Iowa, to the 1st of January, 1846, 1,739,050 acres, and the amount of the purchase money received by the United States to the same date is $2,164,102.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant,"

"JAMES SHIELDS."

"JAMES SHIELDS,

The claim of the author of that measure, while it was pending, and it was so represented by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, was that the grant only extended to Raccoon Fork, and embraced about 261,000 acres. The State of Iowa has already received on account of the Des Moines River improvement 556,686.74 acres above Raccoon Fork, and about 300,000 acres below, besides 56,000 under the resolution of 1861. She has received from the United States 297,000 acres as indomnity for these very lands in controversy, and now these lands themselves are claimed, notwithstanding the large indemnity, by persons claiming title from the State of Iowa.

In addition to the foregoing facts the act of August 8, 1846, in a little over two months after its passage, received construction by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the State of Iowa, by her acts, also construed the act limiting the grant to the Raccoon Fork.

On the 17th day of October, 1846, Mr. James A. Piper, Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office, addressed the following letter to the register and receiver of the land office at Iowa City, relating to this grant:

"GENERAL LAND OFFICE, October 17, 1846.

"GENTLEMEN: By the first section of the act of Congress approved 5th of Angust,

"GENERAL LAND OFFICE, October 17, 1830.

"GENERAL LAND OFFICE, October 17, 1830.

1846, entitled 'An act granting certain lands to the Territory of Iowa to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River, in said Territory,' it is enacted 'that there be, and hereby is, granted to the Territory of Iowa, for the purpose of alding said Territory to improve the navigation of the Des Moines River from its mouth to the Raccoon Fork, (so called,) in said Territory, one equal moiety, in alternate sections of the public lands, (remaining unsold and not otherwise disposed of, encumbered, or appropriated,) in a strip five miles in width on each side of said river, to be selected within said Territory by an agent or agents to be appointed by the governor thereof, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States."

"This grant, you perceive, affects the land five miles in width on each side of the Des Moines, from the southern boundary of your district to the Raccoon Fork of the Des Moines, as shown by the inclosed diagram. No action can be had by you in this matter, however, till you are advised by the governor whether he will select the sections with the odd or those with the even numbered. As soon as you are so advised you will please reserve from sale or entry of any kind all the unsold and unappropriated lands in the sections selected by him till further orders from this office.

"Register and Recorder,
"Iowa City, Iowa."

A list and diagram of the vacant lands in sections lying below Raccoon Fork were transmitted to the governor, with a request to him to determine whether he would take the lands in the oven sections or in the odd sections, stating that when selected the list of the sections would be immediately prepared and submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury for his approval, and when so approved would be certified.

The governor appointed Jesse Williams and Josiah H. Bonney to make the selections, who reported December 17, 1846, that they had selected the odd sections designated on the map furnished by the General Land Office.

This was a full compliance with the first section of the act, and defined and located the grant of lands lying below Raccoon Fork. The selection was made by an agent of the Territory. The simple right remained to the State of accepting the grant or not; which was done by the legislative act of January 9, 1847. By the joint act of the land officers of the United States, and the agent of the Territory, the selection, according to the terms of the grant, was made, and the act became an executed act from the date of the approval of the list by the Secretary of the Treasury.

On the 1st day of April, 1849, there was filed in the office of the secretary of state of Iowa "a condensed list showing the tracts vacant and undisposed of in the odd sections within five miles of the Des Moines River, from its mouth to the Raccoon Forks, (so called,) selected by the commissioner appointed by the governor of Iowa Territory, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved on the 8th day of August, 1846, entitled 'An act granting certain lands in the Territory of Iowa to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River in said Territory, within the limits of the I swa City district. This list is dated March 12, 1849, is authenticated by the signature of Richard M. Young, Commissioner, and does not contain the lands in controversy, but does include al

But through influences which cannot now be certainly known another construction was discovered, and Richard M. Young, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, wrote to the board of public works of Lows, on the 23d of February, 1848, interpreting the grant as extending to the northern boundary of the State. The President of the United States, however, on the 19th day of June, 1848, proclaimed the lands for sale above the fork of the river, and 25,000 acres were sold and pre-empted thereunder, against which the board of public works protested in a letter to the Commissioner, dated September 18, 1848. This was followed by a remonstrance from the Senators and Representatives of Lowa then in Washington, including A. C. Dodge, the author of the bill, and others who had asked the passage of the bill on the representation that the grant did not extend above Raccoon Fork, and who had acquiesced in that decision for two years, dated January 8, 1849, addressed to Hon. Robert J. Walker, Secretary of the Treasury, against the construction of the act which limited the grant to the lands lying below the Raccoon Fork.

struction of the act which limited the grant to the lands lying below the Raccoon Fork.

The Secretary, in a reply dated March 2, 1849, agreed with them and asserted that the grant extended on both sides of the river, from its mouth to its source. In pursuance of this letter Mr. Young, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, on the 1st of June following, directed the register and receiver at Lowa City to withhold from sale the lands north of the Fork. It may be remarked here that the jurisdiction of said officers only covered a part of said lands extending only up to the eighty-third township.

The Secretary of the Treasury (Walker) went out of office without this opinion having received execution. Attorney-General Johnson, in his opinion of July 19, 1850, concurred in Walker's opinion; but an adverse opinion had been given by Mr. Ewing, the first Secretary of the Interior, on the 6th of April previous, as follows:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, "Washington, April 6, 1850.

"Washington, April 6, 1850.

"Sir: Having considered the question submitted to me connected with the claim of the State of Iowa to select under the act of August 8, 1846, lands for the improvement of the Des Moines River, I am clearly of the opinion that you cannot recognize the grant as extending above the Raccoon Fork without the aid of an explanatory act of Congress. It is clear to my mind, from the language of the act of August, 8, 1846, itself, that it was not the intent of the act to extend it farther. My construction is confirmed by the report of the committee and the accompanying papers. If in any report to Congress you have recognized the grant as extending to the source of the river, it will be proper to correct it, that Congress, if they see fit, may extend the grant. The opinion expressed by the late Secretary of the Treasury on the subject is entitled to great respect, but I cannot concur in it, and the law not having been carried into effect by him, his opinion, merely expressed, is open for reversion.

"The lists of selections and other papers submitted with your letter of the 13th ultimo are herewith returned.

"As Congress is now in session, and may take action on the subject, it will be proper, in my opinion, to postpone any immediate steps for bringing into market the lands embraced in the State's selections.

"I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant, "T. EWING, Secretary."

"The COMMISSIONER of the General Land Office."

Alex. H. Stuart was Mr. Ewing's successor in the Department of the Interior, and, on application, Attorney-General Crittenden, under date of June 30, 1851, gave his opinion to the Secretary of the Interior as follows:

"The set of Congress of August's, 1846, granting to the Territory of Iowa, for the purpose of alding to improve the navigation of a Mones River from its mouth to the Raccoon Fork, one dynamic and the state of the public lands in a strip, through of the Secretary of the Treasury, did not include the land along the secretary of the Secretary of the Treasury, did not include the land along the secretary of the Secretary of the Treasury, did not include the land along the secretary of the Treasury, did not include the land along the secretary of the Treasury, did not include the land along the secretary of the Treasury, did not include the land along the selections made under it in the event of a disagreement as to the proper construction of the act.

"Nor was the opinion of Attorney-General of July 19, 1850, more than advisory. No law makes it binding upon the Secretary of the Interior.

"I am clearly of opinion that the proper construction of the law as respects the grant was given by the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of October 17, 1846, before mentioned, and that the attempt to extend the law so as to include the lands above the Raccoon Fork to the headwaters of the Des Moines River is not warranted by the statute. Notwithstanding the decision of the Secretary of the Interior (Mr. Ewing) of April 6, 1850, the Congress have made no explanatory act in favor of Iowa; so far as I am informed, made any complaint to the Congress challenge of Iowa, so far as I am informed, made any complaint to the Congress the United States for relief against the manner in work, volume 5, page 390-395.

On the Sth of July, 1851, Mr. Shaart, Secretary Ewing, and again on the States for relief against the manner in work, and the supersistent of the construction of the grant of August 8, 1846, was more a judicial question the heavy of the proper construction of the grant of but without changing his opinion, and in his order expressly saying it was unchanged, he ordered selections to be allowed above the Fork up to the north boundary of the State.

"On question of duty of the present Secretary, (McClelland,) it is held—"The true construction of the act and its intention were to grant lands from the mouth of the river to Raccoon Fork, and no further."

The following is the opinion of Judge J. S. Black on the subject, (Lester's Land Laws, No. 3 page 504:)

"The grant is certainly obscure in its phraseology. A person whose faculties are sharpened by an interest in the claim can see it extending to the headwaters of the Des Moines plainly enough; while an advocate of the other side might perceive with equal clearness the construction which stops at the Raccoon Fork. Nay, more, it has actually divided the judgment of the ablest men and the soundest lawyers in the service of the Government. Mr. Walker and Mr. Johnson could not have been in favor of the larger interpretation unless there had been cogent and good reasons for it. On the other hand, Mr. Ewing, Mr. Crittenden, and Mr. Cushing would not have set their faces against it if opposite considerations of great weight had not been presented to them. And surely, if it had been a tolerably plain case either way, Mr. Stuart and Mr. McClelland would not have kept it poised in their scales for seven years without determining where the preponderance was; much less would either of them have offered to settle it by compromise.

"In truth, this law has been treated for a dozen years as no plainly written law could be treated.

"But for my own part, I have not the least doubt about it. My reason may seem paradoxical, but the very obscurity of the grant, in my judgment, makes it clear. It is out of these doubts that certainty grows. In every doubtful case we know very well what we ought to do as soon as we ascertain which party is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. We shall see who is entitled to it here. It is well settled that all public gr

"Acts which were supposed to have but little in them when they passed will expand into very large dimensions afterward. An ingenious construction will make that mischievous which was intended to be harmless.

"The remedy for these evils, and they are evils to the public morals as well as to the Treasury, is to let all men know that they can get nothing from the United States except what Congress has chosen to give them in words so plain that their sense cannot be mistaken. I do not know any reason for suspecting the slightest bad faith in this case, but it comes within a general rule which must be maintained in order to prevent a general mischief.

"It should, however, be remembered that the grant was construed at the Land Office, immediately after its passage, to extend no further than the Fork, and this was acquiesced in by the State authorities for upward of two years. The idea that it went to the source of the river was certainly an afterthought.

"I do not say that this estops them now, or that their mistake, if it had been a mistake, should prevent them from getting all that was given. But when this law was on its passage it would have been easy to say that half the land on each side of the river up to its source should belong to the Territory. Not being said, we cannot presume that it was intended. A word or two would have put the meaning beyond the reach of a doubt; but the ambiguity was left in the bill, and leaving it there was the fault of its framers and its friends. They, and not the United States, must suffer the consequences.

"Yours, very respectfully, joint presume that it was intended. A word or two would have put the meaning beyond the reach of a doubt; but the ambigity was left in the bill, and leaving it there was the fault of its tramers and its friends. They, and not the United Statos, most was the fault of its tramers and its friends. They, and not the United Statos, and the statos of the statos of the statos. A sale of public land in violation of a treaty or statute is a nullity. (Ladiga vs. Roland, 2 Howard, 590.)

As a matter of fact, after June 1, 1854, no certificate by the governor was sent to the President of the United States until April 23, 1858, more than one month after the State had quitolaimed to the Des Moines Navigation Company its interest in lands already. This certificate, being it violation of the statute of 1866, is void.

In the year 1862 Congress enacted the following, which was approved on the 12th of July:

In the year 1862 Congress enacted the following, which was approved on the 12th of July:

"That the grant of lands to the then Territory of Iowa, for the improvement of the Des Moines River, made by the act of August 8, 1846, is hereby extended so as to include the alternate sections (designated by odd numbers) lying within five miles of said river, between the Raccoon Fork and the northern boundary of said State; such lands are to be held and applied in accordance with the provisions of the original grant, except that the consent of Congress is hereby given to the application of a portion thereof to aid in the construction of the Keokuk, Fort Des Moines and Minnesota Railroad, in accordance with the provisions of the act of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, appreved March 22, 1858. And if any of said lands shall have been sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States before the passage of this act, excepting those released by the United States before the passage of this act, excepting those released by the United States to the grantees of the State of Iowa, under joint resolution of March 2, 1861, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to set apart an equal amount of lands within said State to be certified in lieu thereof: Provided, That if the State shall have sold and conveyed any portion of the lands lying within the limits of this grant, the title of which has proved invalid, any lands which shall be certified to said State in lieu thereof by virtue of the provisions of this act, shall inure to and be held as a trust fund for the benefit of the person or persons, respectively, whose titles shall have failed as aforesaid."

This act is to be construed by the same rule of strict construction. It refers to three classes of lands not granted—

1. Lands released to the State under the resolution of 1861.

2. Lands sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States before the passage of this act.

3. Lands sold and conveyed by the State, the title to which has proved invalid.

This act is to be constructed by the same rule of strict construction. It refers to three classes of lands not granted—

1. Lands released to the State under the resolution of 1861.
2. Lands sold and conveyed by the State, the title to which has proved invalid. The lands granted are:
3. Lands unsold or not otherwise disposed of, which in the settlement were called "lands in place," not before certified.
2. Indemnity lands for the lands where the title of the State had failed.
Up to that time the lands improperly certified were reserved from public sale. The first sale advertised was the proclamation of June 19, 1848, which only included the lands up to 83 N. and 26 W. This was revoked by Commissioner Young, in a letter of instructions to the register and receiver at Jowa City, under date of June 1, 1849. They were directed to withhold from sale all odd-numbered sections within the miles of the river and above the Raccoon Fork.

From that time until 1856 the lands within the supposed grant were withheld. It was then claimed for the railroads entitled to lands whose routes crossed this reservation, and was reserved from sale.

In 1860, after it was decided that the grant did not extend above the Raccoon Forks, it was reserved from public sale for the benefit of actual settlers, grantees of the State. Their titles were confirmed by the joint resolution of 1861.

As the Navigation Company claimed that those lands passed into it under the same resolution, and the railway companies claimed under the act of 1855, the land remained "reserved from sale." The lands claimed were not, in the sense of the law, "public lands" mentioned in the act of 1855.

"The words' public lands' are habitually used in our legislation to describe such as are subject to sale or other disposal under general laws. That they were so employed in this instance is evident from the fact that to them alone could the order withdrawing lands from pre-emption, private entry, and sale, apply. (Newhall vs. Sanger, 2 Otto, 782.)"

Under the act of 1853, lands unsurveyed which on survey proved to be school sections, the State's patent to another party was void, and the remedy of the State was to locate indemnity lands unsurveyed which on survey proved to be school sections, the State's patent to another party was void, and the remedy of the State was to locate indemnity lands.

In this case the State admitted that their title had failed to 25,487.87 acres located or settled upon while the grant was conceded not to extend above the Raccoon Fork. (See deed of 18th May, 1858, to the Navigation Company.)

"And it is understood that among the lands excepted and not granted by the State to said company are 25,482.87 acres lying immediately above Raccoon Fork, supposed to have been sold by the General Government, but claimed by the State of Iowa."

This bill asks that the remainder, for which the State obtained indemnity, shall be declared public lands; that the land officers may be empowered to receive proofs of pre-emption or homestead claims, and the settlers may have the full benefit of the act of March 3, 1853.

It is claimed by the opponents of the bill that all the questions that can arise between the settlers and the Des Moines Navigation Company have been passed upon, and with some little asperity it is publicly stated, and in the public prints, that the bill proposes to reverse decisions of the Supreme Court, The case of Wolcott vs. The Des Moines Company to Wolcott. In deciding the case the court said expressly, on page 684:

"The land in question is one of the sections thus selected and proved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and duly certified by the governor of the State to the President according to the second section of the act, and was sold and conveyed among other parcels of land by the State to the defendants."

Whether this statement was true or not, it was made by the parties to the case, and on such a statement of facts it was held that the land and have been the state on the state and was not sold in accordance with the terms of the section of the act of 1846, the decision, it is believed, would have been the reverse. But the point upon which Wolcott particularly relied was that the land had been grant

Navigation Company and a grantee of the railroad company. It was sufficient for the decision in that case to hold, as was held in the Wolcott case, that the railroad company took no title under the act of 1856. In this case the settlers were not notified to intervene, but only the railroad companies claiming title under the act of 1856. (Page 151.)

The case of Riley vs. Wells was decided upon the ground that the land at the time the pre-emption was sought to be made was not liable to pre-emption; and the court followed the Wolcott case in deciding this.

The answer of Hannah Riley (page 10, case of Riley vs. Wells) avers that she entered upon the land in the year 1854, and that she had held and had possession of the land by virtue of her right as pre-emptor and her patent more than ten years prior to the commencement of suit; that is, to the 1st day of February, 1859. She was beaten in the court below and the decree confirmed in the Supreme Court.

The Homestead Company vs. The Valley Railroad Company (17 Wall., 162, 163) was a contest between the grantee of the railway companies and the Valley Railroad, the Homestead Company claiming under the land grant of 1856, the Valley Railroad Company claiming under the act of July 12, 1864, the adjustment by the State May 21, 1866, and confirmed by the State on the 3ist of March, 1871.

Again, it is held that the railroad companies took no title under the act of 1856. The court say:

"It is admitted in the record that the State has conveyed to the Des Moines Val."

Congress on the 3d of March, 1871.

Again, it is held that the railroad companies took no title under the act of 1856. The court say:

"It is admitted in the record that the State has conveyed to the Des Moines Valley Railroad Company, one of the defendants to this suit, for good and valuable considerations performed by the company, all the land received by the State under the act in question July 12, 1852, except those only which had been conveyed by the State under the act in August 8, 1846, and the legislation pursuant thereto."

It was held that the railroad companies had no right to the indemnity lands provided for under the act of July 12, 1862, as they never had any title which proved invalid. It is also held that the certificate of the Secretary of the Interior, under the act of July, 1862, was not sufficient to pass a valid title to the State, but that further legislation was necessary. That the State of Iowa, having made an adjustment and ratified it, the act not only ratified the adjustment, but granted all the lands passing under the act of July 12, 1862, to the Valley Road, and that Congress, with full knowledge that the Legislature had parted with the land to the Valley Road, chose to confirm the title to the State and its grantees. That Congress had full power to grant the lands in place and the indemnity lands to be selected by the State to the Valley Railroad Company.

The settlers upon the 297,000 acres, conceded by the State to belong to the United States, or its grantees, were not parties to this suit. The case of Crilley vs. Burrows was decided at the same time adversely to Crilley, on the ground, as stated by Judge Davis, that it was "in no essential respect different from the preceding case."

The effect of the adjustment of 1866, so far as it relates to the rights of the Des rows was decided at the same time adversely to Crilley, on the ground, as stated by Judge Davis, that it was "in no essential respect different from the preceding case."

The effect of the adjustment of 1866, so far as it relates to the rights of the Des Moines Navigation Company, or the rights of the settlers upon the public lands, has not been brought directly before the Supreme Court of the United States.

That act was approved March 3, 1871, and roads as follows:

"That the title to the land certified to the State of Iowa by the Commissioner of the General Land Office under an act of Congress entitled 'An act confirming a land claim in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes,' approved July 12, 1862, in accordance with the adjustment made by the authorized agent of the State of Iowa and the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the 21st day of May, A. D. 1866, and which adjustment was ratified and confirmed by act of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, approved March 31, 1868, be, and the same is hereby, ratified and confirmed to the State of Iowa and its grantees, in accordance with said adjustment and said act of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, approved March 31, 1868, be, and the same is hereby, ratified and confirmed to the State of Iowa and its grantees, in accordance with said adjustment and said act of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa; Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to affect adversely any existing legal rights, or the rights of any party claiming title, or the right to acquire title to any part of said lands under the provisions of the so-called homestead or pre-emption laws of the United States, or claiming any part thereof as swamp lands."

It will be observed that the rights of settlers are protected in this act.

The settlement and adjustment of the grant of July 12, 1862, was conclusive upon the State of Iowa and its grantees, and no lands passed to the State except those certified under this adjustment. It must be construed in co

"In all cases, therefore, when it is sought to apply the estoppel of a judgment rendered upon one cause of action to matters arising in a suit upon a different cause of action, the inquiry must always be as to the point or question actually litigated and determined in the original action, not what might have been thus litigated and determined. Only upon such matters is the judgment conclusive in another action." (Cromwell vs. County of Sac, 4 Otto, 353.)

It was stated in the argument before the committee that the persons who claim to be bona fide purchasers of the Navigation Company bought bonds of the Navigation Company which were secured by mortgage on these lands, and that they exchanged these bonds for the lands.

The mortgage was executed August 27, 1855, to Daniel B. St. John to secure the payment of bonds to be issued thereafter. The purchasers of the bonds had full notice that the certificate of Secretary Stuart was null and void under the acts of 1846 and August 3, 1854, and that they were not entitled to receive these lands.

The Navigation Company had no legal title that could be the subject of mortgage.

gage.
The contract was not a sale. (Des Moines Nav. Co. vs. County of Polk, 10 Iowa,

The contract was not a sale. (Des Moines Nav. Co. vs. Could.)

The title of the grantees of the Navigation Company is not strengthened by the fact that the lands were mortgaged to secure the bonds they bought. (See Leavenworth, &c., R. R. Co. vs. U. S., 2 Otto, 753.)

When an act granting railroad lands "made the construction of portions of the road a condition-precedent to a conveyance of any other parcel by the State," held: "No conveyance in disregard of this condition could pass any title to the company." (Farnsworth et al. vs. Minn. & Pac. R. R. Co., 2 Otto, 65; Cedar Rapids & Missouri R. R. Co. vs. County of Sac, 45 lows, 244-247; Miller vs. Corbin, 46 lows, 152.)

If the bill is passed, it will become the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to bring suits in the name of the United States to test the title of persons claiming under the State.

If the courts decide the Navigation Company has no title under the joint resolution of 1861, or the act of 1862, the Government can confertitle on the settlers even where the former patents have been canceled. Where they have not been canceled, or where the parties hold pre-emption or homestead certificates, the settlers can intervene and have the void title of the Navigation Company set aside as a cloud upon their title.

Settlers are being driven from their homes on the very lands for which the Government gave the indemnity, and the beautiful valley of the Des Moines for many years has been cursed with insecurity of land-titles more damaging than locusts or perpetual mildew. Something must be done to restore prosperity, peace, and contentment, and it is believed this measure furnishes the only remedy. Heretofore measures intended for the relief of this worthy class have been turned against them, working evil continually. If the Navigation Company, (which has, it is believed, already received much more than it ever expended on the improvement,) or its privies, without fraud, have vested rights, Congress has no power to disturb them. If otherwise, and the settlers or the Government have the superior equity, as your committee believe they have, this measure will restore prosperity and happiness to the unhappy settlers, and in any event it will be a settlement of this vexed question and bring peace; and your committee, with great unanimity, recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I now demand the reading of the report of the minority of the Committee on Public Lands upon this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to reading the re-

Mr. REAGAN and others objected.
Mr. BROWNE, (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) I move that the House now adjourn, so that we may have an opportunity to become familiar with these reports.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS called for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I make the point that no quorum has voted, and onsequently no business can proceed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. A quorum is not necessary on a motion to adjourn.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I am aware of that; but on proceeding to other business a quorum is necessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the reading of the

Mr. REAGAN. I object. It is in the nature of debate.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I rise to a point of order. My point is that the objection to the reading of the minority report comes too late. The reading of these reports has been declared in order by the

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker of the House decided that the reading of the report of the committee might be demanded by any member; and it has been so held by the present occupant of the chair in the absence of the Speaker. But the Chair is of opinion that if objection is made to the reading of the minority report, or rather the views of the minority, the reading cannot be had unless the House shall so order. Strictly speaking, there is no such thing as a minority report; it is simply the expression of the views of the minority.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair; and on that I want to be heard.

Mr. REAGAN. The question is not debatable.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I make the point that no quorum has voted. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. CONVERSE. I suppose that debate will be demanded under the rules; and I yield seven minutes of my time to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Carpenter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point is raised that no quorum has voted. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from New York, Mr. Van Voorhis, and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Converse. The question is upon the motion to lay on the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 152, noes none. So the appeal was laid on the table.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move that the House now adjourn. Mr. KEIFER. I make the point that the motion to adjourn is not now in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so holds, Mr. CONVERSE. I call for the question on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on seconding the mo-tion for a suspension of the rules.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Does the Chair hold that a motion to adjourn is not in order

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the ruling of the Chair. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. CONVERSE, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. VAN VOORHIS, will take their places as tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PRESCOTT. I claim.—

Mr. WEAVER. I object to the reading.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I claim, Mr. Speaker, that where this House permits a minority report to be made, to be brought into the House, it becomes a report of the House, and, as such, we are entitled to have it read. I appeal to the sound judgment and fair reason of every member of the House to permit the minority report to be read at this time. at this time.

Mr. PRESCOTT. I before demanded the reading of this report as a right. I now make a motion for the reading.

A MEMBER. It is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proposition to have the minority report read is not in order, because it has been objected to, and the question has been decided by the House. Those in favor of seconding the motion to suspend the rules will now pass between the tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 147, noes 4. So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Converse] to open the debate upon the motion to suspend the rules.

to suspend the rules.

Mr. CONVERSE. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CARPENTER] in whose district the lands here in question

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there can be no valid objection to the passage of this bill. It is simply in its nature and in its essence a proposition to settle land titles which for thirtyfour years have been in dispute in the State of Iowa. The difficulty arises entirely from an erroneous construction originally put upon a land grant made for the purpose of aiding the improvement of the Des Moines River.

Des Moines River.

The point involved is simply this: the law provided in its first section that one equal moiety of the lands on either side of the Des Moines River in a strip five miles in width shall be given and granted for the purpose of aiding in the improvement of that river from its mouth to Racoon Fork. Now, the Racoon Fork is midway between the mouth of the river and the north line of the State. This law was so inartistically drawn, there was such ambiguity in that first section, that in the first ten years of its existence upon the statute-book out of five Commissioners of the General Land Office three decided the grant of lands was co-extensive with the improvement which it proposed to aid, and the other two decided that the grant extended to the north line of the State. And three Secretaries of the Interior and one Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Walker, who was Secretary of the Treasury at the time the grant was made—the Land Office being then a bureau of the Treasury Department—out of these four Secretaries who had to do with these lands two of them decided the grant was co-extensive with the improvement, that is, that it extended to Raccoon Fork, and the remaining two that the grant extended to the north co-extensive with the improvement, that is, that it extended to Raccoon Fork, and the remaining two that the grant extended to the north line of the State. And furthermore, out of three Attorneys-General who gave opinions on this question, two of them, Attorney-General Black and Attorney-General Crittenden, gave the opinion that the grant extended to the Raccoon Fork, and one of them, Attorney-General Cushing, decided the grant extended to the north line of the State. I have given you these facts to show how this confusion in respect to the question arose, and to show you, furthermore, how inartistically the question arose, and to show you, furthermore, how inartistically and with what ambiguity the first section of the law was drawn.

Finally, sir, in 1860, the Supreme Court of the United States decided the grant was limited to Raccoon Fork. From that time, and before even some of these settlers had gone on these lands, every body believed the question was settled, and that the lands above Raccoon Fork, between that and the northern line of the State, were Governmentlands; and accordingly settlers went upon them, made their locations, established their improvements, built their houses, lived there, and are living there to-day, many of them having expended many thousands of dollars in improvements, believing they had good title

Two years after this decision was made Congress extended the grant to the northern line of the State, and under a subsequent decision of the Supreme Court it was held in a suit between two corporations, one a land grant railroad company, that they could not acquire title to these lands, as they were a reservation. It was held that the Dubuque and Pacific Railroad Company, which had brought suit, holding it had received title to these lands, had no title to them whatever, because it was a reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

[Cries of "Go on."]

Mr. SAPP. I have three minutes, and I will yield my time to my

Mr. PRESCOTT. We do not object, if it be the understanding that the other side shall also receive additional time.

Mr. SAPP. I yield to my colleague my three minutes.

Mr. CARPENTER. One word more I should add, and that is this, that in these suits which have come before the Supreme Court of the united States the questions in dispute have been between different corporations—between the Navigation Company, so called, which came into possession of these lands in the way you have heard in the different reports which have been read, and cross-railroad companies running east and west across the State. All the questions which have come before the court have been between these corporations under grants-from the United States Government of lands. This bill simply come before the court have been between these corporations under grants-from the United States Government of lands. This bill simply provides that these settlers shall be placed in the court of the United States, and moreover because the United States Government through its authorized agents, through the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Browning, through its Commissioner of the General Land Office, and through the local land office in the Des Moines Valley, invited these settlers to go upon these lands, and gave them certificates of preemption and homestead—it provides further, I say, because the Government of the United States did really invite these settlers to go upon these lands, that the Government itself shall go into court alongside of them; that it shall go into court by its Attorney-General with them, and assert this title which it sold to these men, and for which, as is shown by the report I hold in my hand, many of them—from three to four hundred of them—not only hold certificates of entry, but patents from the United States Government.

If I had time, Mr. Speaker, I should like to go into detail in reference to this matter, and if there be no objection I should like to have read the petition of the Legislature of the State of Iowa, passed almost unanimously by the senate and house of representatives of that State, and which has been sent here with the broad seal of the State, asking the passage of this very bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CARPENTER. I ask if there be no objection the petition be printed.

printed.

The petition is as follows:

The petition is as follows:

Whereas by an act of Congress of August 8, 1845, a grant of land was made to the then Territory of Iowa, to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River, from its mouth to the Raccoon Fork; and

Whereas on the 9th day of June, 1854, the State of Iowa contracted with a corporation known as the Des Moines Navigation and Rallroad Company to complete the work then begun by the State as provided by said grant, and to be done for the lands granted thereby, without liability of the State; and

Whereas the State, in 1858, for the purpose of a settlement with said corporation, made a deed to the said company of what title the State then had to certain lands therein described north of the Raccoon Fork; and

Whereas by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States at the December term, 1859, between the Dubuque and Sloux City Rallroad Company and Edwin C. Litchheld, it was decided that said grant did not extend above the Raccoon Fork, and that the certificates issued by the Land Department to the State for said lands were void, and that the said company had no title whatever to the lands claimed by them above said Raccoon Fork; and

Whereas by the joint resolution of Congress of March 2, 1801, all the remaining interest in said lands above said Raccoon Fork so erroneously certified was released to the bona fide holders of the patents of the State, and by the act of Congress of July 12, 1862, said grant of 1846 was extended so as to include the odd-numbered sections lying within five miles of said river between the Raccoon Fork and the north line of the State of Iowa; and

Whereas numerous settlers entered upon the said lands lying north of the Raccoon Fork at various times, some of them as early as 1854, believing them to be Government lands open to settlement under the pre-emption and homestead laws of the United States, and have made valuable improvements thereon with a view to titimate perfection of their title, many of whom have long held possession from the Unit and of the United States relating to the title to said lands, improvement thereon, &c.; and
